We trust that we shall be acquitted of rudeness if we venture to offer a suggestion to some of our Tokyo contemporaries. It relates to their comments on co-operative enterprises by Japanese and foreigners in this country. While claiming to be desirous of welcoming and assisting these undertakings, the journals to which we allude do not hesitate to comment on their work in a manner calculated to give great offence. We had reason to speak of this matter recently in the case of the Hydro-Electric Company, when a leading Japanese journal opened its columns to criticisms highly injurious not alone to the business capacities of the promoters but also to the professional competence of the eminent English and American engineers engaged to make the preliminary surveys. Now again a second instance is furnished. A certain company consisting of Japanese and foreign shareholders is accused of engaging so many employees at such high salaries that a profitable result was out of the question from the first. It must be frankly confessed that in foreign opinion such a criticism seems scarcely suited to Japanese mouths, for if there be one defect conspicuous and frequent in Japanese businesses it is the use of an excessive staff of employees. That, however, may be regarded as a mere tu quoque, whereas our point is that foreign projectors are very unlikely to commit such a blunder, and that if their methods of organization are to be publicly subjected to ill-advised and ill-considered criticisms, their disposition to bring their money here and to help in the development of the country will be damped. We are not claiming any altruism for them. If they come to Japan, they do so in their own interests. But it is impossible for them to achieve any success here without correspondingly benefiting the Japanese and Japan. Therefore they should be encouraged, not deterred. Does not this reasoning commend itself to Japanese intelligence?

THE WEATHER.

On the 16th inst. a typhoon was reported to be raging in Formosa but as the wires are interrupted no certain intelligence can be obtained. Meanwhile violent thunder storms are evidently cruising about. On the 15th inst. one of these phenomena visited Mito. Thunder bolts fell in many places, killing one person, injuring one and causing several conflagrations. So far as dates are concerned, this storm would seem to be identical with the one which broke over Tokyo during the night of the 16th.

The Formosa centre of depression, which was moving at first in a north-westerly direction, is said to have now changed its course to the north, so that it will strike the Korean coast and pass up the Sea of Japan, probably without visiting these Islands seriously.

The Formosa centre of depression is still lingering undecided as to its ultimate course, and the Riukiu Islands are suffering severely at its hands. It may come to Japan, but the indications at present are to the contrary. Meanwhile there is a supplementary centre of depression in the Shinano district, and to it are to be attributed the bursts of thunder and rain which are now experienced in central and northern Japan.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The trial of the crew of the Miyi Maru, that is to say of those who were sent to Vladivostok, has ended in their complete acquittal and in the release of the ship with all its appurtenances. Of course this judgment does not affect the six men who are lying at Nicolaïsk under sentence of death.

The Tokyo police have made a very successful raid against publishers of immoral literature and pictures. No less than 23 arrests of booksellers were simultaneously effected on the 13th inst. and a vast quantity of photographic negatives, wood blocks and printing material were seized. The preliminaries to this important step seem to have been successfully kept secret, and it is believed that the coup made by the police has been of a most thorough and far-reaching character. For a long time the publication and sale of pornographic pictures and literature were carried on so privately and adroitly that the police were baffled, but of late the corruptors of public morality, emboldened by the immunity they enjoyed and incited by the large gains which accrued, have been taking less care to shroud their corrupt practices. They have started a cry of the doctrine of naturalism (shisen shugi), and thus sought to blunt the moral sentiment of their victims. It is hoped and believed that the vigorous measures now taken by the police will largely check an abuse which at one time threatened to attain quite serious dimensions.

One of the cases which occupied a great deal of the House of Representatives' attention in its early days was that of Mr. Takano Takenori, Chief Justice of the Appeal Court in Formosa. Having been removed from office by order of the Viceroy, Mr. Takano and his friends pleaded that the rights secured to the Judiciary by the Constitution had been flagrantly violated, and the question was vehemently taken up by a section of the press and of the House. For some years public interest was kept alive in the matter, since many people refused to be persuaded that the administrative independence granted to Formosa could be extended to the realm of the Judiciary. Thereafter Mr. Takano and his affairs passed out of sight, but attention has now again been attracted to him in a disagreeable manner. He has been arrested on some charge which is not yet known, but which is generally supposed to be fraud. Tokyo journals allege that he has been freely exploited by promoters of Companies, and that some irregularity has resulted either with or without his cognisance. At all events he is now in prison, and the police have searched his house.

The Russian Government is said to have taken an exceptionally friendly step. It has issued orders to the local authorities in Kamchatka to abstain in future from seizing Japanese vessels suspected of poaching in Russian territorial waters. This measure is an indirect outcome of the Miyi Maru affair, which the Russian authorities evidently viewed with as much regret as the Japanese. We have only the authority of the telegraph for this intelligence, but if St. Petersburg has really taken such action, it may probably be construed as a clear indication that Japan is about to join the Russo-Anglo-American League for the protection of fishing grounds in the western Pacific. That step would be eminently wise. It would put an end to many causes of friction between Russia and Japan, and would impose upon the latter Power the responsibility of limiting its subjects to legitimate fishing operations.

Tokyo journals unite in saying that the time has fully come for adopting some drastic measures to control the movement of Japanese fishing schooners in northern waters. It is stated that the number of these vessels has increased largely of late, and that no less than 300 of them are now in the neighbourhood of Alaska. Including the Miyi Maru and the two schooners recently captured by American cruisers, 11 vessels altogether have been deprived of their certificates owing to suspicious acts. The authorities of the United States and of Russia are both said to have issued stringent orders to their preventive vessels with regard to these schooners, and it is evident that if such a state of things be left unchecked, unpleasant complications may at any moment arise. Apart, therefore, from the question of protecting the seals, there is the graver question of protecting international relations, and we gather from the Japanese papers that the expediency of joining the Behring Sea Convention is now fully recognised.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, August 14.

We read in the Asahi Shimbun that the China-Japan S.S. Company has made sweeping changes for economical reasons. Out of 43 foreigners serving on board its steamers, it has dispensed with 42, retaining only Capt. Scott, and it has made corresponding reductions in its shore staff. This policy is dictated by the fact that owing to recent inundations and storms the trade of the Yangtze valley is thought to be on the eve of a period of serious depression.

There still continues to be a great deal of talk about improvements in the organisation and working of the Tokyo Railway Company, but we cannot gather that anything is contemplated which does not fall within the ordinary category of business efficiency. The Company hopes to have 150 miles of track open by the year of the great Exhibition, but we imagine that the shareholders will have something to say against extensions which have the effect merely of reducing the profits. The uniform-fare system has been fully tried and found wanting and any attempt to maintain it seems likely to add to the Company's embarrassment.

The Niroku Shimbun believes that there will be a reduction of the market rate of interest at the end of this month, as there are various indications that the monetary situation is growing easier.

Saturday, August 15.

The Representation compiled by delegates for the five Clearing Houses has been presented to the Minister of Finance through the Vice-Minister. We have already published the details of this Representation, and it only remains to note the growth of an impression that the Government will comply with the desire of the memorialists, not indeed to the full extent, but at all events so far as to increase to 50 million yen annually the appropriation for the Debts Redemption Fund.

Mr. Matsuoka, a managing director of the Tokyo Stock Exchange, is quoted by the Niroku Shimbun as saying that speculators are tired of being influenced by rumours of the Treasury's doings. They will now wait for actual facts, but if, as is gradually becoming to be believed, a substantial increase be made in the fund appropriated for the redemption of the National Debts, there will be an immediate and signal appreciation in the share market.

Sunday, August 16.

The Asahi Shimbun has a long article on the Tokyo Railway, the gist of which is that the idea of raising the fare has been abandoned. The reasons assigned for this strange result are that the present Minister of Home Affairs, Baron Hirata, being a theorist of the German school, cannot be induced to lend an ear to practical affairs, and that the Prime Minister is not disposed to sanction a step which would be unpopular with the citizens of Tokyo. These extraordinary reasons are gravely advanced by our contemporary, but whether they are intended as actual news or only to bring the Cabinet into discredit, we can not discern. The Asahi affirms that the directors have resigned themselves to failure in this respect, and are now taking steps to effect economies and reforms. One of these steps will be to abolish a considerable portion of the round-the-moat line and to apply for permission to give up the construction of some 60 miles of suburban lines which are included in the original programme. By these steps the Company hopes to be able to continue paying a 7 per cent. dividend. The Nippon more or less confirms the above in general terms, for it says that no application for increased fares will be made until the result of reforms and economies now in progress is known. This would mean a delay of at least six months, and if the Company aims at nothing better than a 7 per cent. dividend, it is evident that the City will get nothing at all.

There is a report (Nippon Shimbun) that the three principal sugar-refining companies of Japan are about to combine for the purpose of obtaining a subsidy to enable them to compete successfully in the markets of China. We consider this very doubtful.

There is said to be a project, which originated with the former Minister of Finance, Mr. Matsuda, for planting camphor trees along the lines of railways throughout the Empire. It is calculated that at least 2500 miles would be available for the purpose, and that not only would a very large revenue be thus obtained, but also travelling by rail would become more popular.

Monday, August 17.

Lieut.-General Nakamura, Superintendent of the Wakamatsu Foundry, is now in Tokyo. He is quoted as saying that, so far as technical skill is concerned, things are progressing very favourably. The Foundry employs about 8,500 hands and they are steadily developing efficiency and co-operative ability. The Foundry is at present engaged forging materials for two line-of-battleships. This work has been nearly completed, and a quantity of rails also are on hand. But owing to the exceeding cheapness of all iron articles throughout the world at present the Foundry finds great difficulty in making ends meet.

The Chuo Shimbun writes about the Railway question. It believes that the Cabinet has virtually decided to deal with this problem on the same lines as those contemplated by the Saionji Cabinet, that is to say, the nationalised railways will be placed in a special account; the profits derived from them will be devoted wholly to improvements and extensions, and since there is to be no floating of bonds, the Treasury will make good any deficiency that may result in the legally fixed programme. The programme, however, calls for an expenditure of 30 million yen next fiscal year, and it is obvious that the Treasury cannot put its hand into its pocket to the extent of the difference between that sum and the net profit (6 millions) annually derived from the railways. Of course it is understood that any accommodation given by the Treasury on account of the improvement or extension of railways is to be only temporary. It will have to be paid back ultimately out of the profits of the lines.

The Chuo Shimbun quotes Mr. Inouye, one of the directors of the Tokyo Railway Company, as saying in effect that there will be no attempt to raise the fares for two or three years. The Company is vigorously engaged at present in adjusting its affairs. It has done everything possible in the way of reducing its staff. The duties of the head office are now discharged by 120 men, whereas at the time of the amalgamation there were over 180. The outdoor staff of the Company aggregates more than 5,000, and far from being reducible, it has to be added to weekly. The number of cars daily employed is about 700, which has to be increased to 800 or 850 on Sundays. The quantity of electricity used daily is approximately 8,000 kilo., each car requiring about 3 yen worth of power per diem. This includes some 8,000 electric lights which the Company is supplying to the citizens, and it has orders for many more. At present there are 103 miles of line open and work is being vigorously pushed on various extensions. In fact, in every direction, expenditures are increasing, and the great question is whether a corresponding increment of earnings can be anticipated.

Tuesday, August 18.

The affairs of the Japanese cotton spinners companies are not on the upward grade. It will be remembered that last spring the companies decided unanimously to reduce their production by 27½ per cent. from the 1st of May to the 31st of October. This reduction has not proved sufficient, and a meeting is to be held on the 24th inst. when a proposition will be considered for still further reducing the production by a total of 40 per cent. This will mean the complete cessation of night work. The proximate cause is loss of the Chinese market. During the prevalence of the plague in India the Japanese companies were able to compete successfully with the Bombay yarns, but apparently the latter have now gained the upper hand, and in view of this fact, supplemented by the depreciation of silver, the companies think it wise to maintain prices by catering for the domestic market only. Their present production is 960,000 bales of yarn yearly, out of which total 360 bales are sent to the Continent and 600,000 are sold at home. According to the project now contemplated, the total production will be reduced to 576,000 bales, and the export will practically cease. This is an unfortunate situation from the Japanese point of view, not only because of its direct effect upon the cotton spinning industry of this country, but also because it will unfavourably influence the balance of trade.

The East Asia Flour Manufacturing Company met on the 17th inst. to consider the report of the liquidation committee previously appointed. The proceedings proved very noisy. When the Committee attempted to present its report some members objected to the document in toto and declared that one of the directors, Mr. Moroi, had made away with 360,000 yen of the Company's capital, which defalcation the Committee's report was intended to conceal. Considering that the paid-up capital of the Company is only half a million yen, the loss of such a sum as 360,000 would be overwhelming. In these circumstances the meeting, after much noise and recrimination, broke up without coming to any decision. It appears that Mr. Moroi is missing.

The Eastern Section of the Shipowners Union held a meeting on the 16th inst. and decided that in view of the depression now existing in the maritime carrying trade, ship-owners should enter into a combination to charge fixed prices for the transport of certain goods, and while, on the one hand, forming a trust for that purpose, should endeavour, on the other, to cut down the number of their employees and reduce their expenses to the lowest possible figure.

The record of monies collected by the Tokyo Water Works Office during the past three years is as follows:—

	Yen.
1903 .....	651,362
1904 .....	673,115
1905 .....	797,806
1906 .....	861,279
1907 .....	896,961

There is now talk of increasing the rates for private persons by 20 per cent, in order to assist in meeting the city's growing want of funds. We read in Tokyo journals that the yield of the Water Works for the current year was estimated at yen 833,853.

Wednesday, August 19.

The Cabinet's intentions with regard to financial entrenchment are said to have found much favour in London. It so happens that Baron Sakatani is now in the English capital and he has been enabled to offer explanations which have helped to popularize the Ministry's programme.

We read in the Asahi Shimbun that Messrs. Lane, Crawford and Co. contemplate establishing a genuine departmental store in Tokyo. Everybody acquainted with the capital of Japan during recent years must have watched with admiration and pleasure the development of such handsome stores as those of the Mitsukoshi, the Shirokiya, the Daimaru, and the Matsuya. These places represent an immense step of progress and constitute one of the modern attractions of the City. It would be exceedingly interesting if a great foreign firm like Messrs. Lane, Crawford & Co., now stepped into the field. There would be much difficulty, we imagine, in naming any institution which has obtained more absolute and universal confidence than Messrs. Lane, Crawford & Co. during the past 50 years. To purchase at their store is to be sure of getting a good article and experiencing straightforward treatment. If they open a departmental store in Tokyo, they will certainly receive a hearty welcome. We observe that, according to Tokyo journals, there are symptoms of a preliminary skirmish. The friends of the English firm are represented as inclined to disparage the thoroughness of Japanese effort in this direction, and the partisans of the Japanese stores predict that except on a combined foundation of Japanese and foreigners nothing really stable can be erected.

The affairs of the East Asia Flour Manufacturing Company are now a subject of public discussion. The liquidation Committee offers certain explanations of their report, but the details have no special interest for our readers. We apprehend that an agreement of some sort will be reached.

We read in the Mainichi Dempo that whereas the sales of Japanese silk between the 1st of January and the 30th of June in 1907 aggregated only 68,665 boxes, the figure for the corresponding period this year was 980,380. In the early part of the year great uneasiness was felt because more than 40,000 boxes lay in Yokohama awaiting a market, but by degrees this stock was worked off until, by the time of the arrival of the new crop, only 10,000 boxes remained. Since then sales have been remarkably rapid: unprecedentedly so, indeed. But, according to our contemporary, cheapness has been the principal spur to foreign demand. Telegrams from America show that the old silk has only just been put into the mills and the new is still awaiting final transfer to the factories. There will probably be a slackening of operations at this end.

Thursday, August 20.

Mr. Fukuhara, representing the principal shareholders of the Tokyo Railway Company, points out that 42 or 43 years hence the Company will have to hand over its property gratis to the City, and that the formation of a fund to recoup the shareholders for the 60 millions of yen which they will by that time have expended upon the lines is essential. Does anybody think that a sufficient appropriation can be made yearly for that purpose in existing circumstances? It is all very well to talk about "adjusting" the Railway's affairs. Adjustment is a duty falling within the sphere of ordinary daily work, and there is no special occasion for it in this instance. If it be maintained that the directors have forfeited confidence, let thoroughly trustworthy men, like Baron Shibusawa, be invited to examine the affairs of the Company. The citizens of Tokyo are not unreasonable. They must recognise fully by this time that a uniform 4 sen fare is not workable, and if a thoroughly reliable statement of the Company's affairs were made known, no one would object to paying a reasonable price for a reasonable service.

With reference to the opening of the main trunk line of Formosa which is to take place at the end of October, certain details are published. Before the island came into Japan's possession, the Chinese Viceroy, Liu had carried out the construction—after a fashion—of 62 miles of line between Taipei and Kelung at a cost of 1,200,000 taels. Then, in 1899, the Japanese laid down a programme for building an additional 272 miles at a cost of 28,800,000 yen. This work has been accomplished at an outlay of 3,800,000 yen less than the original estimate and the surplus is to be applied to various improvements. The programme was to be completed in 9 years and it has been carried out to the letter. Since last year, too, the new roads have become profit-earning, their net income during the year having been 920,000 yen. As for branch-railways, a concession to build 450 miles has been granted to the Formosa Sugar Refining Company and 90 miles of that total have already been completed.

The Bank of Japan's note issues have now fallen within the legal limit, and the demand for money has sensibly decreased.

The Formosa centre of depression has taken its departure in the direction of China, and nothing at present menaces Japan. Optimistic views are now beginning to be taken of the rice harvest. It is predicted that the yield will be at least 10 per cent. above the average, which means a sum of 60 million yen put into the pockets of the farmers. The 1st of next month will be the critical 210th day.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Saturday, August 15.

The market relapsed on Friday into the state of dulness habitual of late. Virtually no business was done. The spinnings showed a little activity, but on the whole prices were merely maintained.

Monday, August 17.

Saturday was a very dull day on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. All prices declined, though not in a very marked degree.

The proximate cause of this is said to be that one or two of the big brokers who had been making extensive purchases of late, have now ceased operating. But the fact seems to be that the market is at the mercy of a few speculators and that it lacks alike stability and buoyancy.

Tuesday, August 18.

The market was tolerably brisk in the forenoon on Monday, but the afternoon witnessed a relapse owing to the receipt of news that silver had fallen to 23 1/2 ed., an extraordinarily low figure. Thus the two sessions practically balanced each other, and prices may be said to have remained stationary as compared with Saturday's figures.

Wednesday, August 19.

Tuesday witnessed something very like a debacle on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. The only ostensible cause was the prospect that the Spinning Companies will give up night work altogether and cater only for the domestic market. Their shares naturally fell and dragged all others down in their wake. This, however, scarcely accounts for the situation. There was a slight recovery of confidence in the afternoon session.

Thursday, August 20.

Wednesday's forenoon session was dull on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. The prospects of the cotton spinning industry are evidently causing anxiety and the market is correspondingly depressed. Some slight improvement was witnessed in the afternoon session, but in no case were the losses of Tuesday recovered.

Friday, August 21.

The market showed a slight upward tendency on the 20th instant. There seems to be an improvement in the general feeling, but it is not marked. We append the quotations for October delivery:—

AMATEUR DRAMATIC CLUB OF YOKOHAMA

An extraordinary general meeting of the Amateur Dramatic Club of Yokohama was held at 5.15 p.m. on Aug. 20th at the Board of Trade Rooms. Mr. E. Eddison was in the chair and there was a sufficient attendance.

It appeared from minutes of previous meetings that a sub-committee had been appointed to revise the rules and place them before a special general meeting.

The CHAIRMAN put the rules before the members, pointing out that drafts had been in their hands about a week and after some discussion they were adopted. Mr. Mollison called attention to Rule 11 and suggested that it would be unwise to tie the Committee's hands. Eventually on the motion of Mr. Lewis seconded by Mr. Mollison it was decided that the word "may" should be substituted for "must" in the rule. Certain alterations were suggested on Rules 5 and 6 with regard to the discussion of a play with persons not concerned therewith, and eventually with an amendment eliminating this clause the rules were carried.

FOREIGN CAPITAL.

THE Fiji Shimpō writes in a tone strongly critical of the Government's attitude towards the question of foreign capital. The text of the article is a speech made by the Chairman of the Anglo-Japanese Bank Company at the last general meeting. In explanation of the fact that the Bank has hitherto done very little business, the Chairman said that it had opened its doors during the boom of Japanese securities and business enterprise; a period when extreme caution was obviously necessary. Further, it had encountered unlooked for official competition at the hands of the Industrial Bank, which, under Government auspices, had suddenly acquired a species of monopoly in this particular field of operations. Our Tokyo contemporary dwells very strongly upon this latter point and censures the authorities for want of perception and forethought. The subject has by this time been worn a little threadbare. Undoubtedly it was a disappointment to certain foreign syndicates and financial agents that the Industrial Bank suddenly appeared in the field as a money-borrowing machine assured of official support. But, on the other hand, there were good reasons for the arrangement. Its prime purpose, as we understand the matter, was to create an agency which, while having access to the foreign market, on the one hand, would be able, on the other, to combine into one negotiable transaction the needs of various local corporations. These, though wanting money badly, wanted it in such small sums that no one of them could enter the market independently. Several corporations were labouring under the weight of debts contracted in the domestic market and carrying very high rates of interest, but they were deficient in some essential qualifications for approaching foreign capitalists direct, and the only way to relieve them was that an institution like the Industrial Bank should act as their representative. The arrangements made by the Bank for that purpose were excellent, and had it confined itself to such business, there would have been little to complain of. But the fact that it was entrusted with the duty of floating the South Manchuria Railway loan and the Tokyo city loan, without competition, unquestionably created a measure of bad feeling among foreign financiers. After all, however, when we come to answer the question, "would larger sums of foreign capital have found their way to Japan had not the Industrial Bank been in existence," we are disposed to reply in the negative. What the Bank has done could have been achieved otherwise, no doubt, though scarcely on better terms; but that what it has left undone would have been done in its absence may well be queried. The nationalization of the private railways proved probably a much greater obstacle to the inflow of capital. Several of the railway companies were practically in the market as borrowers. A great English financial firm had sent out an expert to examine and report upon the condition of the lines, and, after much labour, the laws had been changed so as to endow this kind of property with security qualifications satisfactory to foreign lenders. Then suddenly in the sequel of all this effort and preparation, the railways were acquired by the State, and the prospects of financing them disappeared. There can be little question that this incident exercised a very deterrent influence in Europe and America, as showing the impossibility of knowing what a day might not bring forth in Japan. But the strong probability is that the general financial situation of Japan has produced a much greater effect than any incidental factors of the above description. English investors have had Japanese securities offered to them in such volume and with such rapidity that something left a surfeit has resulted. The idea that the Japanese Government could float a hundred million sterling of bonds in Western markets during the space of a twelve-month would have been treated as an extravagant delusion in 1903. Yet the fact was accomplished in 1904 and 1905. These bonds have not yet been fully digested. They are only now beginning to find their way to countries like Austria and Italy, and considerable blocks of them still remain in the hands of the underwriters. The process of digestion has been appreciably retarded by the acute state of depression existing in Japan since the spring of 1907, and if the way is to be smoothed for a fresh inflow of foreign capital, it is essential that Japanese securities should emerge from the slough of depreciation into which they have fallen in the home market. The Bankers' programme of increased annual redemptions by the method of lot-drawing promises to be the saviour of the situation.

EDUCATION FOR FOREIGN CHILDREN IN JAPAN.

THE question of "primary education for the children of foreigners in Japan" is approached, we observe, by the Japan Advertiser with a sense of regret. That expression of sentiment, while hardly one wherewith to court success, is, nevertheless, an eloquent commentary on the history of the whole question. No open minded person, indeed, can dwell upon the matter without some suggestion of the kind.

For what, and why, should there be regret? Not, as our contemporary admits, on account of the men and women who with splendid self-sacrifice, devotion and public-spirit have grappled with the question for the last twenty years. Little does even the average parent know, and the public less, of the difficulties under which the work has been done.

The history of education in Yokohama, which, briefly, has been one of many attempts and nearly as many failures, may be said to date from the Jubilee year of the late Queen, when to commemorate the event, the Victoria School was founded—the first and only public attempt, up to the present time, to deal with the matter in a way at all commensurate with its importance. On that occasion the sum of 30,000 yen in all, we believe, was put up by the British community—and has left not a wrack behind. The Japan Advertiser believes that now, in a time of general commercial depression and monetary stringency, yen 500,000 could be raised for the purpose of setting things educational in Yokohama on a satisfactory footing. Our contemporary is sanguine.

Let us suppose, however, that the sum has been raised. Is the scheme in view to be an international one? Presumably not, for—apart from the extreme complexity and almost insuperable obstacles in the working of such a scheme—the French and German communities have already made provision for their nationals, with apparently, satisfaction to themselves. What our contemporary appears to have in view is an Anglo-American School or College. Why should not such an undertaking be carried out with at least the same degree of success as the French and German Schools?

If we look into the nature of these two undertakings, we see that the one has behind it a mission whose resources are well known to be extensive, while the other enjoys the practical assistance of a Government whose almost paternal care of its nationals abroad is proverbial.

Here, indeed (we may remark parenthetically) lies an object-lesson in sound common-sense for all, and for the Britisher in particular. It is the way of the German Government, with real insight into the essentials of things, to make provision for a school first and a church afterwards. The British and American communities have elegant churches, but no school. This disparagement of the claims of education, and the lack of appreciation it betrays of the lifelong and incalculable benefits of a good education, point to a state of mind the results of which are even now being felt in the world's race for power—for knowledge is power: they are being revealed (to come down to a concrete instance) in decreasing British trade returns.

The whole of a child's mental and physical equipment for the journey through life is its Education. Of this, religion is a part—a very important and, in our opinion, necessary part (though there are those who think that it is no part at all),—but it is only a part. Who would think of sending a child into the world with, as its sole supply, what it could get from Church or Sunday-school? Yet this is actually what the British and American communities in Yokohama are doing now. One handsome church already graces the skyline of the Bluff; another is about to do so—but there is no school.

To return to the proposal of an Anglo-American School—does the optimistic individual who fathers this suggestion realize to any extent the differences between the curricula of the elementary educational systems pursued in England and the United States respectively? Does he realize what an attempt to reconcile them involves?

To take a single instance, elementary education in America—i.e. for boys under fourteen, the age of admission to the High Schools—does not include such subjects as French, Latin, Geometry, Algebra, which an average English boy of 10 to 12 is expected to have begun. In the proposed institution, if the American system were followed, English boys would be kept back in their studies some two years—for a fair knowledge of Latin and Elementary Mathematics is required in the entrance examinations to English Public Schools. If, on the other hand, English standards were adopted, American parents might complain that their sons were being mentally injured by being pushed on too fast into "advanced" studies.

Turning to the question of History, it is a matter of general knowledge, we believe, that from a certain date in the eighteenth century, the histories of the two countries have little in common. Some American parents might, perhaps with reason, object to their children learning the doings of William the Conqueror, the Black Prince, or even the Tudor Sovereigns, while British parents might, equally, take exception to lessons on the history of the American Republic.

Then there is the question of orthography. Sundry differences in spelling exist between the English language proper and that variety of it which has vogue in the United States of America. For example, would the Japan Advertiser insist that English boys should be made to spell 'through' as thuri? These may appear to be points of minor importance, yet in actual practice they would be of daily recurrence.

But the greatest difficulty of all remains. If one enquires into the causes of the failure of the Victoria School twenty years ago, he would soon be forced to the opinion that the chief of them was of a social character. Would those parents who helped to bring that laudable attempt to nothing, by withdrawing their sons and sending them home for social reasons—or would their successors, do the same again? Are these prejudices of Yokohama clique and class dead, or not?

The conclusion of the whole matter, in our opinion, is this. The great difficulty lies not in the endowment, nor in the fees to be charged, nor even in differences of discipline and curricula—though all of these are knotty points in their way—but in the peculiar constitution of the community itself. Can petty differences and individual whims be sunk for the common good? Can the men of this set, and the women of that, co-operate together whole-heartedly in the same good cause? Then in the atmosphere of mingled enthusiasm and reasonableness which so wholesome a combination would create, the thing—bristling with difficulties though it be—can be done.

While therefore applauding the liberal attitude of mind in which this intricate subject has been approached, we feel bound to take into due consideration the obstacles in the way.

Indeed, when difficulties are clearly pointed out, and faced in the right spirit, they are apt to disappear. Let us hope it will be so in this case, and that the leading port of the Empire will yet have an educational institution worthy of the large and influential community it includes within its pale.

THE INSURRECTION IN KOREA.

IT is a familiar experience that even the most abandoned criminal does not lack some measure of sympathy when the supreme moment of punishment comes. Much more, then, is pity accorded to men who, like the present insurgents in Korea, believe that they are fighting for their country's independence, and lay down their lives in that sacred cause. From that general point of view we are entirely in accord with the North-China Daily News when it expresses a desire that some method, other than bullet and bayonet, may be found of dealing with these misguided men. At the same time there are certain facts which ought to be borne in mind. The first is that the Korean insurgents have given repeated proofs of shocking cruelty. They have not held their hand even when women and children were concerned, still less when they happened to come within striking distance of unarmed and unoffending Japanese civilians. It has been their rule to slaughter indiscriminately. We do not mean to suggest, of course, that they ought to be slaughtered indiscriminately in return. What we seek to make plain is that drastic measures are inevitable against such law-breakers in default of any other method of pacification. Our Shanghai contemporary seems to think that no conciliatory essay has been made, and that the Japanese have incontinently had recourse to the strong arm. It writes:—"We should like to see serious attempts made to parley with the misguided insurgents." But such attempts have been made repeatedly. On several occasions the Emperor of Korea has issued rescripts pointing out to the insurgents the unwisdom of their conduct and the futility of their resistance, and envoys have been sent to reason with them. A final effort was made a few months ago, when proclamations offered full pardon to any insurgent laying down his arms and making act of submission. Many availed themselves of this clemency, and only the obdurate now continue to resist. What more can be done in the way of conciliation? It is not as though the insurgents were regularly organized under acknowledged leaders. Then possibly steps might be taken, and probably would be taken, to "parley" with them. It would be out of the question, of course, to offer more than has already been offered. There could not be any concession in the matters for which these men have taken the field. Still, if their representatives were approachable, something might be done. As things stand, however, nothing of that kind appears to be possible. The insurgents are broken up into petty bands, scattered here and there through wide areas. They are not integrated at all, nor have they any generally acknowledged leaders. How could negotiations be opened with them? Meanwhile they keep the country in a constant ferment, and by inflicting serious injury on productive labour of all sorts, they cause much loss and suffering to their own fellow-subjects. We are reluctantly compelled to conclude that no weapon can be effective except a military one. The time seems to us to have come when leniency is no longer merciful, though we would gladly endorse any practical suggestion for averting from these misguided patriots the worst consequences of their rebellion. A word of protest must be set down, however. Is the Shanghai journal justified in speaking of the "depopulation of whole districts under the cloak of the suppression of insurrection"? Not alone is such a form of speech objectionable, but also the impression conveyed is very hyperbolic. Whole districts are not in process of depopulation. Nothing so drastic is going on, so far as can be ascertained, and so far as the officially published number of casualties show. It is well to be humane, but it is not ill to be just at the same time.

COUNT KOMURA.

Speaking at a banquet given in his honour at Changchun, Count Komura is reported as having recalled some of the incidents of the Portsmouth negotiations, especially the facts that while the Russian Plenipotentiary had insisted on handing over only the territory south of Changchun, he, Count Komura, had maintained that everything south of Harbin should be transferred, and whereas Count de Witte had proposed Kun-chuling as the southern boundary, Count Komura had asked for the Sungari River. A compromise had been the result, and it was profoundly gratifying to Count Komura to witness with his own eyes the progress that his countrymen were making in Manchuria as a result of the Treaty.

Mr. Heki, Counsellor of Embassy, who is also on his way home with Count Komura, spoke on the same occasion of the exceptional cordiality and friendliness shown by the Russian authorities towards Count Komura. The only discordant note had been sounded by one or two journals in St. Petersburg which noted that the new Japanese Cabinet consisted almost entirely of the men who had held office during the War, and that a bellicose policy might therefore be expected. This expression of apprehension had, however, fallen entirely flat.

It must be indeed satisfactory to Count Komura to visit the regions with whose destiny he was so largely connected, and to feel that his countrymen, having recovered from the momentary vertigo of discontent about an indemnity, now fully recognise the signal services rendered by him to Japan. He went to England by America to take up his duties as Ambassador in London, and his return via Russia is in itself significant, apart from the substantial evidences it has elicited as to the genuine restoration of friendly feelings between the sometime-foes.

A Moji telegram reports that the stocks of coal are large, the estimate being 450,000 tons. The price of the first quality fell by 8 sen.

AROUND PORT ARTHUR.

An early trip from Port Arthur was to Kinshu, the site of the Battle of Nanshan, May 26, 1904, where over 7,500 men, Russians and Japanese, shed their life's blood.

Mrs. W. of Tairen was to have her usual woman's meeting in the Yamen of the old Chinese walled city, the Yamen of many gates and courts from which the Chinese had been ousted by the Russians, who have left their mark of high brick stoves, chimneys and foreign furniture upon it. Now the Russians have given place to Japanese. The Christian governor of the province is now the occupant of the place where the meeting was to be.

I left Port Arthur at 8 a.m. by the South Manchurian R.R. Its cars might easily be mistaken for those of the impudent line in Ohio which years ago cruelly cut the old home demesne in two: so American are they. I was to meet Mrs. W. at the Junction, "Choushuizui" near Tairen. I was pacing the platform in the bracing air while waiting over half an hour. Freight cars had the familiar legends in large letters, Length 33' 54": Width 8' 34": Height 6' 10 1/2": Weight 30,000 lbs; Cap. 60,000 lbs. but for the moment I could not think what "Cap." stood for and asked one of the station hands but none of them knew. Though they knew some English it had not occurred to them apparently that they meant anything, but were inquiringly interested when I raised the subject, and remembered that "Cap." stood for capacity. I wondered what American young men would see such cars pass often every day for even one month without having questioned and learned that and all else about them.

A ride of about an hour brought us to the railway station of Kinshu, where we were met by kindly officials. Another ride of half an hour in a Chinese cart brought us to the old walled and gated city, the most important town in the Liaotung Peninsula, with 9,618 inhabitants.

I would remark in passing a first experience in a Chinese cart, that it is strong and well built, made to plough its way through storm, snow, dust, mud. Human flesh and blood and bones would form no sort of obstacles, even though they were piled as high as on 203 Meter Hill. I wonder these carts were not utilized as fortifications in the late war. One can imagine the wretchedness of a hopeless wounded soldier who was rescued at the price of a ride in one of them. I thought of a Russian officer, the original of a character in "As the Hagae Ordains" and his exquisite sufferings; brought to consciousness by painful bumping on one of them, after having been beaten to unconsciousness by the enemy.

After our tiffin an official was appointed to guide me on a walk upon the high wall around the town, from which we now saw the plain of the isthmus, though it was better seen a little later as the official on his horse and I on a mule left the gated town going out to the site of the battle, just south of the city a mile or so, where is a monument to Russian dead erected by Japanese, and two to Japanese, one of the latter being erected by the Chinese on the highest part of the hill. So charming a view is a memory for a life time. The sea of deepest azure blue, quiet as a summer day, stretching away to the east and west dotted with island mountains here and there. Mountains brown and red, some with a film of green to the south and at the north the same with an upland in the centre of the isthmus stretching up and away to who knows what wilds of Hungtutsu and whilom Cossacks. There was a high summer sun, but a fresh bracing breeze kept it from being too hot. It was hard to think the scene, all so peaceful and lovely, had been the hard fought battle ground in at least two wars; the summer's sun and peace effaced all thoughts of war, like "burnt out craters healed with snow." The place is the strategic point, the natural key to the Liaotung Peninsula from the north. Who knows what struggles it may have seen in the ages past? The last battle raged over the brown city of Kinshu from north to south, while the war ships that brought the Japanese were in the bay at the right. Poor beleaguered city and people who must escape from two alien races on their own soil!

The isthmus can scarcely be three miles wide, surely their only chances were at the north toward the barren hills and Hungtutsu. There could scarcely be a greater contrast to the battle one must imagine there, and the glorious peaceful summer afternoon; sunshine over the stately silent mountains and quiet valley, the waving green millet and brown city with the blue sea hugging close on either side. Beyond the city is the railroad with substantial brick station and picturesque water tower. The Manchurian Chinaman placidly at work in the fields now as he has been for ages. One wonders how he exists, the soil for lack of water will produce only millet and beans, though with water it seems capable of producing anything. Scarcely a tree to be seen on mountain and plain, save the few enlivening the enclosure of the brown walled city. The Japanese are planting trees, and their law provides that for every tree a Chinaman cuts down he shall plant one. The country produces no fuel save sparse grass, weeds and millet stalks, which are carefully preserved. How can they keep warm? How can man want so little here below? Will they ever learn to want more?

The summer suns, the winter winds, the Hungtutsu, the Russian and the Japanese with their battles come and go and the Chinaman unmoved goes on forever; no change effects him. He is a monument of endurance. To the hills away on the right the place occupied by the Japanese official staff is pointed out, from which the battle was directed, and this peaceful scene is about all there is to remind one of the frightful battle of Nanshan, fought only four years ago.

Compared to these the hill forts around Port Arthur were more suggestive and ghastly. On 203 Meter Hill and all others the ground still shows the frightful upheaval caused by shot, shell and explosives; scraps of iron and even one cartridge was picked up, for all the diligent hunting over the hill the Chinamen continue even yet. And bones, yes, unhappy, unresting bones keep cropping out. It sounds gruesome, but I picked up some from the Russian side of the hill, then wondered what I should do with them. "I'll take them to a good kind, considerate doctor I know in Japan, a mitoge in memory of his enemy, whom he so carefully tended in hospital, his students find them longer than Japanese bones." Then I thought better of it and decided to take them over to the beautiful new monument at the foot of Shoantuzan, to the Russian dead and stick them into some of the many mounds there of companion bones, as more in accordance with the Japanese thought for his enemy, and humanity in general. The day before our visit to 203 Meter Hill a skull and bones were exhumed where they were arranging a permanent foundation for a broken cannon relic, where the struggle had been wild and fierce. This was Japanese, a quarter of the cranium was gone, but some of its original moist contents were yet inside. The Japanese woman with me, she who had slyly thrown cakes and fruit over a temple wall to Russian prisoners in Japan, and cooked food for them, crouched down over it, taking up a mournful lament, "Who were you, who and where are your relatives and friends. You suffered and died for your country! Ah!" and the chant ended in a groan.

Remains of the tremendous fortifications of cement, concrete, stone and brick, are yet to be seen on North Fort adjoining East Keikwanzan, Shozuzan, Niruzan or Urlangshan and other places. We went into the long corridor of a caponiere on North Fort seeing where Japanese sappers had touched the outside from their trenches, and the havoc made by the explosion. At Shozuzan we made a longer underground trip, more fearsome yet and up a slippery flight of solid stairs in the dark, and shuddered as we came out into God's peaceful sunlight again in pity for the poor wretches who spent nights and days and weeks in these lower regions, and the "Human Bullets" thrown against them.

Golden Hill, Tiger's Tail, Rotetsuzan and Laotishan, all facing the sea, are yet garrisoned forts, and access is no easier now than it would be in time of war, though foreign engineers are at work on Laotishan on the mines, some of their party coming recently by way of Siberia and some by way of America. They all reached Tairen within half an hour of each other. I have not yet visited the Stoessel and Kurojatskin forts or the town of Suishunling, the place of Russia's and Stoessel's humiliations. A visit to the Museum in Old Town is one of the first and very interesting things to be done on visiting Port Arthur.

Relics of Russian warfare of every conceivable and inconceivable description are there, from a lady's dancing slipper and side saddle to heavy cannon and wire entanglements, range finders and models of several forts. To me about the most interesting things there were Russian swords, many of ancient and medieval pattern, doubtless priceless heirlooms in some old Russian families; it is almost a pity they are not returned to Russia, though what soldier would care for a sword after it had been surrendered!

The silver garlands and wreaths of flowers sent by the Tzar and Tzarina and others for the dedication of the beautiful monument to Russian dead, are there, as they were not safe left at the monument, and will probably soon be put on exhibition.

The Russian Church in Old Town is now used by the Y. M. C. A. A preaching service is held there every Sunday, once or twice a day, and a Sunday School. The old Amur still lies in dry dock down in front of the Admiralty, the former residence of Alexieff. A scant line of gigantic geese waddle the street, screeching, in New Town, night and morning beyond the Stoessel residence, perhaps the relics of Madam Stoessel's flock. "Sic transit gloria mundi!" After her baptism of blood, what does the future hold in store for Port Arthur? In two short years, hundreds of thousands, the flower of two nations, gave up their lives for their country, while the world was paralyzed with horror; but in Russia, in Japan, in America, in every country of Europe, decade upon decade, every year, hundreds of thousands of the flower of each land have been slain by the monster Alcohol, throwing their lives away for not even a "forlorn hope;" a more awful waste than war!

On the top of every fort I've visited here in Port Arthur there were bottles, bottles every where, old broken bottles and new fresher bottles. There are those who say that Russia was conquered because of vodka, that Russian officers here in Port Arthur drank several bottles a day of wine which cost forty-five roubles a bottle, regardless of the needs of the common soldier. The bottles I have seen bear Japanese labels, and Japan will ere long see that she has a worse enemy to fight than Russia which is even now silently slaying not only old and middle aged, but her youth, the hope of the land. Men and officers who were brave as lions against this Russian foe and keen on the scent for danger, are like cowards and blind before the social glass. Professing patriotism and love of country, they shorten their life of service to her, and die for alcohol!

We call China the weakest of nations, but what other nation has shown the moral strength to make the effort to throw off the yoke of appetite, as she is now doing?

The rainy season in Port Arthur this year is a farce thus far; the mercury in my covered south side verandah ranges from 77° to 80°, 83° and three or four times to 86° Fah. Who wants a cooler summer climate? Who could describe these glorious sunsets, the long twilight and after glow over these green hills, all fit for the Heavenly city?

THE WEST JAPAN PRESBYTERIAN MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING AT KARUIZAWA.

The annual meeting of the West Japan Mission of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. was held in Karuizawa at the home of Rev. D. A. Murray, D.D., from July thirtieth to August sixth. A busy company of thirty-eight members were in attendance. Seventeen members were absent, fourteen of whom are at home on furlough.

Reports of work done showed steady progress. Over five hundred baptisms were reported. Four new churches and one school chapel have been dedicated. One church has been rebuilt and one is now in course of construction.

Four hundred girls are under Christian teaching in the three Girls' Schools of the mission. The four Kindergartens of the mission reach two hundred children and many other children grow too old to enter while their names are on the waiting lists. Another Kindergarten conducted by the Church in Tanabe has seventy children enrolled, and has received generous gifts from the town.

In the Osaka "Doshikwan" about thirty earnest young men are being trained for practical evangelists and do good work in the city.

Sunday School work and Children's meetings in all parts of the field are flourishing. In Tanabe an open air Sunday School is regularly held on the beach, and a unique open air rally was held by the four Sunday Schools of the town.

Flower Sunday was observed in Kanazawa by two Sunday School rallies. The children all brought flowers which were used in decorating the churches and were afterwards distributed in the hospitals by the children and teachers. In Kioto there are one thousand children enrolled in the Sunday Schools and children's meeting.

Women's meetings of various kinds are held everywhere with good results.

English Bible classes and work among students are fruitful everywhere. In the great student centre, Kioto, generous gifts have been received for the building of a church, which will be a centre for this work. Land has already been purchased and the building is to be commenced immediately.

The Fukui Gempo and the Yakko have a circulation of about four thousand in all. Various books and tracts have been published and much Christian literature circulated.

Lantern lectures have illuminated the Gospel message for many thousands.

The three missionary families in Manchuria and Korea report an interesting year. In Dalny the number of Church members has doubled during the year. The Christians in Port Arthur have been worshipping in an old Greek Church but in the near future they expect to organize as a Church and to erect their own Church building without asking for outside aid. In Korea much itinerating has been done. Eighteen places have been visited, mostly in South Korea, half of which had not previously been visited by any other Christian worker. Much personal work has been done.

As a result of the meeting of the Joint Committee on co-operative work, new work has been opened in Tsuuga and, if possible, new work will be opened in three other places.

The following changes in location were made:—Miss Garvin and Miss Sherman go to Tsu. Miss Moore goes to Matsuyama. Miss Magnet goes to Osaka, and Miss Annie Hall to Kanazawa.

The following officers were elected:—Moderator: Rev. K. P. Gorbald; Cor. Sec.: Rev. J. G. Dunlop; Treasurer: Prof. J. C. Bullagh.

The day after Missin Meeting a picnic was held in the Grove. The attendance of a number of friends from the East Japan and Southern Presbyterian Mission added to the pleasure of the day. Many enjoyable informal reports were given.

The members of the mission will return to their fields cheered and inspired by the parting message of the new moderator: "Let us think of all our work for this coming year not as duty but privilege."

FAR EASTERN PUBLIC HALL CO., LTD.

The first statutory general meeting of the Far Eastern Public Hall Co., Ltd., was held at the offices of the Foreign Board of Trade on Monday afternoon. Mr. Duke Marshall presided, there being also present Messrs. E. Edisson, Jas. Walter, G. G. Brady, T. Thomas, J. E. de Becker, B. M. Ward, W. H. Lewis, W. Holst, Chapman, and J. F. Drummond (Hon. Secretary).

The notice convening the meeting having been read,

The CHAIRMAN said:—I am glad to be able to inform you that all the work in winding up the Yokohama Public Hall Association and forming the Far Eastern Public Hall Company Limited is now done. The meeting is held to complete the formalities in connection with the formation of the company. I am able to report that the share capital has been fully subscribed and we now have 224 names on our share register. A cash balance of yen 5,205.69 has been taken over from the Public Hall Association in liquidation but against this there is still an outstanding mortgage of yen 8,500, which your Directors have decided to leave undisturbed, at any rate until such time as the alterations are completed, when we shall know exactly how we stand financially. In respect to the changes and alterations now rapidly proceeding, I do not now propose to go into details, as I feel certain the old Hall will afford the public a pleasant surprise on the opening night, which we hope will be early in October. I may assure you that the Directors have availed themselves of all expert advice they have been able to obtain in the alterations and I am pleased to say that many ideas have been gratuitously given us which I now acknowledge with pleasure and I am also pleased to be able to add that in consideration of the public nature of the Company, Mr. de Becker has been good enough to have the properties transferred for us free of charge. I can promise you a new, comfortable and roomy seating accommodation and a considerably increased dancing floor with an attractive and up to date stage. We have engaged the services of Mr. Carry, as Hall Superintendent, who I am sure will devote all his energies to the comfort and good care of the Hall and its properties. As far as we can see at present the public will enjoy all these improvements at no extra cost, and at the same time the shareholders may be able to look for a fair return on their investment at no distant date. Altogether I am sure we can look to a very happy future. (Applause).

The CHAIRMAN added that there was nothing much to do at that meeting, but it was necessary, according to the Articles of Association, to appoint two auditors. He therefore proposed from the Chair the election of Messrs. Pearson and Mackie.

Mr. DE BECKER asked whether it would not be well at that meeting to confirm the appointment of the Directors, in order that the minutes might show how these appointments were originally made.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the Directors were appointed by the promoters of the Company—Messrs. Davis, Edisson, Frazar, Marshall, Thomas, Jas. Walter and de Becker. The Directors were Messrs. Brady, Davis, Edisson, Frazar, Marshall, Thomas and Jas. Walter.

The CHAIRMAN's motion as to the appointment of auditors was seconded by Mr. Brady and carried unanimously.

This concluded the business of the meeting. It was immediately followed by an extraordinary general meeting.

The CHAIRMAN said that since the Articles of Association of the Company were drawn up a new Ordinance had come into force in Hongkong which permitted the share register of the company to be kept in Yokohama. To do this he proposed the following special resolution:—

SPECIAL RESOLUTION.

That the Articles of Association be altered in the manner following, that is to say, that the following Articles shall be inserted after Article 141 namely:—

LOCAL REGISTER.

141 A.—The Company may cause to be kept in any place in which it transacts business a Register or Registers of Members and the Directors may from time to time make such provisions as they may think fit respecting the keeping of any such Register.

141 B.—The Directors may comply with the requirements of the companies' (Local Registers) Ordinance 1907 or with the requirements of any other Local Law which in their opinion it shall in the interests of the Company be necessary or expedient to comply with.

Mr. THOMAS seconded the motion, which was adopted.

This concluded the business.

We understand that Messrs. Pearson and Mackie, who were elected as auditors, have offered their services free of charge for the first year.

UGLY SYMPTOMS IN JAPANESE SOCIETY AND THEIR CAUSE.

It is impossible, says the Tokyo Asahi Shimbun, in a recent issue to regard the state of Society in this country without a certain amount of anxiety. Untoward symptoms have of late made their appearance among us. To mention only occurrences which tend to show that things are somewhat out of joint; among our Socialists there is an anarchist faction which has done considerable harm in some quarters. Among our military men an officer who was formerly connected with the Headquarters Staff, Captain Kawakita, has shown himself ready to sell military secrets to a foreign Power. Among students there is wide-spread discontent, and among young men and young women cases of suicide are alarmingly frequent. How are these phenomena to be interpreted? To us it seems that politics have a distinct bearing on the general state of unrest throughout the country. During the excitement of the war the nation showed itself to be capable of making huge sacrifices. It bore the heavy burden of taxation willingly. But now that the war is a thing of the past and several years have elapsed since peace was restored, people find the conditions of life very hard to bear. The immediate future seems to be darkened with clouds that have no silver lining. There is a general feeling that there has been a deliberate attempt on the part of the Government to make the nation travel more rapidly than its strength warrants. Men are weary of the constant pressure brought to bear on them, of the high speed that is demanded. And the question we ask ourselves is this: Are we not somewhat too ambitious? Is not the pace set too rapid for travellers so heavily burdened? He who would climb a high mountain must regulate his pace according to the distance he has to cover. After rapid progress a rest must be taken. Where recuperation is neglected, mountain sickness often comes on and further climbing is rendered impossible. The times call for a slackening of the financial pace at which the nation is travelling, says the Asahi Shimbun.

THE BANK OF JAPAN.

The 52nd semi-annual general meeting of the Bank of Japan was held on Aug. 15th. Mr. J. Yoshida and eight other officials of the Imperial Household, Mr. K. Midzumachi, Vice-Minister for Finance, and Mr. K. Hashimoto of the same department were present. The President of the bank, Baron Matsuo, who presided, delivered a speech on the business done and the general financial condition prevailing during the first half of this year. Out of the profit of 4,354,129.16 yen, the following allotments were made:—

Ordinary dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum	900,000.00
Special dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum	900,000.00
Reserve	1,000,000.00
Bonus and special allowances to directors etc.	219,000.00

The balance was carried forward to the next account.

It may be remarked on the foregoing, that the net income in the period under review shows an increase of about yen 400,000 over that of the previous half year. The reserve, including that of the present account, now amounts to yen 23,250,000; a sum almost equal to 80 per cent. of the whole capital (yen 30,000,000) of the bank.

The statement with regard to convertible notes runs as follows:—

Balance at the beginning of the account period	369,984.121
Notes issued during the period	668,968.218
Notes redeemed during the period	736,245.208
Balance at the end of the period	302,707.121

On Aug. 17th, snow fell on Mount Fuji. On the same day, hail visited the district of North Soma, not far from Mito. No damage was caused to cultivated land.

THE BOOKSHELF.

The First Easter Dawn. An Inquiry into the Evidence for the Resurrection of Jesus. By CHARLES TURNER GORHAM. London: Watts & Co. 1908.

IN 1874 there appeared a scholarly, massive work entitled Supernatural Religion, having for its object to show that the miraculous narratives of the New Testament are so late, so ill-attested and so self-contradictory as not to merit belief. The book was written by a retired Indian official, the late Mr. Walter Cassels, who, however, for reasons that must be apparent to everybody who knows what was the state of English opinion on religion thirty years ago, did not acknowledge himself as the author until many years later. The book riveted public attention, and, in spite of its high price, passed through several editions in a few years, successfully bearing an elaborate attack from Dr. Lightfoot, one of the most learned of English Divines. As is usual in such literature, Dr. Lightfoot fastened on minor slips and side issues and left the main argument untouched. A new edition of this truly great work has lately appeared which, I am informed, commands a large sale. Mr. Gorham's new book is an attempt to state in an epitomized form the conclusions reached by writers who are considered authorities on the subject treated. To those who are acquainted with more elaborate treatises on the whole question of the reliability of the Gospel records Mr. Gorham's book will appear unsatisfactory, as in many cases it does not go far enough and takes too much for granted. Of course the book can be of little use to the advanced rationalist, by whom miracles are deemed impossible because conflict with the universal law of causation. Mr. Gorham writes his book for the enlightenment of those Christians who have only heard what the orthodox party say on the Gospel records. The theory that the New Testament writers were inspired Mr. Gorham puts on one side as both discredited and unnecessary. On this subject he says:—"Even conceding the possibility that a man may be inspired, it must be difficult for him to know this with certainty, or to distinguish between the divine and human sources of his knowledge. And it must also be difficult to convince other persons of his inspiration. The credulous may at once accept his claims; the critical will examine them. Inspiration can not give to statements of fact any greater truth than belongs to their intrinsic reality. And as in the case of past events, we have to arrive at this truth by the method of evidence, we must disregard the claim to special inspiration as alike irrelevant and illusory."

Mr. Gorham's argument, stated very briefly, is this. The Gospel records do not furnish satisfactory proof of the resurrection of Christ. Evidence furnished by persons who do not understand the nature of evidence is never reliable. Throughout, the Gospel testimony is of the latter character. Modern Biblical criticism finds that the most credible passages relating to Jesus are those in which the tendency to glorify him is least conspicuous. The Gospel writers unhesitatingly attribute spoken words to non-existent beings like angels and evil spirits, so they no doubt put into the mouth of Jesus words he did not utter. The earliest Gospel, Mark, contains nothing about Christ's resurrection beyond a report that it had happened, which report is attributed to the mythical agency of an "angel." This is prima facie ground for concluding that the later accounts of the resurrection have been amplified from vague and unverified reports. The argument from Old Testament prophecies in favour of the resurrection breaks down when examined. The New Testament accounts are self-contradictory. Miracles are related as if they were ordinary events in the New Testament, showing that the narrators intellectually were children who had no conception of the extraordinary character of the occurrences they alleged to have taken place. The reasonable canon that the more unlikely an event the greater evidence it needs to support it is habitually ignored by New Testament writers. In an age of almost universal ignorance and superstition, literary standards do not exist. Tradition simply means the memories of uneducated men liable at every turn to exaggeration and error. St. Paul could not distinguish between the operations of his own consciousness and experiences believed to have been supernaturally originated. Hence his testimony to the reality of the Resurrection goes for little. His account of the Resurrection differs materially from that given by the Gospel.

The belief in the resurrection of Christ is not difficult to account for. As regards the Gospel story it is founded on what had appeared in the Book of Enoch and one or two other works. The Book of Enoch was composed by five different authors during a period of about a hundred years, extending from the time of the Maccabees to about 70 B.C. This book is quoted as the genuine work of Enoch by Jude. Phrases and at times entire clauses belonging to it are reproduced in the New Testament, but without acknowledgment. The Rev. R. H. Charles, who has edited the book, enumerates more than a hundred passages from the New Testament which either in phraseology or idea, directly depend on, or are illustrative of, passages in Enoch.

The readiness with which the doctrine of Christ's resurrection has been accepted is easily explained. The notion that the object of worship can not die has been held almost universally. "The pious Hindoo holds that Krishna lives again in repeated avatars. With the Greeks and Syrians Adonis blooms again in fresher life. The Egyptian Osiris treads once more the happy fields. To the Romans Romulus, ere ascending to heaven, is for a time restored, and during a country walk converses with a friend (Vide Plutarch's Life of Romulus). The Life of Gautama Buddha exhibits many striking analogies with that of Jesus, and after his death similar legends clustered round his memory, and the same deifying process went on." The myth of the resurrection, for such Mr. Gorham takes it to be, has its parallels among the myths of the Hebrews, the Greeks, the Romans, the Hindus, the Persians, the Germans, the Franks, the Irish, the Welsh, the Cornish, the Bretons, the Danes, the Finns, the Aztecs, the Algonquins, the Hurons and many other nations both civilised and savage.*

The existence of such myths does not disprove the resurrection of Christ, but accounts for the readiness with which the doctrine has been accepted. The resurrection belief is strong because it fulfils a spiritual necessity and ministers to human weakness. But the seeker after truth cannot find consolation in hopes which reason pronounces fallacious. The belief has been rejected by a section of Christendom which still holds on to the spiritual truths of Christianity.

The demand for such books as "The First Easter Dawn" seems to be on the increase in England, where thought on religious subjects is now making rapid progress, and where the clergy of the established Church are no longer under an obligation to regard the whole Bible or any part of it as necessarily true.

THUNDER STORM.

On Saturday afternoon a thunder storm of some severity swept from north to south over the Tokyo-Yokohama district. At Haneda, near Kawasaki, a youth was killed by a thunder-bolt and a man was rendered temporarily unconscious. The lightning also struck the driver of a car on the Keihin Electric Railway. The car was slightly damaged. In Shinagawa also a man was killed.

On the afternoon of Aug. 15th, a violent thunderstorm was experienced in Ibaraki prefecture. One person was killed and another injured by lightning, while fires, which fortunately were soon extinguished, occurred at two places.

As a result of the accompanying heavy rains, a hundred houses in the district of Abuta, near Sapporo, were flooded.

On the same day, the mizen mast of the British steamer Franklyn now lying in Yokohama harbour was struck by lightning. Six pines in a wood near West Toke-machi were similarly damaged.

Early on the morning of Aug. 17th, a violent thunderstorm swept over Yokohama. According to the Observatory officials a remarkable meteorological change seems to have occurred about nightfall in the mountainous districts on the borders of Yamanashi and Nagano prefectures. The phenomenon commenced to pass at 12.25 a.m. over the Tokyo-Yokohama district in a south-easterly direction, to the accompaniment of alarmingly loud thunder and heavy rain. The storm became most severe at 12.34 a.m., driving before a strong northerly wind, the velocity of which was recorded at 18 metres per second. The flashes of lightning at the time were brilliant and, with the peals of thunder, almost continuous. At 1.10 a.m. the depression moved away in the direction of Chiba prefecture. The rain, however, continued till 4.25 a.m., the whole quantity reaching 62.1 millimetres—a rare occurrence in Yokohama. During the storm, the temperature fell to 62 °F. No great damage was sustained by the town, though buildings and fences were struck by lightning at Shiokumi-zaka, Motomachi; at Kanagawa; in South Ota-machi; and at Negishi, near the race course. On the Bluff, some old fences were damaged, and trees collapsed or were scorched. Sagiyama was the scene of some land-slides but not of a severe nature. Kitagata and Negishi were visited by floods, and the inhabitants were put to some inconvenience by the water which covered the floors of their houses. In Yamashita-cho, two poles of the Yokohama Electric Railway collapsed. Some telephone wires between Yokohama and Tokyo, which suffered damage, were repaired in the course of the forenoon.

THE DALAI LAMA.

The Governor of Shansi has reported to the Peking Government about the daily proceedings of the Dalai Lama at the Wutai mountains, says a Shanghai journal. According to H. E. Pao Feng's report, the Chief Pontiff of Tibet is behaving himself in a very haughty and disrespectful manner towards the local Chinese officials; for, in addition to the supply of his own and his numerous followers' daily food and other requisites at the expense of the Chinese Government, the Dalai Lama demands money and gifts from them under threats. Moreover, he regards himself as so much superior to the ordinary run of human beings that he could not bring himself to show much courtesy even to Mr. W. Rockhill, the United States Minister to China, who paid him a visit during his recent tour in Shansi, in company with the doctor of the German Legation at Peking. The latter was specially sent to the Wutai-shan by Baron Rex to present a photograph of the German Emperor to the Dalai Lama. The insatiable habits of the Buddhist Pontiff's retinue are also a cause for anxiety, and their prolonged stay threatens to ruin the famous temple on the Wutai-shan. Meantime the Dalai Lama's reluctance to come to Peking has not been overcome. Prince Ching and H.E. Yuan Shihkai have instructed Governor Pao to assure him that the Chinese Government will accord him such courtesy and dignity as is due to his position during his sojourn in Peking and that it has not the slightest intention of doing him any harm. The only thing China wants is to confer with him in person about the reorganization of Tibet, so as to introduce western reforms there for the benefit of both China and the vassal State. But so far no satisfactory answer has been received from the Dalai Lama. Meanwhile Mongolian Princes, nobles and others are regarding the Wutai-shan as a holy place on account of the presence of the Dalai Lama and are going on pilgrimages to him at great expense, for the Tibetan followers will not allow them to approach the Chief Pontiff without monetary gifts, while the Dalai Lama himself also demands presents or gifts in money and articles from these devotees.

YOKOHAMA.

On Aug. 13th, the police took 15 swords and sword-canes and one revolver from the rioters. Several serious rumours are afloat, but order is being restored.

A workman, employed at a confectionery shop in Yeiraku-cho, attempted to murder a female employee of the shop on Aug. 13th with a hatchet, injuring her severely on the head. The assailant at once gave himself up to the police.

According to a report received at the Yokohama Chief Police Office, a gardener, living in Fujisawa, assaulted a colleague on Aug. 13th with a short sword injuring him severely. The offender was at once arrested by a policeman. A trifling dispute is reported to have been the cause.

In connexion with the amount, yen 7,000,000, needed in the proposed improvement of the Yokohama Water Works, it is reported by the municipality that the Central Government has decided to defray a quarter of the expense and include the sum in the budget for the forthcoming fiscal year. We learn that the Central Government will defray yen 1,750,000, a quarter of the whole sum, during a period of ten or fifteen years in yearly installments, commencing in the year when the improvement work is started. The Yokohama municipality will raise the whole sum by loans, probably in a foreign country. It will employ the money which is to be paid by the Central Government as interest for the loans.

A telegram has been received in Yokohama from Rangoon to the effect that the weather in Burma has been favourable to general agriculture. The crop of rice is expected to be considerably over the average.

A young man of German nationality ran over a Japanese and his infant about 4.30 p.m. on Aug. 15th while riding in Yamamoto-cho, injuring them severely. He attempted to make his escape without paying attention to the victims but was stopped by some people who handed him over to the Bluff police, where he underwent examination.

Complaints are still rife among the habutae merchants of Yokohama regarding the notification of the Tax Bureau which came into force on Aug. 1st. As already reported in this journal, a permit must be obtained from the tax office at the exact time of any transaction in silk piece goods. It is alleged that the new regulations are the source of much inconvenience in the silk business, and that the export of the staple will in the course of time be affected. On Aug. 19th, a number of foreign merchants dealing in habutae presented to the Yokohama Tax Bureau a joint petition asking for the abolition of the new regulations. They contended that the ultimate effect of the regulations would be to ruin the silk industry. On the same day, Mr. Okabe, representing the Japanese Silk-goods Union, also presented a similar petition to the Departments of Finance and of Agriculture and Commerce. A report has been received in Yokohama to the effect that the silk guilds of Kobe, Osaka and Kyoto have also decided to lodge protests against the new regulations.

The captain of the Kaga Maru, which arrived at Yokohama on Aug. 20th from Seattle, has reported to the Harbour Police that during the voyage one of the passengers who was suffering from brain complaint committed suicide by hanging himself. The usual funeral service was carried out at sea. The property belonging to the deceased was handed over to the authorities.

The dead body of a man was found on Aug. 29th in the sea off Takashima-cho. He was not identified.

On Aug. 19th a fresh case of cholera appeared on the Arratoon Apar now at Nagahama Quarantine Station. Two of the victims of the disease have succumbed and another is reported to be in a serious condition.

BASEBALL.

A very close and interesting game of Baseball was played on Saturday afternoon between the Y.C. and A.C. and the Yokohama Baseball Club, the former coming off winners by 3 runs to 2. The play was not of a high order, although the game was not without its exciting moments. No score was made by either team until the 4th inning when Ito made first and stole second, being brought home by a two bagger. In the 5th inning Hirakawa reached first, and cleverly stole second. While Hirakawa was stealing 3rd, McChesney failed to catch a ball from Nicholl, enabling the Japanese to get home.

The opening run of the Y.C. and A.C. is to be put to the credit of Becker who reached first and then came home on an error. In the eighth inning McChesney got to first, stole second and third and reached home base on a fumble, thus tying the score. As both sides failed to score in the ninth inning the game was carried on to the 11th when Becker made the winning run for the Y.C. & A.C.

BUND RECLAMATION.

In connexion with the proposed reclamation of the foreshore along the Bund and the construction of an electric railway thereon, the Yokohama City Assembly held a meeting on Aug. 17th. Mr. M. Saito, first alderman of the city, in the course of his speech said that some misunderstanding seemed to have arisen among the public concerning the present enterprise. There was no connection between the undertaking and the reception to the American Fleet. Last year, the City Assembly gave its consent to a proposal of the Electric Railway Company, according to which their line was to be extended to Sugita along the coast past Yamashita-cho. Negishi and Byobuga-ura, when the reclamation planned by Mr. Oyama was completed. The Electric Railway Co. had planned this extension before the visit of the American Fleet was thought of. The convenience of the American officers and bluejackets was not considered in the matter. Mr. Saito went on to say that the present road between the English Hatoba and the French Hatoba was 27 yards wide on an average, while that between the French Hatoba and the front of the Grand Hotel was only 15 yards. The first mentioned section was available for a double-tracked railway, but the second section was too narrow for the purpose. Along this narrow section a reclamation 11 yards in width would be made. The bill was unanimously passed without being referred to the second and third readings. It is said that the cost of the reclamation—266 yards in length and 11 yards in width—is estimated at yen 27,650, and of the construction of the railway yen 157,500, including the sum required for the purchase of the Boat House, etc.

In this connection, a protest signed by many foreign residents was presented to the local government a few days ago, asking for the abandonment of the project. The main objection raised was that the amenities of the Bund would suffer if the scheme were carried out.

According to a report via Kobe, cholera in Hankow and the adjoining places is virulent. About 200 cases in Hankow, 150 in Muchong and 50 in Hanyang on an average are reported daily.

MR. S. COCKING.

The Yokohama Boyeki Shinbun has for some time past been collecting materials regarding the opening of Yokohama to foreign trade. Mr. Samuel Cocking, now living in Enoshima, was approached on the subject. In an interview with a representative of the journal, Mr. Cocking said that when he arrived in Yokohama, Japan was in the throes of the war of the Restoration. The battles of Kyoto and Ueno, however, had been fought. The leaders of the Tokugawa party had retired to Hakodate, where an attempt was being made to organize a naval force in order to make a final stand there. The steamer by which he (Mr. Cocking), arrived at Yokohama had been chartered by the Emperor's Government. Mr. Cocking, who was 22 years of age at the time, made the acquaintance of several feudal lords, including Satsuma. He often visited their residences and they sometimes called on him at his office at No. 55, Yamashita-cho, (now the office of the Japan Mail). He was dealing in drugs, machinery, ammunition, etc., and supplied the above mentioned lords with guns, rifles, bullets, and powder. When he first arrived in Yokohama—in 1868—the city was in a better condition than he anticipated. Several foreign firms—British, French, American, Dutch,—had started businesses, which gradually became prosperous. The land beyond the Yoshida-bashi, or iron bridge, was simply a marsh. Yeshida-machi ran along the river bank at that time. In conclusion, he said that most of his old friends in Yokohama are dead.

YACHTING.

The weather on Saturday was not agreeable for yachting; the wind being uncertain and even squally at times.

The race arranged for the big boats over the Widow Buoy course did not come off, but six 22-raters went out and raced round the Mandarin Bluff course. They were: Pele, Winsome, Edna (scratch), Valkyrien (2 minutes), Sunbeam and Elsa (6 minutes). After a good start Pele led out of the harbour, Winsome (second) and the others close up. At the Mandarin Bluff mark Pele was 1m. 20s. ahead of Winsome, and about three minutes before Edna and Elsa. Sunbeam was in fifth place and Valkyrien last of all. Increasing her advantage all the way Pele came in an easy winner 10 minutes ahead of Sunbeam, Winsome being third. The Winsome Cup and records therefore go to Pele.

Times:—

	Start.	Finish.
	h. m. s.	h. m. s.
Valkyrien .....	2 15 15	4 15 50
Elsa .....	2 15 10	4 10 20
Pele .....	2 15 45	3 54 20
Winsome .....	2 15 20	4 05 51
Edna .....	2 15 20	4 10 10
Sunbeam .....	2 15 20	4 05 20

A cruising race to Kawasaki had been arranged for the Larks, but the weather conditions forbade it. Eventually eight boats were started to sail round the Mandarin Bluff mark and home through the harbour entrance near Kanagawa. No. 13 was second boat, but having an allowance of two minutes from No. 12, which was first to cross the finishing line, won the prize; No. 10 third.

On the 10th inst., says the Kobe Herald, three large snakes arrived at Kobe from Singapore. Yesterday, they were taken to Osaka to be exhibited at the Idzutsu-seki, a small theatre in Sannichimaye, but about 9 o'clock in the evening, while they were being removed from one cage to another, the biggest of them, which is said by Japanese papers to be about 37 feet long and 3 feet round the body, escaped and made its way into the street. It crawled along with its head upreared, scaring the passers-by badly and causing considerable panic until it arrived at the Kairyozu theatre, which it attempted to enter. As a performance was going on there at the time the arrival of the stranger created much consternation. A man named Miki, made a spring at the reptile, attempting to stop its progress, and was bitten on his left arm. The keeper of the beast, named Nakamura, then went to the assistance of Miki, when he too received a bite on his arm. In the meantime, some futon had been brought and with the aid of these the snake was finally secured.

Owing to the backwardness and confusion in the reforms commanded by successive Imperial Decrees, such as army reorganization and schools of modern learning, in the instruction of officials and in the financial and judicial departments of the various provinces, the Central Government (says a Shanghai exchange) has instructed the provincial authorities to exert themselves to the best of their abilities to accomplish the governmental reforms expected of them and to send a monthly report to Peking upon what they have done in the preceding month.

(2) All other ships which enter the waters of the Colony:—

Two cents per ton register.

Exemptions.—British and foreign ships of war.

About three miles N. E. of Macao, says the China Mail, there is a village called Kut Tai. In the course of the past month no less than forty pigs were lost by the villagers and they thought a wolf or some other wild beast was roaming in the vicinity. Accordingly they kept a sharp look out, and on the morning of the 2nd inst. a villager saw foot prints on the sand resembling those of a dog, though as big as an ox. He gave the alarm; and seven persons all armed with rifles turned out. They brought with them a hound. Going round the hill at the back of the village they approached a cave where the dog gave a sharp bark. At the same time a loud roar was heard from the cave denoting that some beast was inside. The bravest of the hunters then fired into the cave and a loud roaring was again heard. Immediately a tiger's head appeared and all the rifles were discharged at once. The tiger which was hit on the head and under the neck, fell dead in the cave. Its body measured 8 ft. and weighed 250 pounds. The villagers sold the carcase for more than two hundred dollars.

The N. Y. K. steamer Tamba Maru, which arrived in port yesterday, said a Kobe exchange on Aug. 13th brought a consignment of cattle for Japan, consisting of six bulls and 27 cows, of the latter of which nine have calves. These animals come from the estate of Mr. Andrew Mitchell of Barcheskie, Kirkcudbrightshire, who is perhaps one of the largest exporters of cattle in the United Kingdom and has already sent many valuable animals to this country. The present consignment, eleven of which are for Kobe, are all prize and pedigree stock, many of them having taken prizes immediately before they left home. They are of the famous Ayrshire breed and are for breeding purposes, the stock raisers in this country being determined to raise a breed which will be in no way inferior to European or American cattle. The Tamba Maru has also on board four Fort Evans cows of the South Devon breed and four pedigree St. Bernard dogs, with eight prize fowls, consigned to various breeders in this country. One cow unfortunately died on the voyage, but the remainder have arrived in splendid condition, having received every care and attention on board.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS AMONG THE NATIVES OF SOUTHERN NIGERIA.

Lieut. Steel, R.A., who has just returned from four years' military service in Nigeria, gives the following diverting account of matrimonial procedure and customs among the tribes of that region:—

The marital relations amongst these peoples vary somewhat according to their state of civilisation. Amongst all polygamy is the rule, the reason given by the natives being that it is impossible for one woman to do all the work of the house, look after the children, prepare and cook the food, fetch the daily supply of water (often an arduous job), cultivate the plantation, and go to market. And the reason is that the African is an exceedingly hungry person. It is their custom to eat several times a day when at home, and the men spend most of their day sitting in the palaver house or market-place, while the women bring the food all day long. One wife could not possibly do this. Besides, the African lady encourages it, for she says, "The more wives, the less work." Amongst the Ahras, Onichas, Obuwus, and the lower class of pagan tribes in the interior, there is very little form of marriage.

As soon as a man has the means, he pays the parents what they want, in the shape of goats, cows, beads, money, and takes the girl. There is no ceremony at all. The more wives he has indicates a richer man, and that he will be better looked after. If, of course, they can manage to seize a woman from the neighbouring tribe while she is fetching water or working on her farm, so much the cheaper. With this method in vogue for centuries, no wonder that it is as much as a native's life is worth to go out of his own village, and that the country is so backward. With the tribes of the Ilende, Afikpo, Oguta, and Onicha districts, a girl is betrothed to a future husband when only a few years old, he giving her presents from time to time, as well as her parents. Infant marriage is apparently not in vogue at all. Before a girl reaches a marriageable age, she undergoes the fattening process, during which she is generally painted in some way, after which she is painted over with red camwood by her husband. The various tribes intermarry very little. Twins are regarded with terror from the Niger to the Cross river with very few exceptions. With these tribes in the interior, it was the custom to kill them and the mother too. With the river tribes it is the custom to drive the mother and infants out of the community; the Igaras up the Niger, to show that this custom varies, welcome twins as being lucky.

GAOL OUTBREAK AT SHANGHAI.

An outbreak took place from the Shanghai Municipal Gaol on the afternoon of Aug. 7th, as a result of which four long sentence convicts made good their escape and an Indian warder sustained such severe injuries as, it is feared, will result in his death. We take the following from the Shanghai Mercury of Aug. 8th:—

Building operations have been going on recently for the extension of the Gaol and the escaped prisoners belonged to the gang which was engaged upon this work, viz. preparing concrete blocks for the walls. An Indian warder had charge of the convicts who, as usual, were chained together. At about 3.15 p.m. the warder, himself armed with sword and carbine, conveyed his prisoners to the north side of the Gaol for what purpose is not as yet definitely known. Being out of sight of the other convicts and warders the four desperadoes attacked their warder, both from the front and the back, causing him to drop his carbine. They struck him upon the head with a heavy stone hammer which felled him to the ground and rendered him unconscious. They then stole the warder's bayonet, and threw his carbine into a pool of water; freed themselves from their chains, and made good their escape. The absence of the warder with his prisoners for some ten or fifteen minutes was noticed by a foreman in charge of the extension work who promptly made a report to a European warder. The latter's suspicions were at once aroused and he immediately went in search of the missing party. The four convicts he failed to find, but the Indian warder he discovered lying in a pool of blood, and minus both his bayonet and carbine. The convicts had evidently forced an entrance into the newly built turret at the north-east corner of the gaol, and from there dropped over the wall on to the road, and so made their escape. An alarm was immediately given, and the various police stations notified of the outbreak, by telephone. The foreign and native detectives turned out in full force and began their search for the desperate characters, but it was not until nearly 10 o'clock in the evening that the first re-capture was made by Det-Sergt. Thygeson and a native detective in the West Honkew district.

JAPAN IN KOREA.

When Japan, after a short experience as a colonising power in the island of Formosa, added to her oversea responsibilities the Government of Korea and large administrative undertakings in Manchuria she probably did not overlook the fact that she was affording a rare opportunity to the scribes—not to mention Pharasees—for the making of many books of a kind not in keeping with the platitudinous character of the long list compiled before Japan first displayed her military prowess and impressed the world with a new sense of the virility of the nation. Early as it yet is to pass judgment on Japan's work in Korea there are not wanting critics who venture to condemn on apparently a very imperfect comprehension of the facts. A typical instance may be cited from Mr. Putnam Weale's latest political treatise on the Far East entitled, "The Coming Struggle in Eastern Asia." The author argues that the real object of the Mining Law which was enacted under Japanese advice was to stop all possibility of large European mining interests being acquired in Korea. One of the objects of the new regulations, he says, was to invalidate certain important concessions granted by the Korean Emperor some time ago and unavoidably held in suspense pending the termination of the late war. These concessions numbering a dozen or so, were in most cases backed by powerful sponsors in London and New York, "and so great an outcry was made on the promulgation of the new law by their representatives in Korea that in the end the European backers were forced to take effective action." And Mr. Putnam Weale would have his readers believe that Prince Ito yielded in some cases to diplomatic pressure, in another to a threat to draw public attention to the matter in the House of Commons, and that his Excellency in yet another case practically gave way as a bribe to Parisian bankers who are alleged to have said that if the concession were not granted there might be difficulties regarding the new Japanese Conversion Loan. The explanation given by the Japanese authorities of the delay in confirming the concessions was that the concessionaires had not followed the detailed regulations. When the applications were filed in due form—and not before—it is clear, even from Mr. Putnam Weale's statement of the case, that they were in due course considered and granted. That there was any desire on the part of the Japanese authorities to invalidate concessions that had been properly made by the Korean Government to foreign syndicates is really too absurd to be accepted for one moment. We can well believe that the Japanese authorities in Korea were slow to confirm the concessions, but we should be more inclined to attribute the delay to that slowness of movement and circumspection which is proverbially associated with all Governments. But, says Mr. Putnam Weale, "in the case of the well-known American firm of Collibran, Bostwick and Co., of Seoul, acting in the interests of the Manchuria Syndicate Ltd. and the Korean Syndicate Ltd., no such consideration was shown. Although the concessions held were unimpeachable, the Japanese needed them for themselves and although two years have now been spent in representations it has been time wasted." Perhaps it was since these words were penned, but certainly it was before Mr. Weale's book was available in the East that the dispute over these concessions was settled in favour of the foreign claimants, whose title to them was certainly open to question, and delay under the circumstances was perfectly excusable. As against Mr. Weale's view of Japan's policy in this matter, we may cite a report widely circulated recently in the Japan papers wherein it was stated that Messrs. Collibran and Bostwick had discussed the question of mining with Prince Ito, and apart from expressing appreciation of the consideration they had received at His Excellency's hands in the matter of the dispute over their own concession, they are reported to have declared that the new mining regulations for Korea were likely to attract a large amount of American and European capital for the mines as "mining machinery is admitted free of duty," and "the measures taken to secure the rights of foreigners in mining properties had given much satisfaction to the owners of large mining claims throughout Korea." This seems to show that Mr. Putnam Weale was much too prone to criticism on an imperfect understanding of the situation. The Times when referring recently to Japan's difficulties in Korea ventured the remark that Englishmen, at least, who knew how the work of their countrymen in India was incessantly misrepresented, would be slow to join in the chorus of violent criticism of Japan's work in Korea. Japan, certainly has a fair claim to a more generous consideration of her difficulties, and it may, at least be expected of critics that they would make sure of their facts before passing judgment.—Hongkong Daily Press.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE "RUDDER" CUP.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—In Mr. Alan Owston's amusing letter there is only one point worth correcting.

The Editor of the Rudder has offered no prize to the Yokohama Yacht Club.

In the paragraph referred to by Mr. Owston there is no mention of the Yokohama Yacht Club.

But a small matter of detail like that would not prevent Mr. Owston from seizing the opportunity in his usual manner.

Yours faithfully,

STRAY DOGS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I think it is quite time that the present arrangements for dealing with stray dogs in Yokohama were abolished and more humane and scientific methods adopted. Under the existing conditions an owner has the chance of losing a valuable dog through the caprice of the coolies who are sent to hunt up stray dogs. These dog catchers seem to take a perfect delight in the brutal methods which they are no doubt instructed by some official to adopt. Is there any reason why a harmless dog which may be playing just outside the owners compound should be attacked with sticks and when caught put into a box cart where it can get not one breath of fresh air?

That is not the way in which a dog is treated in civilized countries and why should that most affectionate and friendly of all animals be treated so badly in Japan whose people boast of a civilization many centuries old.

Surely it is possible to have a home for stray dogs founded along the lines adopted in Great Britain.

Everybody recognises that diseases in dogs, especially at this season of the year, are a danger to human life, but I am convinced that the present crude methods will not help matters, simply because a good sound dog stands the same chance as an unhealthy one of being destroyed owing to the want of intelligence of the men at present employed as catchers. I would ask one question, are similar methods adopted in the destruction of stray dogs in Japanese towns and villages as in Yamashita-cho and Yamate-cho? Because the number of stray mongrels, many of which are in a distressing state with mange, one meets when passing through a Japanese town seems to increase all the time.

It is to be hoped that some influential dog lovers will take up the cudgels on behalf of their friend and companion so that some proper system of dealing with stray dogs may be adopted at once.

Does not harshness in the treatment of dogs call for some action on the part of the S. P. C. A.?

Yours, etc.,

DOG LOVER.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION LANGUAGE SCHEME.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—It may be of interest to you to know that in the first examination held in connection with the Language Scheme of the British Association of Japan, three members entered for the first stage and one for the third stage. All passed to the satisfaction of the examiners. Yours faithfully,

FRANK O. STUART, Hon. Sec.

THE MAD DOG.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As two foreign ladies were leaving their bathing box at Honmoku on the evening of the 17th inst., they were attacked by a mad dog, barely succeeding in reaching a place of refuge before the brute was upon them. There one of them fell in a faint from her fright but the other, more courageous, crying lustily for help, called a number of Japanese boys lounging on the bench who came to their assistance, assuring them that the danger had passed. With fear and trembling they made the second start for their homes on Nakamura Bluff, giving a wide berth to all stray dogs met on the way.

The query is naturally: where are the police, and what are they doing in the way of executing the Governor's proclamation?

Surely something should be done and if the matter is longer delayed or neglected by the police authorities it should be taken up by the citizens and this danger to the public suppressed.

Yours, etc.,

OBSERVER.

THE YOKOHAMA YACHT CLUB.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—If Mr. Alan Owston has the welfare of the Y.Y.C. so much at heart as he would have us believe, it might be suggested that a more efficient way to redress any possible grievances would be to avail himself of rule 16 by which a special general meeting of the Club can be called to discuss such grievances. The Committees would then be only too glad to provide Mr. Owston with more reliable information that he seems to possess at present, and at the same time take advantage of any possible superior knowledge he may have of the manner in which the club should be conducted. It is more than likely that such a manner of proceeding would conduce to the welfare of the Club in a much more wholesome manner than that which Mr. Owston has taken up. Yours, etc.,

For the Committees, Y.Y.C.,

O. T. GILLON, Hon. Sec.

KINDERGARTEN UNION OF JAPAN.

The Kindergarten is not a sublimated day-school, nor a secularized Sunday School—neither is it a place where ignorant nurse maids may amuse (?) little children and keep them from under the mother's feet for a part of each day. Nor yet is it a factory for the production of premature prizes—but it is or should be—a place where every childish faculty for good is nourished and coaxed into expansion (all the opposite ones allowed to die of inanition) and the child sent into the public school at six years alive, eager, faculties alert and ready for further progress. Now this means work for the Kindergarten—it means study and research—and that not alone, but with others who are working and studying in the same field. Two years ago the foreign Kindergartens of Japan were widely separated as to distance and quite as widely separated as to knowledge of each other's work. It may be said that they worked enthusiastically and faithfully where they were—but they were working as if each said to her own heart "Only the Master shall praise thee and only the Master shall blame" tacitly expressing a disbelief in the value of human combination for help—inspiration and growth.

But the spirit of the present day stirred among them and the International Interdenominational Inter Scholastic Union of Kindergartens in Japan came into being, with the result that at the second Annual Meeting these Kindergartens were somewhat amazed at what has been accomplished in two years.

The Union has been formed, a constitution made and adopted, a membership gathered; two printed reports edited, various topics of value to the Union investigated, two Annual Meetings held—a large exhibition of Kindergarten hand work brought together. An honorary Membership in the International Kindergarten Union of America and Canada granted to the Japanese Union, and an increasing appreciation on the part of the public for this place of education which has to do with little children.

Perhaps the best thing has been the opening of the Kindergarten eyes to the amount of work to be accomplished—individually and as a union. A good start has been made on the task of improvement, but perfection still lies far ahead.

The Session of the Second Annual Meeting opened in the Auditorium at Karuzawa at 2.30 p.m. August 12th, Miss E. L. Rolman, President in the Chair. All of the officers save one, a majority of the members and a fair audience of interested outsiders were present while the following programme was carried out:

1. Devotional Meeting. Hymn, Scripture reading, the President. Prayer, Rev. Mr. Bishop. 2. Reports of Recording Sec. Miss M. M. Cook, Corresponding Sec., Mrs. R. A. Thomson, Treasurer, Miss M. M. Cook. 3. Piano Solo, Miss Moulton. 4. President's words of Welcome. 5. Paper on Kindergarten Literature, Miss H. E. de Wolfe. 6. Reports on:—Exhibit of Work, Annual Report, Miss Howe. 7. Report of Docket Committee, Miss Bigelow. 8. Vocal Solo. 9. Lord's Prayer.

The session was continued on August 13th, the Vice-President, Miss A. L. Howe, in the Chair.

1. Devotional—Hymn, Scripture, Miss Howe. Prayer, Dr. Dearing. 2. Resolution expressing the sense of loss to the Union in the death of Madame Clement of Tokyo. 3. A Paper on Stories for the Japanese Kindergartens, Miss E. L. Rolman. 4. A Paper on Japanese Kindergarten Statistics, Mrs. F. L. Learned. 5. Piano Solo, Miss Maguet. 6. Paper on Music for the Kindergarten. 7. Paper on Kindergarten Games, Miss Tucker. 8. Organ Solo, Rev. Mr. Grisette. 9. Paper on the Standard of Gifts in the Kindergarten, Miss E. L. Rolman. 10. Vocal Solo. Miss Booth. 11. Closing Hymn.

The Exhibit, filled the walls and part of the windows of the Auditorium. The Baikwa Kindergarten of Ueda, Shinshu, under the care of Miss De Wolfe, sent a very full exhibit. The Baptist Kindergartens under Miss Rolman's supervision filled the platform space. The Presbyterians of Kyoto sent an interesting and unique lot of work, while Miss Cook of the Southern Methodist Board in Hiroshima brought an exhibit which claimed interested attention. Miss Cody of Nagasaki sent a small but very satisfactory lot of work, while the Glory Kindergarten of Kobe, sent a small exhibit of Thanksgiving decoration for the Kindergarten. While all this varied exhibit was of interest and value to the Union and to outsiders as well the greatest surprise was the Kindergarten work sent from Brooklyn, N.Y. Miss Wilson, a Member of the Committee on Exhibits, wrote to America and was successful in gaining the attention of the Superintendents of Schools in New York, Boston, Chicago and some other cities. In addition to the interest shown by these men, the Superintendents of Kindergartens or the principals of large training schools also gave their aid with the result that a large exhibit from New York, Boston and Chicago had been sent on for the meeting in Karuzawa, but the vagaries of express companies had interfered with this delightful plan, and save the small portion from Brooklyn, the exhibit from America is still a wanderer on the face of the earth.

But while the Union lost this interesting and valuable opportunity to study the best methods from across the water, a great pleasure was felt in knowing that the International Kindergarten Union had kindly voted to accept the Union in Japan as an honorary branch of their own large and influential body.

Among the subjects treated in the paper were:—Kindergarten Literature, Stories for Children, Statistics, Music, Games Standards of Gifts and Colors were the topics selected for the consideration of the Union. The paper will soon be published as a supplement to the Second Annual Report. The Union while formed primarily to bring the foreign Kindergartens together for mutual help and growth, warmly welcomes all Japanese members and it is a great satisfaction to note the increasing membership of Japanese Kindergartens and the increasing interest they are displaying in the work of the Union. In the death of Madame Clement of Tokio, an Associate Member of the Union, the ranks have been broken, and a sweet spirit taken from us.

Officers for the coming year, are:—President, Mrs. R. A. Thomson, Kobe; Vice-President, Miss A. L. Howe, Kobe; Recording Sec. and Treasurer, Miss M. M. Cook, Hiroshima; Corresponding Secretary, Miss H. E. De Wolfe, Ueda, Shinshu. The Executive Committee are:—The Officers and Mr. Gorbold, Kyoto, Mrs. Gordon, Kyoto, Miss Wakiyama, Kobe. The Editors of the annual report are:—Miss Gordon and Mrs. Gordon. Exhibit:—Miss Howe, Kobe; Miss Rolman, Tokyo; Miss Cook, Hiroshima; Miss Cody, Nagasaki; Miss De Wolfe, Ueda.

HIRADO AND WILL ADAMS.

The Nagasaki Press has received the following from Count Matsuura, of Hirado, with a request for publication:—

Institute of Historical Compilation, Imperial University, Tokyo, July 10th, 1908.

To His Lordship the Count Atsushi Matsuura,

MY LORD,—I have read with great interest the article by Mr. Kato, which you kindly sent me the other day, and am very pleased to say that, as regards the sites of the English Factory and the house of William Adams' host at Hirado, his arguments seem sound and his conclusions correct. But I fear he would fail to find the English grave-yard where he is now looking for it. I believe, we ought to look for it in the exactly opposite direction, somewhere in the hills beyond the point of Sakikata. Even when it is found I do not see how the grave of Adams could ever be identified, unless we find some document throwing light on the point. We have, as yet, been unable to find any such document, either in the English or the Dutch archives. It has, however, been proved beyond doubt by Dr. Riess, that Adams died at Hirado. We naturally think he was also buried there, and the recent excavations at Henuki seem to confirm this view. As Hirado is so full of associations of the time when the English were there, and as it was there that the Europeans came from almost the very beginning of our intercourse with Western nations, I think it most appropriate to erect a monument to the memory of Adams, who helped so much in furthering our foreign intercourse, on the hills overlooking the beautiful bay.

Wishing every success to this proposal of yours,
I remain, My Lord, Yours ever to command,
N. MURAKAMI.

To His Excellency the Count MATSUURA.

Your Excellency.—In the autumn of 1905, public spirited people in this locality formed the plan of erecting a monument to William Adams. In the winter of the same year His Excellency, Sir Claude MacDonald, the British Ambassador, came here with Lady MacDonald, and when he heard of this plan, he, to our great gratification, expressed his cordial sympathy with it. We greatly regret that we have thus far been unable to carry out our plan and now we hear that a subscription fund is being raised in England for repairing the Anjin Dzuka at Hemmimura, near Yokosuka. This is, no doubt, a good undertaking, but as we state in the enclosed paper concerning the life of Adams, the town of Hirado is the place where he spent his later years, where he died and was buried, and where national intercourse between Japan and the British Empire began. Therefore, we believe there is better reason for erecting a monument to him in this place. We shall be deeply grateful to Your Excellency if you will kindly speak to His Excellency the British Ambassador with the view to obtaining his support in our undertaking. We shall also be extremely grateful to Your Excellency for any suggestions you may be pleased to make with reference to the subject. Names of the promoters omitted. We have the honour to be Your Excellency's obedient servants.

A PROPOSED MONUMENT TO WILLIAM ADAMS.

It is about 300 years since William Adams died in Hirado. He is famous not only as the first Englishman who came to our country, but also as the first medium of national intercourse between Japan and the British Empire. It was also at Hirado that Japan's intercourse with the British Empire commenced; and even now various memorials of that time are found there. We earnestly wish to erect a monument and a memorial hall in memory of Adams at the very place where Japan first shook hands with the British Empire, now our only ally. The erection of these structures would be especially opportune at this time when our intercourse with the treaty powers is daily becoming more intimate. It is still fresh in our memory that when His Excellency, Sir Claude MacDonald, came with Lady MacDonald to Hirado in the early part of November, 1905, and heard of the project, he not only expressed great sympathy with it, but also consented to write the inscription himself. Greatly to our regret, we have not yet been able to carry out our plan. Now, however, we hope to accomplish our undertaking by appealing to the general public at home and abroad. Gentlemen, we request your favourable consideration of our humble project and your pecuniary assistance in carrying it out. We add here for your information a general outline of William Adams's life and the design and cost of the proposed monument and memorial hall.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF WILLIAM ADAMS.

William Adams was an Englishman from Gillingham in Kent. When young, he learned shipbuilding at the Limehouse dockyard, and in the vigour of manhood he entered the service of the Barbary Company as captain and pilot. In 1598, a trading company in Holland sent to the East a fleet consisting of five ships. Adams was engaged by the company in the capacity of pilot major and set sail from the island of Texel in June. The fleet crossed the Atlantic Ocean and passed through the Straits of Magellan. By that time three ships of the fleet were either lost or homeward bound, but the remaining two reached the coast of Chile in the face of great dangers, and sailed across the Pacific Ocean for the Maluccas. On the way they encountered fearful storms, so that one of them foundered. The other, the Liefde, seriously damaged, arrived with great difficulty at a port in the province of Bungo on the 10th of April, 1600. Of twenty-four survivors of the whole crew, only six were able to stand on their feet, among whom was the fortunate Adams.

A few days later, they were ordered to sail to the harbour of Sakai and Adams and some others were received in audience by Tokugawa Iyeyasu at Osaka. They were then ordered to sail to Uraga. The ship suffered further damage during the voyage, so that there was no possibility of the crew's leaving Japan. Iyeyasu especially favoured Adams, and a Dutchman named Jan Joosten, and used to summon them to his court and ask them for accounts of the West. He gave both of them residence in Yedo. Yayesugashi is the place where Joosten lived, and Anjin Street, the site of Adams' house. Being ordered to build ships of the western type, Adams built at the mouth of a river at Ito in Izu two ships of 80 and 120 tons respectively. In one of these, in 1610, Don Rodrigo, ex-Governor of the Philippine Islands, Tanaka Shosuke and others, crossed the Pacific Ocean for Acapulco. In reward for these services Adams was endowed with an estate of about 31 acres (250 koku) at Hemmimura in Miura-gori near Yokosuka. He was henceforward known as the Anjin (pilot) of Miura. He married a daughter of a certain Kageyu Magome, by whom he had two children, Joseph and Susanna. He continued to be consulted by Iyeyasu on foreign affairs.

Adams became fairly well acquainted with the language and the ways of our country. When in 1609 the Dutch applied to Iyeyasu for a charter granting them the privilege of trading in Japan and establishing a factory at Hirado, Adams acted as their interpreter and adviser. In 1611, Adams sent a letter addressed to the Englishmen residing in Java by a Dutch ship returning thither, in which he described the fair prospect of trade with Japan.

Just at that time the Clove, a ship of the eighth voyage of the British East India Company, bringing a message from King James I, was on its way to Japan under the command of Captain John Saris. This ship arrived safely at Hirado on the 11th of June, 1613. Matsuura Hoin, Daimyo of Hirado, visited them with his retinue, and was entertained by Saris on board the ship.

The next day the Clove anchored in the inner harbour, having been towed in by numerous Japanese boats. Having received a notice of the arrival, Adams hurried from Suruga to Hirado and accompanied Captain Saris to the Court of Suruga. There he saw Iyeyasu and later was received in audience by Hidetada at Yedo. With the help of Adams, ample privileges for trade were secured, as the result of which a factory was established at Hirado.

This was in fact the commencement of national intercourse between Japan and the British Empire.

Having thus discharged his duty, Saris set sail for England, but Richard Cocks and six other Englishmen remained in the British factory at Hirado to manage the business. Adams entered the service of the Company and established himself at Hirado, where he had another child. He died of an illness on the 6th of May, 1620, at his house in Kihikida Street at the age of fifty-seven. Six days after his death, Richard Cocks, the chief of the factory, made, as executor, a list of Adam's movable property, which was divided into two parts, one part being bequeathed to his wife and children in England and the other, including his two swords, to his wife and children at Hemmimura; his youngest son, born at Hirado, inherited the whole of his property in that place.

Adams was most probably buried in the graveyard for foreigners at Hirado, a fact which no one can doubt, since it has lately been proved that the Anjin Dzuka at Jusantoge in Hemmimura is but a place for offering prayers to the departed soul of Adams.

Adams lived in Japan fully twenty-one years. Three years after his death, viz., on the 2nd of January, 1624, the British factory was closed, and, in June, 1641, the Dutch factory was removed to Nagasaki.

DURHAM WHITE STEVENS.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY BARN KOGORO TAKAHARA, IMPERIAL JAPANESE AMBASSADOR TO THE UNITED STATES.

History is replete with instances of men who unselfishly have labored in behalf of the general welfare and peace of two nations, and, more particularly, of their native land and of a race which has come under its control. To few men, however, has been entrusted the stupendous work of serving three peoples at the same time: of patriotically advancing the interests of his own country, of aiding in the fashioning of the destinies of another and of assisting in the regeneration of a third. Durham White Stevens was one of these towering figures, and in his life the world has an example of high patriotism, of unusual service and loyalty and of broad humanitarianism, which is worthy of universal commendation and, better still, of future emulation.

I am able to write of Mr. Stevens in two characters—that of an official of my Government and that of his friend. In both capacities, putting aside the natural feeling of grief and indignation which his assassination inspired, I am struck by the sheer wantonness of the crime. It had no justification from any act of his life. He never knowingly did any one an injury; on the other hand, it was his nature unselfishly to serve others. It was absolutely useless; for, in the scheme of life, one instrument, however imperfect, replaces another. It was without consequences or the possibility of them. Japan has set her hand to the plough in establishing stable conditions in Korea and cannot relinquish it until the work is finished. It was perpetrated by an obscure and insignificant Korean criminal, thus carrying out that inexplicable and to me mysterious

Will which puts the life of the highest in the hands of the most lowly. Admitting that the crime was inspired by a perverted patriotism, it aroused the keenest regret among the enlightened of the assassin's countrymen, for they felt the blot which thereby had been placed upon them, and realized how great was the horror caused the American nation at having its soil reddened with the blood of one of its blameless citizens. And, beyond this, they recognized that in the death of this man Korea had lost one of its truest and wisest friends.

It is hardly necessary for me to recite the facts connected with the murder of Mr. Stevens; but I think it important to remind the American people that assassination is the traditional practice of the Koreans, and they would continue to observe it if permitted to remain in the backward state in which they live. Their history is dotted with these black crimes. They are in that unfortunate condition of medievalism, similar to that in other undeveloped lands, wherein the knife and poison and the modern bullet are directed, not merely against the agents of the government which is endeavoring to provide them with peace and order and to lead them to modern civilization, but against themselves. During the spring of 1907, four attempts were made to assassinate members of the Korean Ministry. Two of the Ministry now in power—the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture—are marked for death. "We must do our best," states a high-sounding manifesto of the leader of the so-called General Korean Righteous Army, "to kill all Japanese, their spies, allies and barbarous soldiers." The purpose thus proclaimed cannot possibly deter Japan from continuing what is her manifest duty, not only to herself, but to the Koreans and the world at large. It arouses, in thinking minds, not so much condemnation as pity for the ignorance it displays. For such crimes as it contemplates, especially when committed upon men of the high type Mr. Stevens represented, can only react upon those responsible for them and the cause, however purposeless, they advocate.

It is not my intention in this article to dwell upon the unwise and imprudent policy of the Rulers of Korea, which produced internal conditions unsatisfactory and even intolerable for its own people, and out of which loomed the menace of danger to the peace of the Far East. This feature of the matter can perhaps be best disposed of by merely stating that, in some respects, Korea occupies the same relation to Japan that Cuba does to the United States. The American people felt that they could not have a condition of disorder at their door, and went to war to stop it. They liberated Cuba, but were compelled by events to re-enter upon its government. Japan's course with respect to Korea is almost parallel. We went to war to maintain Korean independence and were obliged to fight another war, partly because of Korea. And now, in order to abate a nuisance that could only be fruitful of further strife, we are seeking to provide the people of that country with a stable government, under which they may enjoy tranquillity and the prosperity which follows in its train.

This policy has dominated everything Japan has done. It was the policy Mr. Stevens pursued during the time he served as Adviser to the Emperor of Korea. When he first arrived at Seoul and assumed his delicate duty, Mr. Stevens found himself an object of suspicion and every step he advised subjected to most jealous scrutiny. Here his tact and judgment were shown and re-enforced by his honesty, and it was not long before he enjoyed the complete confidence and trust of the Emperor and his supporters, and he worked hand in hand with them to put into effect the reforms which the interests of the people absolutely required. Those in Seoul who know of his work applaud it, and this includes not merely Japanese but foreigners and Koreans; and some day, I predict, the Korean people, as a unit, will glorify him for it.

But his work in Korea, after all, was merely one feature of Mr. Stevens's career. Its beginning is graven upon American history. After his graduation from Oberlin College and from the Columbian Law School, in Washington, he was appointed Secretary of the American Legation in Tokyo. His appointment resulted from his contact with American public men in the course of his work as a journalist which he performed while studying law. In this profession Mr. Stevens displayed high ability, and he was known throughout the Capital as an energetic reporter, reliable and dependable. Unquestionably the work quickened his native judgment of men and events, and gave him that clearness of vision and style which is found in all the diplomatic notes he prepared. He came to Japan at the period of our transition; and, sympathizing with us in our effort to adopt modern methods of government and civilization, became the trusted friend of our statesmen of that time. He studied the Japanese language and soon acquired it. He possessed a capacious mind, and he stored it with our customs and traditions, our literature and our history. So great was the impression he made upon the officials of my Government that in 1883, after a service of ten years in the American Legation, Mr. Stevens was induced to enter the employ of the Japanese Government.

I first met Mr. Stevens in Tokyo in 1877, but it was not until 1883 that I enjoyed those intimate relations with him which true friendship insures. Mr. Stevens's first assignment was to Washington. He came in the suite of the new Japanese Minister, Count Terashima, who had been Minister of Foreign Affairs. At that time Japan was preparing to establish a parliamentary system of government. Desiring to keep the authorities and his friends advised in regard to the methods obtaining in foreign lands, Count Terashima made a close study of the Government of England. He turned his notes over to Mr. Stevens, who used them as the basis of one most forceful essays I have ever read. I served as Chargé d'Affaires in Washington at that time, and the pleasantest memories I have relate to my association with Mr. Stevens.

It is unfortunate that I cannot describe in detail the remarkable services Mr. Stevens rendered, not only to my country, but to America and the whole world. I cannot do so for two reasons: first, because etiquette forbids diplomatic revelations; and, second, because I well know that Mr. Stevens, as modest a man as ever lived, would not wish it. In an address which the late lamented John Hay made upon "American Diplomacy," he included the following observation:

"There are two important lines of human endeavor in which men are forbidden ever to allude to their success—affairs of the heart and diplomatic affairs. In doing so, one not only commits a vulgarity which transcends all question of taste, but makes all future success impossible. For this reason, the diplomatic representatives of the Government must frequently suffer in silence the most outrageous imputations upon their patriotism, their intelligence and their common honesty. To justify themselves before the public, they would sometimes have to place in jeopardy the interests of the nation. They must constantly adopt for themselves the motto of the French Revolutionist, 'Let my name wither, rather than my country be injured.'"

So all I can do is to give the bare outlines of Mr. Stevens's career in the service of Japan. His first assignment, as I have said, brought him to Washington, where he acted as counsellor of the Legation. He remained in the American Capital but a short time, being recalled to Tokyo to perform special work in connection with the revision of treaties between Japan and foreign Powers. Having accomplished this duty, with credit to himself and to the interests of all the nations participating in the negotiations, Mr. Stevens was appointed member of a mission under instructions to adjust certain difficulties that had arisen in the relations of China, Korea, and Japan. He returned to Washington in 1887 and remained there until 1893, when he was again recalled to Tokyo in connection with the question of treaty revision. He was ordered back to Washington, where he resumed his duties as counsellor, but paid official visits to Japan in 1900 and 1901. He participated largely in the revision of treaties between the United States and Japan, and aided in the establishment of official relations between Japan and Mexico. He was the Japanese agent in Hawaii in 1900-1901, in connection with questions which had arisen in those islands. During the first three years of my service here as Minister, Mr. Stevens, as counsellor, rendered invaluable service; and, working together, our friendship thrived. His appointment in Korea, soon after the war was begun, was in accordance with a protocol concluded by the Japanese and Korean Governments.

These are but the skeleton facts of a Giant's career, but those who have a knowledge of the events which have unrolled themselves in the Pacific and the Far East, indeed in the whole world, during the last quarter of a century, can obtain an idea of the mind which dealt in masterly fashion with them. What I love to think of, in connection with Mr. Stevens, however, is the intense desire he had that the relations of his own country and of the country he served should be so close, so firm, that nothing could ever arise to shake them. I do not reveal any diplomatic secret when I say that during the many years Mr. Stevens was associated with the Legation in Washington—and here I speak authoritatively, for I was in charge for a part of the time I refer to—he acted not merely as the counsellor of the Minister, but as an American, and he sought the solution of all questions which were in the interest of both countries. He realized that an advantage by one country over the other was merely a temporary gain, and that it was certain to be followed by vexatious discussion in the future which might have untoward consequences. Therefore what he sought always was an arrangement mutually satisfactory to all concerned; and he sought it without thought of its effect upon his personal fortunes, for he worked always behind the scenes.

Perhaps the best evidence of Mr. Stevens's loyalty to America and Japan is furnished by a letter he wrote while in Tokyo to a distinguished officer of the American Navy just before he started on his ill-fated trip to Washington. A copy of the letter has been handed to me, and I have been authorized to use it. It is as follows:

"Tokio, December 24, 1907.

"MY DEAR —:

"Your letter of November 19th, addressed to me at Seoul, followed me to Tokio, whither I have come on my way home. I shall probably leave some time before the middle of January, and therefore, if all goes well, it will not be long after the arrival of this letter before I shall have the pleasure of meeting you personally.

"You have already noticed, of course, that the departure of the fleet from Hampton Roads has been made the occasion of comment by a number of prominent officials and journalists in Japan. These expressions of opinion were elicited in response to requests from the United States, and are a true reflex of the views one hears expressed on all sides in this country.

"Apropos of Japanese opinion on this subject, you say that you observe that the Japanese press has been very quiet of late, and that you hope that the press of the United States will assume the same attitude, as only harm can be done by careless newspaper comments. A truer word was never spoken. But, in the interest of historical accuracy, it should be remembered that most of the silly talk which at first befogged this perfectly proper and natural development of American naval policy did not come from Japanese sources. The disquieting rumours which flew about in such abundance when the proposed movement of the fleet was first mooted were under American and European date-lines. They were repeated naturally in the Japanese press, as were also the indiscreet remarks of certain perfervid American patriots, and this resulted in something like the retort discourteous on the part of one or two sensational newspapers in Japan. The Japanese press as a whole, however,—the press which really represents intelligent public opinion,—was never anything else but quiet. I am inclined to emphasize this point somewhat, because, although it may seem now to possess only reminiscent interest, the impression seems to remain, and apparently you share it, that the announcement of the transfer of the fleet to the Pacific was greeted by a jingoistic outburst in Japan. Nothing could be more diametrically opposed to the facts. The surmises concerning hostile designs possibly implied by the action on the part of the American Government, as I have said before, came from other sources. They were repeated in Japan, but with incredulity and amazement. There was no reason why it should have been otherwise. The friendship of Japan for America,—and by this I mean the friendship of the great mass of the people,—is a traditional feeling, having its origin in the unique circumstances which first brought the two countries into contact with each other, and strengthened to an unusual degree by the unvaryingly considerate, and sometimes even altruistically friendly, attitude of the United States. It is a deeper and a more genuine feeling than that customarily expressed in the honeyed phrases of diplomatic intercourse. I do not think that this is thoroughly comprehended in America, even in circles usually well informed regarding our foreign relations. And I am quite certain that many of the rest of our countrymen, especially some of those in the Philippines, would be the better for an elementary course in Oriental history. There would then, perhaps, be less of a tendency on their part to 'imagine strange things.'

"The thing most to be apprehended is that largely through this ignorance, we may sacrifice one of the most valuable assets which we possess in the East, the genuinely cordial friendship of Japan. Wholly unfounded apprehensions regarding her political aspirations may unconsciously, but none the less surely, lead us into an attitude which cannot fail to retard the development of the great interests we possess in the Oriental, interests which need never clash with hers, and which will gain much by the continuance of the intimate relations at present subsisting between the two countries. This is especially true of possible action with reference to immigration. You say there can be no war unless possibly it come from irritation on the part of the Japanese regarding restriction of immigration, which some people seem to demand. You may rest assured that there will be no war on that account. But supposing that the desire and the purpose of the persons to whom you allude is carried into effect without regard to the feelings or the wishes of Japan, it would be self-deception to expect that the Japanese people will continue to entertain for us the same cordial friendship and belief in our good-will which at present exist. War, as the President has well said, is unthinkable and would be a crime. There is no arrière-pensée on the part of Japan, as seems to be thought in some circles which should be better informed, that would ever make it possible under any circumstances save of aggression or attack, which are also unthinkable. There would be no open breach of friendly relations even, but American influence in Japan would lessen to the disappearing point; and, while beyond doubt the outward amenities of international intercourse would still be scrupulously observed, we would cease to enjoy the advantages which our unique connection with the affairs of Japan has hitherto given us. And it goes without saying that some of our dear European friends would like nothing better than secretly to do what they could to increase this misunderstanding. It seems to me that the events of the past few months have clearly shown a desire on the part of some of them to embroil the two countries.

"I have been speaking, of course, of the probable results of the passage of an exclusion bill by Congress. The immigration question, as any one at all familiar with the subject knows, presents a difficult problem. But a solution honorable to both parties can be found; and, as there is no good reason why both of them should not deal with the matter in a spirit of mutual accommodation and goodwill, I am confident that such a solution will be reached. But, should Congress take the bit between its teeth and pass an exclusion bill, there is no amount of sugar which can sweeten that pill to the Japanese palate. There will, as before said, be no war, and the Philippines and Hawaiian Islands will be as safe from attack then as they have always been; but the warm regard for America which has hitherto been one of the salient features of Japan's international relations will be transformed into a wall of chilly reserve which, I fear, will last for many years to come.

"Pardon me, my dear—, if I appear to be playing the part of a male Cassandra; but believe me, it is not without good reason. I date back, you know, to the days of Bingham, and those were not so very far removed from the days of Perry and Townsend Harris; and I have seen the ties which great men created strengthened by repeated proofs of unselfish friendship by the United States for this the most progressive and receptive among the nations of the East. Coincident with that, I have witnessed the growth of the firm belief on the part of the people of Japan that the American Government and people are more than friends in the backeyard and formal sense of diplomatic usage, but sincere friends upon whose fraternal sympathy and regard they could always rely in the settlement of the perplexing problems created by their natural and legitimate national aspirations. It seems to me, therefore, especially regrettable that the warmth of this feeling, so useful to us in the fulfilment of our own reasonable ambitions in the Orient—even if we regard it from a wholly selfish standpoint—should be cooled by action on our part. Above all does this seem a pity when such action is the result of apprehension of dangers largely illusory, but which, even at the worst, can be avoided by the exercise of forbearance and practical good sense.

"Knowing how deeply interested you are in these matters, I have not hesitated to speak without reserve; and at the same time have no objection to your making whatever use of this letter you may think worth while.

"With best wishes and in the hope of seeing you soon,

"Yours faithfully,

"D. W. STEVENS."

Mr. Stevens was not the bloodless type of diplomat which the world knows in fiction. He was a warm-hearted, generous gentleman, who believed in mutual trustfulness, mutual helpfulness and unswerving honesty. When he was confronted by the Korean who had shot him, he forgave him, because of the ignorance which had inspired the act, thus observing the illustrious example of that One who gave Christianity to the world. "You poor, ignorant man! I do not blame you for shooting me," he told the man. "because you do not understand." Nothing could have been more sublime, but it was in keeping with his entire life. There are few who know that he was the mainstay of his sisters; for his devotion to them was not a thing to be hawked about for the public to admire, but a natural duty which deep affection made light.

The Emperor of Japan honored Mr. Stevens in life by conferring upon him numerous high decorations, and in death with the Rising Sun of the first class, the highest honor a Japanese Government servant can expect from his Sovereign as a reward for any lengthy services, and a gift of $100,000, including a sum from the Korean Emperor to his heirs. These rewards were the mere expression of the affection and gratitude of His Majesty and of the entire Japanese people for the magnificent work which Mr. Stevens performed in their interest. As a son of Japan it is a pleasure to me, as he cannot be recalled, to add my wreath of thankfulness to those which have been placed upon his tomb, and here to give testimony to what he accomplished for humanity.

THE AMERICAN FLEET'S PROGRESS.

London, August 17.

Washington.—Though the majority of the responsible papers editorially ignore the Australian progress of the fleet, the comments made by other journals reveal a belief that the Australians are pleased at the prospect that the American fleet, in default of the British, will bear the brunt of the struggle if the Yellow Peril materializes.

The New York Times says that the Government, fearing that the integrity of China is menaced, is going to clearly define its policy towards China. The same journal recommends a German alliance instead of a Chinese. The correspondent adds that undoubtedly a latent distrust of Japan exists in official quarters, and that there will be much relief when the Yokohama visit is ended without any contretemps. The recurrence of last year's warlike talk would be detrimental to social and economic relations between the two countries, and this perhaps is why the best journals make no comment on the New Zealand reception of the fleet.

CHINA AND AMERICA.

New York, Aug. 12.

Commenting on the relations between America and China, the New York Herald says that the rights and interests of China are being encroached upon by Japan, and the general interests of the United States in the Far East are threatened by a similar fate. The New York journal advises both countries to conclude an alliance to safeguard their rights and interests, and to check Japanese influence in the Orient. In the Herald of Aug. 12th, the views of Mr. Wu Ting-fang, Chinese Minister in Washington, expressed in the course of an interview on this question, are given publicly. His Excellency is reported to have said that a special convention was necessary between America and China, as was pointed out by the Herald. He could not, however, in consequence of his official position, declare that any such view was held by the Peking Government as to the present international situation. As an individual he felt free to say that conditions in the Far East were serious, and that China especially was in an unenviable state by reason of the threatening attitude frequently adopted by her neighbour. A special convention between China and the United States—even if not a formal alliance—was desirable in order to maintain mutual interests in the Orient.

COUNT OKUMA AND AMERICAN JOURNALS.

Many American journals have published a speech by Count Okuma, who is alleged to have said that the Government of the American Republic is bent on expansion of its naval forces as a precautionary measure against Japan. Last evening, some journalists approached Baron Takahira, Japanese Ambassador, who was in New York to see Mr. O'Brien off. On the correspondents making enquiry of the Japanese Representative as to the substance of Count Okuma's speech, the Baron showed some embarrassment. According to the New York Herald Count Okuma is not unwilling to have a tilt with America, and showed the boastful spirit peculiar to his countrymen. The paper added that disagreeable matters were frequently reported as having occurred among Japanese officers, and refers to the recent killing of an officer in Peking by Japanese legion-guards. In conclusion the paper jokingly adds that Count Okuma's principal experience after the outbreak of war with the United States would be disappointment.

THE "HERALD" AND ANTI-JAPANESE AGITATION.

New York, August 15.

No special attention is being paid to the question of a Sino-American alliance as proposed by the New York Herald in a spirit of anti-Japanese agitation. Most of the newspapers in New York ridicule the Herald's suggestion. Mr. Wu Tingfang, Chinese Minister in Washington, has published a contradiction of the Herald's innuendo that he was in favour of the union.

TROUBLE IN THE K. R. &amp; A. C.

There is a rift in the lute, and for the time being—doubtless for a very short time—only a discordant note is heard from the direction of the K. R. and A. C., said the Kobe Herald of Aug. 14th. A number of members have resigned and the indefatigable Honorary Secretary—a man whose devotion to the interests of the Club has won regard and esteem from members who not so long since were anything but his well-wishers or supporters—has sent in his resignation also. The trouble has arisen through the rejection by the Committee—in whose hands the balloting for a candidate rests—of an old resident who sought to renew his membership. What the reasons for his rejection were we know not. We are not able to discover what would commend themselves to our judgment as valid reasons. The gentleman in question is a very old resident and deservedly respected, and, as we say, it is not easy to discover a sound cause for his exclusion from the most cosmopolitan and liberally-conducted Club established here. But Balloting Committees, of course, do not divulge their reasons. They are autocratic, though not infallible, and when they have once given their judgment, be they reasonable and right or wantonly wrong, there is no appeal—unless it is to the general body of members. In this case, it seems, the aggrieved parties have evinced their indignation by withdrawing from the Club. We deplore this; in the first place because it obviously weakens one of the most useful institutions we have here—the K. R. and A. C., indeed, is Kobe in epitome, confined to no one class, cosmopolitan, a democracy in miniature for the promotion of sport and healthy pursuits;—and in the second place because it tends to introduce misunderstanding and bad feeling. We are free to say that in a very large measure we sympathize with the protestants, but, much though we sympathize with them, we are bound to say that we think their action ill-advised. An appeal to a general meeting would have been much more sensible and, we are inclined to think, much more effective. It would have been constitutional and not minatory, while the action taken smacks of force and compulsion. Assume for the sake of argument that the Balloting Committee were wholly wrong in their judgment, still the fact remains that they were placed in office to exercise their judgment and to give expression to their own views and their unbiased interpretation of the views and wishes of their fellow-members. If their interpretation was wrong surely some conciliatory means could have been found to bring the fact home, without having recourse to the drastic measure of resigning en masse. The course adopted only accentuates the trouble and does but weaken one of the most useful and deserving organisations the community possess.

CUTICURA SAVED HIS BOY'S LIFE

Father Tells of Child's Suffering from Eczema—Was in Despair
When Doctors, Infirmary, and Hospitals Failed—Tried Cuticura,

ECZEMA SPEEDILY, THOROUGHLY CURED

"I feel I should not be doing my duty to others if I refrain from telling you how Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment saved my boy's life. My boy is five years old, and for the last eighteen months his mother and I have been worried a great deal, owing to eczema. I have tried all kinds of remedies for the boy without any result. Under doctor's treatment he seemed to get worse. I took him to the infirmary and also to the hospital, without obtaining any benefit. We gave up all hope of the boy being cured, until we saw an advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies and the wonderful results that they had performed, so I determined to give the Cuticura Remedies a trial. After the use of one cake Cuticura Soap and one box Cuticura Ointment the improvement was marvelous, and after using another cake of Cuticura Soap and one box Cuticura Ointment he was thoroughly cured, and still remains so. I cannot speak too highly of the wonderful cure by the Cuticura Remedies. You are at liberty to use this testimonial for the good of other sufferers. W. Salter Postman, 18, Waverley St., Baptist Mills, Bristol, April 2, 1906."

Two Japanese submarines, under construction at the shipbuilding yard of Messrs. Vickers, Sons, and Maxim, in Barrow, were recently launched. They are of the "C" type and 318 tons each.

ON Tuesday morning a locomotive collided with a freight train at a point between Futakawa and Washidzu, on the Tokaido Railway. Both locomotives and six wagons were badly damaged.

IT is reported by telegram to Hongkong that there is good authority for believing the British Admiralty to be now in favour of the principle of floating docks, hence the postponement of the Rosyth scheme.

ON the evening of Aug. 22nd, a child was run over in Mikowadai-machi, Azabu, Tokyo, by a Dutch gentleman in his motor-car. The victim, who sustained severe injuries, died on the following day at the Tokyo Hospital.

ACCORDING to the Japanese press the American Government has purchased the steamers Shawmut and Tremont from the Boston Steamship Company, whose Yokohama agents are Messrs. Dodwell and Co. The ships will be employed as transports.

THE Yokohama Specie Bank will hold a semi-annual general meeting on Sept. 10th. The net profit during the first half of this year was yen 3,053,505.35, including a balance—yen 1,091,552.18—brought from the previous accounts. A dividend will be declared at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum.

RUSSIAN naval officers have subscribed for a wreath of silver flowers to be hung on the monument to the Japanese dead at Port Arthur. The wreath is said to be 3 ft. by 2½ ft. and to be beautifully chiselled. It bears the inscription "From the Russians to the brave men of the Japanese Navy who fell at Port Arthur."

IN the engine room of the fishing vessel Asahi Maru, which is furnished with oil fuel, fire broke out at about 4 p.m. on Aug. 19th, while she was engaged in the usual operations between Miyake and Shikine Islands, off Izu Province. Of her a crew of 22, one engineer was burnt to death and 19 were more or less injured, the fate of the remaining two being unknown. Three of the badly-injured men are in a critical condition. As no relief was available, the burning vessel was allowed to drift until she finally went ashore at Nijijima, another island off Izu.

As already reported, snow fell on Mount Fuji on Aug. 17th. The fall was repeated on the following day. On the former occasion, the fall was limited to the hachi-go me or 8th station; on the latter to the roku-go-me or 6th station.

IT is reported by the Hochi that a well-known Chinese trader of Kobe was arrested on Aug. 22nd on a warrant of the Preliminary Judge of the Local Court and was taken to the Kobe Police Station. It is said that he has committed frauds amounting to 204,000 yen. Seven persons in Osaka and nine in Kobe are believed to have been victimised by him.

THE Yokohama Specie Bank is about to extend its foreign business by the establishment of new branches. As the result of a tour of inspection in Europe, America, and India undertaken by Mr. Bekkey, a director of the Yokohama Specie Bank, who returned about a fortnight ago, the bank proposes to establish branches at Rangoon, Singapore, Montreal, and Vancouver in Canada, and at Seattle. Branches are also to be established in Australia.

A VLADIVOSTOCK telegram under date of Aug. 25th states that Grand Duke Michaelovitch, who recently returned to St. Petersburg from Vladivostok and Nicholaiivsk, where he inspected the defensive operations, has declared that the artillery in that district was not in a satisfactory condition. Lieut-General Ilmann, commanding the Vladivostok fortress, has presented to the Central Government a plan for the improvement of the defences, which meets with the approval of the authorities.

DR. AND MRS. R. KOCH, who have been staying at the Oriental Palace Hotel in Yokohama since Aug. 19th, were present at a dinner given in their honour by Baron Matsuo, President of the Bank of Japan, at the Bankers' Club in Tokyo. Dr. and Mrs. Koch will leave on Monday by the Empress of India for Vancouver. At the request of the German Government the German specialist will be present at the International Lung-Tuberculosis Prevention Conference to be held on Sept. 21st in Washington.

THE conduct of a policeman in arresting a Japanese man near the Hotel de France on Tuesday, about 1.30 p.m., for appearing in the public streets in a state of nudity, is most commendable, says the Nagasaki Press, and it is somewhat disappointing to learn that the officer's action, despite the violent resistance offered by the accused, was not upheld by his superiors. We were under the impression, continues that journal, that the primitive habit of bathing in the streets in front of houses had been suppressed, but we hear that it is still practised in some of the principal thoroughfares of the city.

A JAPANESE paper reports that a British gentleman, Mr. F. H. Booth by name, who is staying at the Fujiya Hotel, Hakone, with his family, started on Thursday morning on a visit to the Doryo Temple, in company with his wife and daughter, taking with them three 'rikisha-men. After climbing Myojo-ga-dake, they rested by the roadside to take some refreshment. As Mr. Booth opened a bottle of aerated water, the bottle suddenly exploded, and Mr. Booth sustained somewhat severe injuries to his left hand. He was taken to Sekimoto on the back of a kurumaya and afterward, removed to the office of a doctor at Odawaras where he arrived at about 6.30 in the evening. A surgical operation was performed.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

The crusade of the New York Herald in favour of an alliance between America and China has ended in a complete fiasco according to the Asahi Shimbun's telegrams, but the New York Times has now put on the mantle of its discredited contemporary and is engaging in an orgie of anti-Japanese articles. The telegrams suggest that as this action is taken on the eve of the arrival of the Fleet in Japanese waters, there is probably some secret reason for it, but we are disposed to think that a little cheap notoriety is the only motive.

Meanwhile Admiral Evans, whose health appears to be restored, and whose period of service with the Navy has just expired, is quoted as speaking very plainly about the relations between his country and Japan. He expresses great regret that he was not able to remain in command of the Fleet until its arrival in Japan, where he has so many friends, and he declares that unless America forces Japan's hand the latter will never take up arms against the former. The Japanese are the most peace-loving people in the world and they would never make war for the sake of fighting. Some Americans very greatly misinterpret Japan's policy towards China. Japan does not seek to absorb China, but only to lead her into the paths of progress. If America's policy is to maintain the open door and equal opportunities in the Far East, there is no reason to think that Japan desires a different programme.

Meanwhile San Francisco's attitude towards Japan seems to have undergone a wholesome change. We gather from a paragraph in the Asahi Shimbun that the Club formed under the auspices of Mr. Consul Koike has had an excellent effect in promoting friendly relations between Japanese residents and the people of the place, so that now anti-Japanese writing is confined to a few New York journals.

The Jiji Shimpō has at last been moved to comment on the New York Herald's episode. Utterly weary of the whole affair our Tokyo contemporary professes itself to be, but it nevertheless derives some amusement from the idea that a leading journal should base a policy with far reaching international consequences upon the views held by a solitary representative of a Hongkong vernacular newspaper. Naturally, such an attempt has been appraised by the world at its proper worth, and has been laughed down. But still the fact remains that there are people in America who can induce themselves to invent such absurdities. They would see the folly of their notions if they reflected for a moment on what would be involved for Japan were the programme of Asia for the Asiatics consummated. It would mean that Japan would have to turn her back on all the results for which she has laboured during the past 50 years, and that whereas she is now doing her best to introduce Western civilization into China, she would have not merely to abandon that programme, but also to reverse it. Anyone should be able to appreciate the extravagance of such a notion. Yet there are evidently people who do not appreciate it at all, and it is to be hoped that these thoughtless individuals will never succeed in effecting their purpose, namely, in sowing seeds of dissension between the United States and Japan.

The latest scheme of the anti Oriental agitators in the United States is to represent President Roosevelt as having delivered a most intemperate speech at the graduation ceremony of the Newport Naval College on the 31st ult. The President is made to speak in most unqualified terms of the absolute necessity for effectually checking the emigration of inferior races whose contact would tend to vitiate the moral standard of the labouring classes in America. The President certainly qualified this assertion by admitting that it was only proper to respect the sentiments and rights of others, but in the immediate context of that admission he went on to say that, once America had declared her policy, no protests or objections raised by a foreign Power could be allowed to influence her. Passing finally to consider the means of carrying out this programme, he declared that the line-of-battle-ship was the great weapon, and that America must rely upon her fleet.

The San Francisco Call in quoting the above, makes the comment that the object of sending the Battleship Fleet to the Pacific is now unequivocally proclaimed, namely, an armed demonstration for Japan's behoof.

It has for some time been evident, we presume, to the Japanese that their enemies in the United States do not intend to be deterred by any scruples. But the impression now conveyed is that a deliberate attempt is being made to create in Japan such a feeling as will render the visit of the Fleet a dangerous experiment. Grace can not be expected from men who have shown themselves totally indifferent to the duty of veracity, but certainly no language can be too severe for denouncing this latest phase of the plot, which evidently aims at converting into a hostile spirit the hospitable sentiments which inspired Japan to invite the Fleet to her shores. The nefarious scheme is timed so as to synchronise with the near approach of the Fleet to Far Eastern waters, and it is impossible to doubt that the aim is to convert Japanese friendship into rancour just at the critical moment. But we believe that the Japanese will have too much good sense and perspicacity to play into the hands of these detestable stirrers-up of strife. Taught by the reckless falsehoods utilized by the American propagandists of anti Oriental seclusion, we have not a moment's hesitation in dismissing the words attributed to President Roosevelt as a malicious invention of the agitators. The Japanese will certainly entertain a similar view. They have hitherto maintained an admirably patient and level-headed attitude towards the provocations of this petty section of the great American nation, and they have now an opportunity of winning the esteem and the applause of the civilized world by adhering to that attitude throughout. When all is said and done, they have no better friend than America, but it is the fate of the great Republic that it includes among its citizens all classes and conditions of men, and that even its most despicable elements can find means of ventilating their views.

San Francisco sends two telegrams which are no doubt satisfactory to the anti-Japanese agitators. One is that Japan has refused to assent to America's proposals for a treaty to regulate emigration, and that consequently nothing remains except to introduce an exclusion bill in the next session of Congress. It is curious and somewhat incredible that this should have happened while Count Komura was en route from London to Tokyo to take up his duties at the Foreign Office. That such an important matter should have been disposed of in his virtual absence is difficult to believe.

The second telegram comes from Australia via San Francisco. It is to the effect that the more effusive the Australians become in their welcome to the officers and men of the Battleship Fleet, the greater does their anti-Japanese sentiment grow. They are more and more setting their minds upon an Anglo-American alliance to take the place of the Anglo-Japanese. After all, it seems that in this 20th century nothing avails so much as a display of force.

THE EDUCATION OF FOREIGN CHILDREN IN JAPAN.

With the regard to the location of the Educational Institution for foreign children the Japan Advertiser has in optimistic view, one might perhaps be pardoned for assuming that the promoters of the Scheme would be predisposed in favour of Yokohama which, apart from nearness to the capital, enjoys undoubted advantages of population, position and climate. If, however, the proposed Public School is to rely for support mainly on boarding pupils from various parts of Japan and the Far East generally, its location is of less moment.

Nevertheless, the difficulties arising out of differences in method and scope of work would still remain. We are quite at one with our contemporary that for men 'with red blood in their veins' (whatever the precise significance of this limitation may be) to fall foul of one another over such petty concerns is abominable: but unfortunately that is human nature—the half-educated, half-cultured human nature which constitutes the bulk of boasted Occidental civilization. It is a remarkable fact that of all the subjects within the range of human experience the two over which most pettiness and subsequent wrangling are shown are the two over which least should be shown—education and religion. The only hope for future peace and a blissful cessation from troubling lies in mankind's assimilating more of both. Just as 'perfect love casteth out fear' so, we believe, as man gets nearer to perfection in the culture of the mind—in breadth and depth of knowledge—narrow-mindedness, self-obtusiveness and bigotry must disappear. The regrettable feature in the case under consideration is that here, in Japan, the general level of culture evinced by the representatives of the Occident is hardly up to the average. By that single circumstance the difficulties of the situation are both multiplied and vastly increased.

In one minor respect our contemporary errs. Anyone familiar with the educational system followed in England—and, being the product of custom and time rather than of deliberate creation, it is somewhat complex—would soon recognize that the Board School and the Grammar School are things apart. In the first instance, the former represents Elementary Free Education under the ægis of the State: the latter is Secondary Education as provided for by endowments and old foundations, and appeals to a different class of people. Hence, to speak of "the grammar-school stage of the Board School" is to employ a quite anomalous expression. Again, regarded as a part of the Educational Ladder, the Grammar School is successive to the Board School: a boy who passes creditably through the former is ready for the University.

Baron Chinda, Ambassador to Berlin, will leave for his post on Sept. 19th.

THE SEOUL AFFAIR.

Friday, August 21.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun has a telegram from Seoul dated the 20th inst. to the effect that the British Consul-General has now received instructions to hand over Mr. Yang unconditionally to the Korean authorities. It will be remembered that, according to previous intelligence, the extradition was to have been conditional on Yang being allowed to remain in hospital until the day of his trial, but our Tokyo contemporary now wires that the British Government having been convinced of Japan's sincerity in the matter and having acquired a full knowledge of the facts, has instructed the Consul-General to make the surrender unconditional. The telegram adds that Mr. Cockburn is much embarrassed by this order, but we regard that as a superfluous comment. The British Consul-General has doubtless acted in this matter in strict accord with a conscientious conception of his duty. He cannot be actuated by any desire to stand between Yang and the execution of justice. For our own part we entirely fail to see what justification can be derived from the Treaty for the delay that has hitherto occurred, but that there must have been some apparently valid reason we entertain no doubt. Of course the Nichi Nichi Shimbun's telegram may prove premature.

Saturday, August 22.

On the 21st inst. at 11 a.m. Mr. Yang was handed over unconditionally by the British Consul to the Korean authorities. The telegrams say that in spite of the reports circulated as to the serious state of his health, he appeared to be in a normal condition, for he descended the stairs and entered his jimrikisha without any aid. The police authorities had brought with them a doctor to assist Mr. Yang if necessary, but the latter disclaimed any necessity for medical treatment. He will, however, be examined by Dr. Sato before the date for his public trial is fixed. Yang was not taken back to prison, but was conducted to the hospital. It would appear from all this that the stories circulated about Yang's pitiful condition, brought about by confinement in a shockingly unfit prison, were exaggerated, though we may fairly assume that prisons in Korea are not much better than those in China, and we may perhaps hope that this incident will prove an incentive to prison reform.

The telegrams add that the absence of any valid reason on the part of the British Consul-General for refusing to surrender Yang is now clearly demonstrated, and that he stands convicted of having created an altogether needless complication. But although Mr. Cockburn's explanation of his own conduct remains to be heard by the public, it is possible to be confident that he was guided by considerations which appeared to him quite sufficient. We are inclined to infer from incidental statements contained in the telegrams that the Consul-General felt some uncertainty as to whether the charge against Yang should not be classed in the category of political offences. But it is very difficult to imagine that a political character can have been ascribed to an act of embezzlement. The incident is very unfortunate. It has created an exceedingly bad impression and has inspired two local English newspapers, one in Kobe and one in Yokohama, to write in a manner gratuitously offensive to the Japanese. Altogether Mr. Yang was at liberty for 10 days. If he is innocent of the crime laid to his charge, he is to be congratulated on having obtained that respite from the hardships of a Korean jail, but if he is guilty, it is to be feared that the ends of justice have not been furthered.

Sunday, August 23.

According to a telegram to the Hochi Shimbun which may or may not be authoritative, the British Consul-General in Seoul explains that he was not animated by any ill-feeling whatever against Japan, but that in hesitating to hand over Mr. Yang he was influenced by the fact that the original method of arresting the latter was under discussion between the British and Japan authorities, and he therefore not unnaturally hesitated to extradite Yang without reference to the British Government. Mr. Cockburn is not quoted quite so explicitly as these words imply. He does not, according to our contemporary's telegram, state precisely what matter was under discussion between the two Governments at the time that Yang effected his escape, but from the context we conclude that the question related to the manner of Yang's arrest. If that be so, Mr. Cockburn's explanation is, in our opinion, quite satisfactory. It will be remembered that the Seoul police, instead of applying to the British Consul to have Yang's arrest effected while he was still on the premises of his British employer, contrived to entice him away from that haven, and then arrested him beyond extraterritorial limits. This procedure, while not perhaps literally illegal, was certainly irregular, and in our opinion was distinctly unwise. If, in consequence of such an incident, an interchange of views took place between the British and the Japanese authorities, and if, while the discussion was still going on, Mr. Yang succeeded in returning to the office of the Dai Han Mai Il Shimpō, it was natural that Mr. Cockburn should seek special instructions before handing him over. Mr. Cockburn concludes by saying that it is his purpose to retire from the service at the close of this year, and that during his long term of duty in the Far East he has always been in sympathy with Japan, so that it is particularly painful to him to have any sentiment of hostility read into his action about this Yang affair. We (Japan Mail) entertain no doubt that this explanation will be found thoroughly satisfactory. The Consul-General's motives have been greatly misrepresented and distorted by certain publicists, who, interpreting his acts by the light of their own prejudices, assigned to him a position which would have been quite inconsistent with the traditional love of justice that inspires British officials.

CHIENTAO.

A Japanese engineer who has just returned from a tour of examination in the Mouel-shan district, which forms the western part of Chientao, reports that Chinese enterprise has made great strides there during the past 12 months. Forces of police are stationed at various points; post-offices have been opened here and there, so that communications are much more convenient; the bandits who formerly infested the region have disappeared, and a large body of workmen are engaged repairing the road from Chingking to Tung-hwa, which will shorten the journey to Kilin by about one half. The western region of Chientao has not been in open dispute, but it has evidently benefited indirectly from the complication about the eastern and northern regions. China has had the wisdom to make her occupation effective, which is the first essential to obtaining international recognition.

The Mainichi Dempo contains a paragraph which suggests that the Chientao affair is very far from developing an acute phase. The writer sets out by saying that, since the appointment of Count Komura to the Foreign Office in Tokyo, the Japanese Government is awaiting his assumption of duty in order to reach a final settlement of the trouble. He then goes on to explain that all rumours as to reinforcements being sent to the Chinese troops in Chientao are erroneous. They evidently have their origin in a misconception. Troops have certainly moved through Chientao, but their destination has been, not the territory in dispute, but Hunchun, which is on the other side of the Tumen, being the frontier between Chinese territory and Russian. With regard to the recently heard talk of an invasion of Chientao and northern Korea by a force of insurgents under the leadership of Yi Pongyun, it is stated that the Japanese Government, acting on Korea's behalf, approached the Russian Government, since it is in Russian territory that this band of insurgents is supposed to have its headquarters. Russia's reply was most sympathetic, and her local officials issued strict orders against any assistance to, or collusion with, Yi's followers on the part of Russian subjects. The paragraph ends with a statement that the Japanese have in that vicinity a force amply sufficient to deal with any trouble.

JOURNALISM IN JAPAN.

A curious feature of Japanese journalism is the readiness with which the affairs of private commercial and industrial companies are discussed. Four very conspicuous instances of this propensity have been witnessed lately. The first had reference to the Hydro-Electric Company; the second to the Kyushu Timber Company; the third to the Osaka Glass Company, and the fourth to the Tokyo Railway Company. Next to violating the secrecy of family life there is nothing from which an English newspaper shrinks so much as inserting disquisitions about the conditions or business methods of trade or manufacturing concerns, and in no branch of daily life does the law impose severer restrictions upon officious inquisitions or injurious dissertations. But even the best Japanese journals show very little reticence in this respect, and it is impossible to avoid the conviction that they allow themselves, wittingly or unwittingly, to be exploited by persons who have axes to grind or grievances to avenge. Three of the four companies mentioned above are intimately associated with foreigners, and by and by we shall certainly have the question asked whether, if foreigners interest themselves actively in the development of Japan's resources, they are to be exposed to scrutiny which is neither warranted nor impartial and often suggests vindictiveness. Probably the abuse—for by no other name can it be called—has its origin in the unfortunate fact that Japanese editors do not yet recognise responsibility for everything appearing in their columns. They still consider that certain parts of their papers may be specially exempted from scrutiny. The law is very defective if it can not set that right. At any rate the situation is that, while leading Japanese journals openly advocate joint enterprises between foreigners and their countrymen, their attitude towards all business affairs shows a degree of levity which is not encouraging.

FINANCIAL.

Friday, August 21.

We read in the Tokyo Asahi that with regard to the memorial presented by the Clearing Houses to the Government, it has been practically decided that the period for collecting the saki tax shall be changed from March to April. If any inconvenience is entailed next year by this alteration of dates, Treasury bills will be issued or temporary accommodation will be obtained from the Bank of Japan. As to the Debt Redemption Fund, 13 million yen will be added to the amount now appropriated, bringing the total to 50 millions annually. Further, it has been determined, as a matter of course, that unproductive enterprises shall be curtailed to the utmost possible degree and that no new loans shall be floated in connexion with them. But the Government cannot pledge itself to refrain entirely from loans for such enterprises as railway construction or the development of the iron foundry.

Saturday, August 22.

It is announced with regard to the Treasury bills falling due on the 25th inst. that 7,900,000 yen, falling under the heading of the general accounts, will be repaid, and that 2,100,000 yen belonging to the Iron Foundry section will be rewritten. On the other hand bills totalling 18½ millions will be issued for the purposes of the tobacco monopoly at the rate of 1.7 yen daily interest. This means that while the Treasury pays back 5,800,000 yen it borrows 18½ millions, so that the net result is an additional issue of 12,700,000 yen worth of bills.

With regard to the new rate of interest which is 0.1 lower than the last rate, it is officially explained that this is not to be interpreted as prelude to a reduction of the Bank of Japan's rate. The fact is simply that the Government sees indications of the possibility of selling Treasury bills on improved terms, but, as to the Bank of Japan, any reduction of its rate must depend upon the rice harvest, the state of the country's foreign trade and the general financial conditions.

It would need a man of extraordinary perspicacity to piece together into an intelligible whole the various forecasts and surmises published by Tokyo journals with reference to the Cabinet's financial policy. One of the most perplexing elements of these statements is that one never can distinguish between what is mere private conjecture and what is an official dictum. Speaking broadly, there are two main factors in the situation. One is that 180 million yen worth of exchequer bills have to be redeemed by the close of the year 1911; the other, that the loan-bonds resulting from the nationalisation of the railways have to be handed over in less than four years, and many financiers think it necessary that the Treasury should lay in a large reserve in order to prevent sharp depreciation of stocks as a result of this large addition to the State's outstanding securities. The question is how these two factors are to be dealt with simultaneously with an increase of the Debt Redemption Fund, and great divergence of views is shown in answering the question. Our readers would merely be perplexed if we reproduced these views, and we therefore refrain from doing so, especially since the Cabinet's policy must be authoritatively announced before long.

Monday, August 24.

The Governor of the Bank of Japan, Baron Matsuo, speaking through several Tokyo newspapers, repeats the warning already given semi-officially, namely, that the Treasury's action in reducing by one rin the rate of interest on its bills must not be regarded as predicting a similar step on the part of the Bank of Japan. The latter cannot lower its rate of interest without being assured of the existence of conditions which it has not yet taken steps to ascertain. The Treasury has been simply guided by the fact that as considerable sums are lying idle in the strong rooms of the banks, its bills are likely to find ready purchasers even at a reduced rate of interest.

With reference to the financial depression, Baron Matsuo naturally refrains from any hard and fast prediction. He thinks, however, that in the very near future—2 or 3 months at most—all the unsound enterprises which were started in connexion with the post-bellum boom will have passed out of existence and the sound alone will survive. When that state of affairs is reached, considerable sums will be freed for investment, and better times may be confidently expected. The Baron evidently anticipates that between the coming autumn and next spring a distinct improvement will be witnessed.

The period of conjecture about the Cabinet's financial policy, having been prolonged as far as possible, to the convenient filling of many newspaper columns, seems now likely to be changed into a period of attack. The Hochi Shimbun (Progressist organ) leads the way with a criticism that the Ministry's programme is one not of adjustment but of suspension. Adjustment (seiri) means the cutting down of unnecessary expenses and the promotion of useful undertakings, but what the Katsura Cabinet contemplates is a mere checking of the nation's progress. If we knew what the ministerial programme really is, we should be in a better position to estimate the justice of this criticism, and if the Hochi Shimbun knew, its criticism might be more justifiable.

The Fiji Shimpō takes the view that the nation welcomed the Katsura Cabinet back to office because it hoped and expected that Marquis Katsura and his colleagues would gladly seize the opportunity to atone for the mistakes they made when they were last in power. But it appears now that they shrink from any drastic measures in the matter of reducing armaments, their hands being tied by a feeling of reluctance to practically arraign the financial policy of the last Cabinet. This is denounced by the Fiji as a kind of concession to feminine sentiment, and it warns the Katsura Ministry that the nation will have no patience with such paltering.

The Asahi Shimbun takes a broad line. It asks its countrymen what reason they have to be despondent about financial affairs, and it censures their disposition to rush to extremes. At one moment they are full of optimism and ready to put their hands to any enterprise; at another, they are in the depths of pessimism and will not touch even the most promising undertakings. Yet it is the immemorial experience of the world that periods of easy money are always followed by periods of stringency, and vice versa. Europe and America are recovering from their recent depression and Japan also shows signs of renewed health. It is quite certain that she will recover soon. What then is all the present clamour about? Simply about paying off the national debts a little faster or a little slower. People seem to think that national salvation depends upon raising the redemption fund from 37 millions to 50 or 60. But such a question is of quite secondary importance.

Already ample provision is made for redeeming the debt, and nothing is now necessary except to refrain from making further additions to it.

Tuesday, August 25.

According to the Asahi Shimbun there is something like a Cabinet crisis. It arises from the alleged fact that the Prime Minister finds himself opposed in his programme of military retrenchment by the Minister of State for War, and by Mr. Komatsu, head of the Finance Bureau in the Department of War. This retrenchment being a cardinal feature of Marquis Katsura's budgetary policy, his Excellency is represented as quite determined to carry his point, even at the cost of the retirement of the Minister of War and the head of the Finance Bureau. This is more or less confirmed by the Shogyo Shimpō, which, however, attributes the main difficulty to the Naval Department. At all events the Shogyo also alleges that a serious hitch has occurred, and that according to present appearances it will be difficult to carry out the Premier's programme in its entirety. Further the Nippon represents the Army officers and officials as somewhat indignant that the country's defences should be sacrificed for the sake of winning popular applause.

The Mainichi Dempo, on the contrary, tells quite a different story. It alleges that agreement has been practically reached with reference to all the cardinal features of the Cabinet's finance, and that a final settlement of the outlines of the Budget is looked for at the next Cabinet meeting.

Wednesday, August 26.

Tokyo journals agree in stating that, at the Cabinet Council held on the 25th inst., the outlines of the Budget were agreed to without any serious difficulty, the Minister of War giving his consent to the postponements projected in his Department's expenditure. This, it will be observed, is diametrically opposed to the double-leaded forecasts made by these journals in their issues of the 25th inst. It is not often that complete contradiction follows so quickly in the footsteps of assertion. Most people will be disposed to believe that the vital question of adjustments and postponements was discussed and determined before Marquis Katsura decided to accept office, and before his colleagues agreed to range themselves under his leadership. Some of our Tokyo contemporaries refer the unfavourable reports which circulated on the 24th inst. to official manoeuvring with the object of enhancing the value of these financial arrangements, and accentuating the reluctance of the two Services to agree to them. These journals must wish the world to believe that their country's statesmen have a great deal of petty cunning and their nationals an unusual allowance of credulity.

THE EXHIBITION.

The Chuo Shimbun seems to be the great, and indeed it is the only really earnest, advocate of postponing the date fixed for the opening of the Japan Exhibition. It compares the enterprise to a garden party given by a man living in a back alley. Tokyo ought to shrink, our contemporary thinks, from exposing herself to Western nations in her present garb. She is without drains; her system of water-works is incomplete; nearly all her streets are without side-walks; she has no hotels to accommodate visitors, and altogether she is by no means in a condition to advertise herself. Everybody must agree as to this, but some critics condemn postponement on the ground that it would produce a bad effect abroad. As to this latter point the Chuo quotes that very convenient source of information, an anonymous diplomatist. He declares that Japan would not lose anything whatever in the eyes of foreign nations by postponement, as there has been more than one precedent of similar action on the part of foreign States themselves.

All the above may be true enough so far as it goes. But a great deal depends, we should think, on the period of postponement. One or two years' delay would probably be accepted without comment, but postponement for 5 or 6 years, as is now suggested, would certainly cause a great deal of astonishment. Improvements calling for such an expenditure of time ought to have been evident two years ago just as plainly as they are to-day, and the impossibility of carrying them out before 1912 should have been equally evident.

There continues to be a great deal of talk about the possible postponement of the Exhibition, but we observe that the advocates of such a step seem to be silenced for the moment at all events. The officials are quoted as scuttling the idea, and alleging that the step would greatly impair Japan's reputation. Viscount Kaneko has been interviewed, but his utterances are not altogether clear, though, according to our interpretation, he is opposed to postponement. As for Mr. Ozaki Yukio, he is most emphatic in his condemnation of the notion. He scoffs at folks who croak about the expense, and he predicts that if Tokyo has to find a few million yen for the purposes of preparation, it will be recouped eventually to the tune of some hundred millions.

The former Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, Mr. Matsuoka, has been interviewed by the Mainichi Dempo on the subject of postponing the Exhibition. He is radically opposed to anything of the kind. It appears from his remarks that on the part of the Ministers of Home Affairs and Finance in the last Cabinet there was some talk of postponing the Exhibition until the 50th year of Meiji (1917), but such a postponement would entirely change the character of the affair by removing it from the category of post-bellum enterprises where it was placed by its projectors. Even if the postponement were made, and if, instead of spending 10 millions on preparations, 30 or even 40 millions were laid out, the gulf between the result and the great displays of a similar character in Western countries would remain as wide as ever. There are, as a matter of fact, no real financial difficulties in the way. Out of the 10 millions to be spent, the City of Tokyo is to provide three, two are expected to be realised by the sale of tickets, and the remainder is put up by the Treasury. Five millions spread over nearly as many years can scarcely embarrass the Government. Mr. Matsuoka dwells justly upon the very injurious construction that foreign nations would give to a postponement of the Exhibition at this stage after they have been formally invited to participate and have actually taken steps accordingly.

We may mention here that the United States Commissioner, Mr. Loomis, has reached San Francisco en route for Japan and seems to have secured hearty co-operation on the part of the merchants and manufacturers in that city.

It is announced by the Asahi Shimbun, as a matter of absolute certainty, that a postponement of the Exhibition until the 50th year of Meiji has been practically decided by the Cabinet. The Shogyo Shimpō bears this out, and assigns as an ostensible reason the financial difficulty of properly organising the scheme, though the basic fact is that the leading members of the present Cabinet were never in favour of the enterprise, their view being that on the contemplated lines it would be neither one thing nor the other. The Minister of Agriculture and Commerce has been questioned on the subject, and is said to have replied that he could not give any definite answer, the matter being under debate. The Yomiuri Shimbun, on the other hand, quotes an anonymous business-man as saying that all this talk of postponement is merely a prelude to granting a larger sum for the purposes of the Exhibition. According to this authority the Cabinet has no real desire to postpone, but in view of its general policy of retrenchment it hesitates to grant any larger subsidy while nevertheless recognising that the sum originally contemplated is too small. Hence it wishes to strengthen its hand by obtaining something like a popular demonstration against postponement.

Tokyo newspapers are unanimous in declaring in their issues of the 26th inst. that it has been decided to postpone the Exhibition until 1917, so that it shall be a semi-centennial celebration marking the 50th year of the Meiji Era, in other words, of his Majesty's accession to the Throne. It will then be converted into a genuine national exhibition, and there will be plenty of time to carry out all the associated preparations. This is published by our contemporaries as though it were absolutely assured, but they add a most unlikely rider, namely, that the fact will not be officially proclaimed until after the Budget has been fully drafted, because it is from the Budget that conclusive reasons for postponement are to be obtained. We can not credit this. If the Exhibition is to be deferred, nothing, we think, could be less wise than to place finance in the forefront of the causes assigned. We can well understand that the Government, finding it impossible to divest the project of an international character, and deeming it equally impossible to organise it at such short notice on a scale commensurate with that character, sees reasons for postponement, more especially as the new date would be a very special and attractive occasion. But to tell the world that such a change of programme is suddenly to be made because a paltry sum of money can not be furnished would be to astonish believers in Japan's credit. Already the mere rumour of postponement has had a depressing effect upon the share market, and, if it be confirmed, much of the good effects of the Cabinet's financial policy will be undone. It has to be remembered, however, that the decision of this question rests with the Diet, and as the Seiyū-kai fathered the original project, they are scarcely likely to vote for its overthrow. Two other points deserve to be noticed; one is that Viscount Kaneko and Mr. Sakai flatly deny the rumour; the other is that unanimity on the part of the Tokyo press generally means nothing more than that they have derived their information from the same source, namely, a news agency. But it is a curious idiosyncrasy of Tokyo newspapers to refrain from all mention of these agencies, and the consequence is that the public are often completely misled.

All the Tokyo newspapers again concur in alleging that the Government has made up its mind to seek the Diet's approval for postponing the Exhibition until the year 1917. Baron Oura, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, is quoted as saying that he does not see how the requisite preparations for an international exhibition can possibly be made in time for 1912, or how anything worthy of Japan could be accomplished with the petty sum now appropriated for the purpose. As to the objection that land has already been purchased for the site, he regards that as a mere bagatelle. The land is a valuable asset which may be expected to appreciate steadily. Meanwhile the Tokyo Municipal Authorities are organising strong opposition to postponement. They have appointed a committee to wait upon the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and they purpose bringing the question before the City Assembly as well as organising popular demonstrations.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun thinks that the prevalence of this rumour has exercised a wholesome effect upon the shares of some companies, notably the Tokyo Gas, the Tokyo Electric Light and the Tokyo Stock Exchange, all of which expected to have to pay special taxes on account of the Exhibition.

On the whole, public opinion, so far as Tokyo is concerned, will range itself against the Government in this matter, assuming that the Government really entertains the intention attributed to it. The Fuji Shimpō writes very strongly on the subject, and declares that to postpone the Exhibition now would be like advertising to the world the embarrassed state of Japan's finances. If on the other hand it be thought that the petty sum of 5 million yen, which the Treasury was pledged to advance in six years under the programme, is too small, why not increase it? The loss to Japan by postponing the Exhibition will not be covered by many millions of yen.

Mr. Nakano Buye, President of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce, speaks also in unequivocal terms of condemnation.

Of course the views of Tokyo, which is directly interested, must be more or less discounted. Meanwhile it has always to be remembered that the Exhibition can not be postponed without the Diet's consent, and to us it seems very unlikely that the Cabinet will invite a collision with the House of Representatives on such an issue.

THE CULTURE LEVEL OF THE FOREIGN COMMUNITY.

To our amiable contemporary the Japan Gazette we suggest the expediency of a little more care in reading matter with a view to criticism. In its own choice phraseology it accuses us of dirtying our own nest because we spoke of a comparatively low average of culture among certain circles in Japan. The public to which our remark applied were the sections of the foreign communities which would be likely to send their children to the proposed local school. These sections would not be wholly representative. We have more than once stated our belief that if a community equal in number to that residing at any of the treaty ports were blocked out at random from any European or American nation, the culture level of the treaty-port residents would be found much the higher.

The Crown Prince of Korea returned from Hakone to Tokyo on Aug. 27th, arriving at Shimabashi at 3.53 p.m.

KOREA.

Friday, August 21.

The arrangements for the organisation of the Eastern Colonization Company seem to be progressing rapidly. The Committee of Establishment, consisting of 110 persons of whom 30 are Koreans, will meet in Tokyo on the 10th of September to discuss details. It is expected that the Korean members will leave Seoul on the 3rd proximo. The programme of the Company, we read, will be to deal with agriculture and finance at the outset, and subsequently to extend its operations to marine products and forestry. The Asahi Shimbun gives figures which suggest that a very lucrative career lies before the Company. In the matter of agricultural land, the price at present ruling in Korea is only 250 yen per cho (2½ acres), whereas the price in Japan is 600 yen, and moreover in the matter of taxation the advantage is all on Korea's side. Then, as to financial work, the rate of interest now ruling in the Korean market is 5 sen per diem, whereas in Japan the highest rate is 27 sen, so that there is here a very large margin for profitable operations. Then finally the Company will have official aid to the extent of 300,000 yen annually, so that it would be able to distribute a dividend of 6 percent. on its paid up capital, even if it realizes no profit whatever from its work, a very unlikely result. In these circumstances it is thought probable that before October, in which month the Company is to be floated, all the shares will have been taken up by the promoters and there will be no appeal to the general public.

Tokyo papers state that Lady On has decided to visit Japan in October for the purpose of meeting her son the Prince Imperial, who is now residing in Tokyo.

A strange story comes from Chemulpo that the steamer Hokkoku Maru, which is entrusted with the duty of protecting Japanese fishing boats in that part of Korean waters, ran ashore on Kanghwa Island on the afternoon of the 19th inst. Before the tide rose high enough to float her off she became a target for rifle-practice by a party of 300 insurgents who assembled on a neighbouring hill. There do not appear to have been any casualties, and a party of Japanese gendarmes was quickly despatched to the place.

Saturday, August 22.

The Seoul Press deals most effectually with the accusations of secrecy which have been preferred against the Japanese by more than one English journal in connexion with the insurrection in Korea. It says that the only time when secrecy was preserved was at the close of last spring and the beginning of this summer. The process of re-distributing the troops and gendarmes in the disaffected regions was then going on, and naturally the obvious precaution was taken of veiling these dispositions from the public. Since then, however, bulletins have been published nearly every day, showing the military operations briefly and concisely. There is nothing at all striking about these reports, for, as a matter of fact, the encounters which take place are for the most part with mere brigands. As to the criticisms founded on silence about the Japanese losses, our Seoul contemporary explains what we ourselves have already pointed out and what must be obvious to every thoughtful person, namely, that at one time the suppression of information as to Japanese casualties was dictated by wise prudence. But since then all fatal casualties have been, and are, regularly published in the Tokyo Official Gazette. The truth is that the so-called insurgents are so ill-armed that they seldom get within range of the Japanese before the issue is decided. It results that, whereas nearly 12,000 of the insurgents have been killed since the trouble began 14 months ago, the casualties on the side of the Japanese troops have been only some 70 killed and 170 wounded. Our contemporary thinks that the casualties among the gendarmes and police have not exceeded those among the troops.

Monday, August 24.

The usual bulletin of insurrection news which appears in the Seoul Press of the 21st inst. shows that between the 26th of July and the 15th inst. there were 11 encounters between the insurgents and Japanese troops or gendarmes, with the result that 53 of the insurgents were killed and sundry arrests and seizures of arms were made.

Tuesday, August 25.

We learn from the Seoul correspondent of the Asahi Shimbun that there is an anti-Ito party among the Japanese in Seoul, and that its members have been making themselves very busy of late in anticipation of the Prince's appointment to the office of President of the Privy Council. But since it turns out that there is no truth in this rumour, and that the Resident-General's return to Korea early next month may be anticipated, the party in question are now somewhat embarrassed, and talk is heard of Viscount Sone's resignation from his present post for the purpose of entering the Cabinet. It will be observed that this correspondent indirectly hints at a connexion between Viscount Sone and the anti-Ito men, but the whole story is too vague to be worthy of much attention.

On the morning of the 24th inst. there was another outbreak in the Seoul jail. Some 30 of the prisoners attacked the wardens, and the latter were finally obliged to use their rifles, with the result that two of the prisoners were killed and one was wounded. This is the third episode which has occurred at the Seoul prison during the past few months, and the reputation of the place has suffered much in consequence.

Nothing definite is wired this morning about the Yang affair, but the Hochi Shimbun publishes a vague telegram saying that Messrs. Yang and Bethell have been ordered to take suitable steps with regard to the missing money. Considering that Mr. Bethell has not been arrested, and is not officially included in the accusation against Mr. Yang, this telegram is difficult to interpret.

It is stated that, according to reports received from the various provinces in Korea, the rice crop this year promises to be exceptionally fine. The fact has been reported formally to the Emperor.

Wednesday, August 26.

The Mainichi Dempo's Seoul correspondent wires that Baron Dr. Sato has made a careful examination of Mr. Yang, who is now in hospital, and has found that he is suffering from a slight catarrh of the stomach, which is a common complaint among the Koreans. The correspondent adds that the statements circulated about Yang's condition are thus proved to have been falsehoods. If this correspondent had said "exaggerations" instead of "falsehoods" we should have been inclined to agree with him, because in the excitement produced by Yang's arrest and by its collateral possibilities the judgment of people on the spot was not unlikely to be more or less warped. But it has to be remembered that Dr. Sato's examination of Mr. Yang took place nearly a fortnight after his escape from prison, and if he is afflicted with catarrh of the stomach, it may have been greatly accentuated by his incarceration, although the acute symptoms had yielded to treatment before his examination by the eminent Japanese physician.

There is a somewhat obscure telegram from Seoul published by the Hochi Shimbun. It says that the Committee of the National Dept Redemption Society has held a meeting and has determined that an accurate account of the disposal of the monies collected shall be furnished within the space of one week. The Committee has further removed the names of Mr. Bethell and Mr. Yang from the rôle of membership, and the telegram concludes by saying that there is considerable excitement. The obscure feature of the message is its reference to the accounts of the Fund. We do not gather by whom these accounts are to be compiled, but we presume that as the names of Messrs. Bethell and Yang have been removed from the list, it is not to them that the Committee addresses itself when called for a statement of the disposition of the money.

Thursday, August 27.

Certainly the editor of the Dai Ihan Min-I Shimpō has attained a notoriety which he never could have reasonably expected. The state of his health now occupies the telegraph wires. The public has already been informed that Baron Dr. Sato had pronounced him to be suffering merely from a slight form of chronic catarrh of the stomach, and the cable now adds that, according to the eminent Japanese physician, Mr. Yang's heart and lungs are quite sound, but that he possibly suffers from a trifling headache. This must be pleasant news for Yang himself in one sense, but it gives rather a silly appearance to the shocking accounts published by his friends while he was still in jail.

Two encounters are reported between Japanese troops and insurgents on the 24th and 26th inst., dates which seem a little apocryphal, for hitherto such a remarkably rapid transmission of news has never taken place with regard to the insurgents. However, the Nichi Nichi Shimbun is responsible. One of the encounters was in Kyongsando and the other in southern Chhollado. Twenty-two insurgents were killed in each case.

COUNT KOMURA.

Count Komura has arrived at Shimono-seki and has been subjected to the usual ordeal of newspaper interviewers. His Excellency seems to have been very cautious in his utterances. He declined altogether to speak of the state of political affairs in Europe, and confined himself to saying that the frequent goings and comings of crowned heads is not without significance. He went on to say that in passing through Paris he had conferred with the Japanese Ambassador, Baron Kurino, and in Vienna with the latter's colleague, Baron Uchida, but he could not make it convenient to visit Berlin. It had given him supreme satisfaction to observe the markedly changed character of Russia's mood towards his country, and he spoke in the warmest terms of the treatment tendered to him, and of the welcome he had received. The Russian Government had given him a special carriage on the railway from Moscow to Changchun, and he had had an opportunity of seeing and appreciating the improved condition of the Siberian Railway. The great feature of his journey had been his meeting with Count de Witte and Mr. Iswolsky. With the latter he had exchanged views on an important topic. The Emperor was absent from St. Petersburg at the time of Count Komura's arrival in that city, and he had consequently failed to have the honour of an audience.

Count Komura, on his journey through the Inland Sea by the Tetsurei Maru afforded an unique opportunity to the interviewers. He is quoted as having made some interesting remarks about newspapers. The American press does not receive any encomium at his hands. He thinks that the great majority of American journals deal in sensation, and concern themselves only with catering to the taste of the masses. Unfortunately the English press has been tainted by the same spirit. Even the Standard has descended from its old pedestal of eminent respectability. The Times alone maintains its ancient standard. No paper can compare with it in point of influence. Of late its foreign department has shown some signs of slackness, but probably that is owing to the absence of Mr. Chirol, who has been sick for nearly three months. Incomparable as The Times is, however, it has a circulation of only 50,000, whereas the Daily Mail, which lays itself out to cater for the lower orders, is said to sell some 900,000 copies. The Daily Telegraph also has 200,000 buyers and The Standard about 100,000. Nothing is more regrettable than the decadence of such magazines as the Fortnightly and the Contemporary. Great men like Gladstone, Morley etc., used formerly to contribute to these periodicals, but now their pages are filled with articles by men who have studied only how to please the passing fancies of the public. As for the European journals, Count Komura expresses profound astonishment at the stories they tell. He alludes in particular to the recent rumour, which was telegraphed all over the world, East as well as West, to the effect that during the manoeuvres of the British Channel Squadron, the Kaiser's yacht had suddenly made its appearance, and steamed round the ships of the Fleet. That is just the kind of sensational canard that finds favour, the features that commend it being that it is at once highly interesting and quite credible by thoughtless folks.

Mr. Heki, Secretary of the Japanese Embassy in Berlin, was travelling by the same steamer to Tokyo preparatory to taking up his duties as Minister to Chili. He added some comments about the German press. In his opinion there is no country in the world where the Government makes such use of newspapers as in Germany. There is hardly a journal of any importance that is not a semi official organ. Compared with the English and American papers the advantage is with the Germans in point of gravity.

We may mention that Mr. Heki contradicts in most emphatic terms an impression not uncommonly held in Japan that Germany is unfriendly to this country. That is a great mistake. The very opposite is the truth. As for Germany's progress in manufactures and art, it can not be spoken of too enthusiastically. A great deal of the impetus is due to the Emperor. His activity is something almost marvellous. There is no sphere of national life which does not feel his encouragement. He is entirely sans facons. Mr. Heki relates how his Majesty paid a visit one day to the Japanese Embassy, and how on another occasion the Kaiser greeted him, Mr. Heki, with o-hayo, which was laughingly construed as representing his Majesty's knowledge of the Japanese language. As for the hostile feeling between Germany and England, it is happily being lived down by the good sense of the two nations, but as it is a sentiment of old standing its complete eradication must be a matter of time.

FIGHTING THE INSURGENTS IN KOREA.

The Japanese troops and gendarmes in Korea owe a debt of gratitude to their profoundly wise newspaper critic in Yokohama, the Japan Gazette, for pointing out the necessity of fully recognising the identity of Korean insurgents before opening fire on them. It is not enough that the Koreans should assemble in parties which offer armed resistance, not is it enough that their movements should be under clear observation with the field-glasses which staff officers of a well equipped army always carry. There is a special element in this affair. It is that the Koreans do not possess far-ranging arms of precision, but only matchlocks or inferior rifles of old pattern which can not inflict fatal injury at longer distances than from two to three hundred yards. If they carried good modern rifles, it would of course be quite en rigle to identify them by the usual methods. But since they are so poorly equipped it is necessary to move within much shorter range of them before concluding that they are insurgents. There is no occasion for the Japanese to apply the ordinary processes of reasoning to this warning. They need not puzzle themselves to explain why a body of troops, before opening fire on an advancing enemy, is bound to ascertain the exact nature and pattern of the arms he carries. All that kind of thinking has been done for them by the Yokohama critic, whose knowledge of field operations is exhaustive. The fact must be accepted as incontrovertible that the power of human vision is limited by the nature of its object's armament, and that much closer observation is needed to recognise the disposition of a man carrying a matchlock than the character of a man carrying a long-range rifle.

We observe that our industrious contemporary the Japan Herald is engaged in a very perturbed search for the truth about the Korean insurrection, and we would gladly render assistance in the arduous quest, did we not lie under the politely preferred charge of "deliberately attempting to hoodwink the public as to the real conditions in the peninsula." Still it seems worth while to point out that what was quite consistent with facts a month ago may require modification in the circumstances of to day. There is just a possibility, is there not, that whereas insurgents may still have been going pretty strong in the middle of July, their resistance may have waned to a very desultory kind of business by the middle of August? If our benign contemporary be not too much flustered by the exigencies of his search after truth, he might be able to comprehend the proposition that a Korean insurrection, never in its palmiest days a particularly puissant affair, can scarcely be perennial, that it must "slow down" at some period of its career, and that a publicist who represents it as moribund when that final period has arrived, is not necessarily contradicting the statements he made about it before it had fully entered the declining grade. After all, if it be true, as the Seoul Press alleges, that some 12,000 Koreans have bit the dust during the 15 months of the insurrection's duration, the unhappy folks ought to be growing a little tired by this time. They can not have many more men to sacrifice, and, therefore, even at the risk of being again arraigned on the count of "deliberate hoodwinking," we venture to repeat the assertion, made in these columns ten days ago, that, under the guidance of common sense and high authority, we believe the insurrection to have dwindled down to comparatively insignificant dimensions. Finally, without desiring to seem at all inquisitive, we should like to ask why either our informant or ourselves should be suspected of a desire to misrepresent the facts of this insurrection, and why we should be courteously accused of "deliberately attempting to hoodwink the public." We fear that our picturesquely plain-spoken contemporary will find difficulty in carrying his search for truth to a satisfactory issue if he regards as designing romancers all the persons he encounters en route.

THE "MIYE MARU."

A very pitiful account of the adventures of the Miye Maru's crew is given by Takano Takejiro, one of the 28 men released (including an American citizen) who have reached Tsuruga on their way back from Vladivostok. He says that the whole of the crew on arriving at Nicolaiask were thrust into an indescribably dirty prison, and were allowed only a sum equivalent to 13 sen Japanese for purchasing their daily food, so that they had to subsist on a few slices of bread. In fact, they were treated like the worst of criminals, although the charge against them was only poaching, and it had not yet been proved. When the day came for marching them down to the quay to go on board the Silka, they were driven through the streets, which were knee-deep in mud, by a detachment of Cossacks, who freely used the butts of their rifles to accelerate the pace of the prisoners by pushing and pounding. During this process the head of one party was laid open by a clubbed rifle, and the sight so infuriated another Japanese that he began to throw stones and inflicted a slight injury on one of the escort. The party was then marched back and confined with greater rigour than ever, being shut into a cemented chamber where they had nothing but their own overcoats to lie on, and where they received for daily provisions only a small modicum of bread. Gradually they fell ill with dysentery owing to the confinement and the polluted atmosphere, but their sickness brought no relaxation of prison discipline. One day a Russian officer and a small detachment of soldiers arrived. They singled out 8 of the crew, placed them in a group and photographed them. The prisoners had no idea what this portended, but subsequently the photographed men were arraigned before a court-martial, and only two of them rejoined their comrades with the news that the other six had been condemned to death.

The above details are published in nearly all the Tokyo journals, and it seems only fair to reproduce them here, though the incident may be said to have been disposed of. Doubtless the man who tells the story puts a good deal of personal equation into it, but, even when full allowances are made on that score, there remains enough to suggest that Russian prisons and the treatment of prisoners by Russians leave a good deal to be desired.

CHINA.

Friday, August 21.

It was supposed some time ago that the telegraphic questions at issue between China and Japan would be settled at the International Telegraph Union Conference recently held in Lisbon. But we now gather that the discussion of the matter will take place in Japan, whither China will send representatives.

The bandits in Mongolia are reported to be very busy. Possibly having found that Manchuria was growing too hot for them they have crossed over into Mongolia, though indeed the latter country has never been free from this pest. We now read that in the recent raid on a train in Manchuria two Chinese subjects and one Japanese were wounded, and that the Japanese is not expected to recover.

Saturday, August 22.

The truth is difficult to decipher about the recent alleged case of smuggling arms and ammunition into the province of Fuhkien. The local correspondent of the North China Daily News sends to that journal the following version of that affair:—

The two sailing ships which were recently arrested at Ch'uan-chou, Fuhkien, on the charge of gun-running, have arrived at Amoy with a Chinese gun-boat as an escort; the two Japanese who were on board the ships when the latter were arrested have been brought before the Amoy authorities and, as the men were passengers and had no connexion whatever with the case, they have been released.

On the other hand Tokyo papers publish telegrams saying that an investigation is about to be held at Amoy and that it will probably have to be ultimately carried to Peking.

Sunday, August 23.

It is stated that the Chinese Government has decided to add to the number of colleges included in the Peking University, and to organise the whole after the Japanese models. Two delegates are to be sent to Japan for the purpose of inspecting and reporting upon the buildings and the system of the Imperial University in Tokyo.

A telegram to the Asahi Shimbun from Peking says that it has been resolved to raise a foreign loan for the redemption of the Lu-Han Railway by hypothecating the post-office revenues of the three Provinces Pechili, Hupeh and Kiangsu.

Monday, August 24.

The Mainichi Dempo and the Asahi Shimbun have telegrams from Amoy via Shanghai, saying that the arms which were secretly landed at Chingchow in Fuhkien have been released, but the two vessels have been confiscated. This is difficult to understand, for if there was any violation of the loan, it had to do with the arms and ammunition. Assume the latter to have been carried in the course of lawful trade and the innocence of this carrier follows necessarily.

Kilin and the Amur region are anxious to have a hand in the preparations for a Chinese National Assembly. They have memorialized the Throne, praying to be allowed to send delegates to the Council in Peking.

The storm which visited South Manchuria on the 20th instant seems to have done much damage to the Railway, especially in the vicinity of Telisu and Shunyochin. It is also stated that the waters of the Amur and the Sungari have risen to an exceptional height, and that inundations are apprehended.

Tuesday, August 25.

If telegrams from Mukden may be trusted, there is at length a prospect of settling the long outstanding question of the Yalu Timber Enterprise. We read that the main point hitherto in dispute has been the period of validity in the case of the arrangements between the Chinese and Japanese Governments. The Convention says that the enterprise shall be transferred to private hands 10 years after its inception, and the Chinese authorities at Mukden were desirous of arranging that the regulations now enacted should cease to have binding force on the expiration of that period. But the Japanese Plenipotentiaries wished that certain parts of the covenant now entered into should remain valid throughout the whole 25 years of the Convention's existence. The latest news is that Mr. Tang Shaof, who recently returned to Mukden from Peking, has acceded to the Japanese view, and thus it may be expected that a few more conferences will see the completion of the agreement, and that it will be published early next month.

Wednesday, August 26.

The Mainichi Dempo has a message from Peking saying that his Excellency Wu Tingfang, Chinese Representative in Washington, has sent a secret telegram to his Government the gist of which is approval of the idea of an alliance between China and the United States in consideration of the benevolence shown by the latter in restoring a part of the Boxer indemnity, and in consideration of the advantages that such an alliance would offer for restraining the ambitions of certain Powers.

If the above was a secret telegram, we should like to know how the contents became known to the correspondent of the Tokyo journal. Men who get access to important and secret State documents and who in publishing them announce their secret character, can not expect to be taken literally. One is much more disposed to attach credence to the Peking correspondence of the Jiji Shimpō which says that by the majority of foreigners in that city the talk of a Sino-American alliance is regarded as empty babble, and the idea of its being promoted by Wu Tingfang is considered ridiculous. In governmental circles, however, the "smart party," who represent a very small section, are disposed to believe in the story, and some of the vernacular newspapers endorse it. It is easy to see that such a consummation would be very welcome to many Chinese.

The public has been led to believe by reports emanating from Amoy that a diplomatic question would ultimately arise out of the seizure of arms carried by two junks to Chingchow, but there does not seem to be any reason to apprehend that the affair will assume such magnitude. The two junks cleared from Kelung carrying 12,000 stand of small arms, according to some authorities, 8,000 according to others. Whatever the exact number may be, however, the claim of the junk-owners is that the arms were imported, not as serviceable weapons, but as scrap-iron; and the Kelung harbour authorities allege that they gave clearance to the junks on the strength of that description of the rifles. This is confirmed by a statement that on careful examination the arms were found to be quite useless for fighting purposes, with the exception of 2,000 stand, which, if repaired, might prove temporarily serviceable. The Mainichi Dempo's telegrams say that, had the Chinese authorities treated the matter in a moderate spirit, there need not have been any complication, but at present there is an extravagant disposition to regard with suspicion every transaction into which arms enter. We are bound to say, however, that the Chinese may well be excused for closely scrutinising this scrap-iron claim. To unsophisticated ears it sounds rather hollow.

Telegrams to the Asahi Shimbun from Canton say that the anti-Japanese spirit, which had been somewhat chilled by the recent inundations and storms, has burst into fresh flame. The local newspapers have combined to renew their attacks upon Japan, and the inhabitants have held meetings at which it was determined to place the boycott on a stricter footing than ever. This correspondent alleges that the relief sent by the Japanese to the sufferers from the inundations has had effects directly contrary to what might have been expected. The Chinese have interpreted it as a studied endeavour to buy off the boycott by a cheap display of charitable intention. All this is very unfortunate. One does not see where the trouble is to end, and it is difficult to think that if the Canton local authorities were animated by any feeling of friendship towards Japan, they would be unable to check this spirit of enmity.

Thursday, August 27.

The Belgian Government is said to have applied to the Waiwupu for a special Belgian settlement in the Yangtze valley, at Hankow for choice. The Viceroy concerned has been instructed to make the necessary investigations. Considering the active part taken by Belgium in the finance and commerce of the Far East, it seems natural that she should entertain the above idea, but on the other hand the number of her subjects residing in the Yangtze valley is scarcely sufficient to warrant an independent settlement.

The Mainichi Dempo is informed from Shanghai that the shareholders in the Chinese Telegraph Company have yielded to official pressure, and disposed of their shares to the Communications Bureau at a price of about 170 dollars. Those who took this step at an early stage of the proceedings realized 180 dollars. They were wise in their generation. It is stated that the Bureau contemplates extensive reforms.

His Excellency, Mr. Cheng, Viceroy of Hukwan, is stated to have memorialized the Central Government in favour of establishing local factories for the manufacture of foreign paper and nails. His Excellency is represented as having become alarmed by the large import of these articles which has taken place of late. He considers that by some occult process the rights of China are menaced with invasion.

Telegrams received in Tokyo say that the Chingchow affair has been settled on the basis of confiscation of the arms and ammunition by the Chinese authorities. It is difficult to know what the two junks were really carrying. The first account spoke of a large quantity of ammunition as well as of arms, but subsequently nothing was heard of except scrap-iron rifles. Now in the end, however, we return to ammunition, and the fact seems to dispose of the scrap-iron plea, for even the most credulous person must hesitate to associate ammunition with useless rifles. It remains to be seen therefore on what ground the Kelung harbour officials granted clearance to these two junks.

The Hongkong correspondent of the N.-C. Daily News sends, under date of August 12th, the following account of the results of the recent typhoon in Canton:—

sentation of the damage done by the typhoon to the city and neighbourhood of Canton. The injury shows that more than eight hundred boats and junks were lost. Several guardboats also were destroyed; one of their captains and about thirty soldiers and marines were drowned. Thirty steam-launches belonging to business firms either sank outright or were very badly damaged, while four revenue cutters, belonging to the Salt Commissioner, were destroyed. The exact number of lives lost cannot be known, but it is put down at several hundreds, and will probably be left at this uncertain figure. These statistics refer to Canton and the immediate neighbourhood only, for it is stated by the Viceroy, in his dispatch to Peking, that he is making further inquiries into the condition of affairs in some of the country districts around the city, and he finds things in these neighbourhoods, though not so appalling as they are in Canton, quite bad enough, and there are many people in need of help.

After all, since the breach was healed between the Conservatives and the Liberals, or between those who opposed women and girls taking part in the sales at the bazaar and those who were strongly in favour of this innovation, the work has gone on merrily, and the result is splendid. I see that the total of the subscriptions given by the local officials amounts to about $7,000. Of this sum the Viceroy heads the list with $1,000. Large sums also have been given by individual Chinese, among whom two have been most conspicuous. One has given altogether about $170,000. The other, though not approaching this large amount, has given what, were it not eclipsed by this sum, would be called a princely donation. It is not possible yet to ascertain what the grand total will be for the relief of the sufferers from the floods, but it may safely be affirmed that there will be many lacs of dollars secured. It will all be needed ere the dykes are rebuilt, and the people put back in possession of their fields and houses, with a little seed corn given to the farmers with which to start again.

PRINCE ITO.

Each occasion of Prince Ito's return to Japan from Seoul has inspired rumours as to his retirement from the office of Resident-General, and the present occasion has not been any exception to the rule. This time, indeed, exceptional credence seems to have been given to the rumour, and there has been corresponding anxiety not only in Japanese official circles, but also among all the Koreans who have thrown in their lot with the cause of reform. It is now stated that these apprehensions have been allayed by the Prince's recent utterances at Maiko; utterances which, though not absolutely definite, were sufficiently explicit to warrant the conclusion that his Highness intends not to turn his back upon his Korean task until he has carried things to completion. It has been a work of incalculable difficulty. In normal circumstances, the introduction of reforms in a country where they were so badly needed, and by a Power so closely interested as Japan, ought to have been capable of tolerably easy achievement. But it has happened unfortunately that this work synchronised with a time when Japan had to run the gauntlet of exceptionally adverse Occidental opinion, and had to endure attacks and aspersions so insistent and so unreasoning that whatever she did in Korea, or anywhere else, was misconstrued and harshly judged. This extraordinary state of affairs created an opportunity for a small band of foreign agitators to make Korea their headquarters, and to organise a crusade against Japan, which, whatever may have been the real motives inspiring it, was disfigured by bias so vindictive as to be little short of scandalous. A campaign of the kind would have been at once discounted by public opinion had not it coincided with Japan's momentary unpopularity, but it derived strength from fortuitous association with the accidents of the time, and how much it complicated the Resident General's task can be appreciated by any thoughtful onlooker. It is true that Prince Ito himself has escaped direct attack. His reputation as a statesman stands too high to be assailed by the little publicists who have been seeking the bubble notoriety in the Korean field. But they have not hesitated to attack his work and to impugn his wisdom. It would therefore be a great pity if he abandoned his task before the world has been compelled to acknowledge his success, and before Korea has been carried far enough along the path of progress to put an end to her potentialities as a disturber of the peace of the East.

The recent journey of the Korean Prince Imperial in company with Prince Ito seems to have produced a very good effect in Korea where daily accounts of his Imperial Highness' doings have been published. The Emperor of Korea is said to have sent decorations to the various Governors of prefectures which were visited by the Imperial party, and the ex-Emperor has addressed Prince Ito in a warm telegram despatched in his Majesty's name. This telegram begins by inquiring after Prince Ito's health during the hot season, and goes on to express gratitude for the opportunity which the Crown Prince has been given of familiarising himself with men and things on a wide scale. Prince Ito has replied, thanking the ex-Emperor for his gracious inquiries, assuring him that the Crown Prince has enjoyed his trip and is in excellent health, and concluding by saying that the party has returned to Oiso, where the Crown Prince will spend a few days at Prince Ito's sea-side villa.

THE YANG AFFAIR.

We observe with much regret that the Japan Gazette is deliberately seeking to drag inter-racial prejudices into the case of the Korean subject, Mr. Yang, who is charged with embezzlement of money entrusted to his care. It devotes a column and a half in its issue of the 19th instant to marshalling reasons for suspecting that Yang's arrest and arraignment were dictated solely by a vindictive desire on the part of the Japanese Authorities to be avenged on him because in the Bethell trial he gave evidence unpalatable to the prosecution. In other words, the Japanese judicial officials who have been engaged in Yang's preliminary examination, and the Japanese Resident in Seoul who is endeavouring to obtain his surrender of to justice, are distinctly accused by the Japan Gazette of trumping up a criminal charge against an innocent man and seeking to procure for him the fate of a felon, solely in obedience to their malicious anger because he ventured to tell unwelcome truths in a court of law. Even in the days when the Treaty-Revision contest was at its height and when the foreign residents were readiest to listen to anything which might discredit Japan, we do not remember that such a gross insult was ever offered to the Japanese authorities. Is there anything in the modern history of this country to warrant such opprobrious assaults? One has only to consider what kind of outcry would be raised were the case reversed, and were British officials the butt of similar accusations at Japanese hands. It is quite plain that there never can be anything like genuine friendship between the British residents and the people among whom they live while such shameless insults are levelled at the head of the Japanese judicial and administrative authorities by a local English newspaper professing to speak on behalf of the British community. We trust, however, that it is not necessary to assure the Japanese that ninety-nine Englishmen out of every hundred utterly condemn such mischievous writing, and that it no more represents British ideas than the New York Herald represents American public opinion. The British Consul-General in Seoul is almost equally insulted when he is depicted as harbouring the above suspicions and officially acting on them. That the Japan Gazette, while reading these unworthy motives into his procedure, should applaud his "championship of British treaty-rights," is on a par with the singular confusion of ideas which leads that journal to class embezzlement of money as a "political offence." We say nothing of the gross indecency of thus attempting to discredit and hold up to public opprobrium the prosecution in a case sub judice. That offence seems insignificant in its context of unblushing slander.

INDIA.

The world has been hearing much lately of disaffection in India. From a leading article in the Indian Mirror we take some extracts which exhibit the Indian character in another light:—

All that is happening at this moment is a clear warning from God against the false course which some of our countrymen have taken. If we are wise, we should profit by our recent experiences and proceed at once to lay out a carefully thought-out programme of our national work. If we wish to rise as a nation, we should try first and foremost to develop a healthy national character. We must candidly confess our errors and shortcomings, and be determined to remove them. It is childish to talk of our nationalism, when we know that we have more national shortcomings than national virtues to our credit. The Japanese and the Chinese are making rapid progress, because they are mindful of the lessons which they obtain from the progressive nations of the West. They are not hampered by any caste system, and have few foolish prejudices. They are freely going to foreign countries for educational and business purposes, and thousands have even settled down in foreign lands, where they are earning a comfortable livelihood. They go to foreign countries to pick up the best things in their institutions, and to introduce them, gradually into their own countries. Far from setting up an attitude of antagonism towards the West, they are trying to assimilate the best Western ideals with their own. About 36 years ago, Japan sent 60 experts to different parts of the world to study the institutions there. She also brought some of the best men from the West to teach her people all that was necessary for their advancement as a nation. China is doing exactly what Japan has done. What are we doing to uplift ourselves as a nation? Are we fit to hold a candle either to the Japanese or the Chinese in national work? All we are doing is clamouring for the moon. A misguided section of our people have got the idea that bomb-throwing will bring about the salvation of India. What delusion!

China and Japan owe their rise to India, because India gave them Buddhism. By a peculiar irony of fate, Buddhism has now been almost forgotten in its land of birth, which Hinduism is being dragged down by bigoted notions on one side, and false teachings on the other. We give it as a solemn truth that unless we purge our religion of its impurities and put our social system on a proper basis, we are doomed as a nation. It is a pity that so few of us pay any attention to these important problems. Those who are shrieking "Swaraj" are at present the greatest opponents of national progress. They are turning everything upside down, and creating a condition of things which can bode no good to the people or the country. If we should rise as a nation, we must give our attention for the present chiefly to our social and religious needs. Our great bane at this moment seems to be that we do not think for ourselves, but are carried away by imagination and sensationalism. Sensationalism, indeed, has become the essence of our existence. No wonder we see false prophets, dangerous teachers, and, worst of all, revolutionaries and assassins around us. This is fine, straightforward writing. It inspires us with new respect for the Indian.

THE TREATY BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND KOREA.

Unexpected interest attaches to the Treaty between Great Britain and Korea in view of events now occurring in Seoul. The question is, has the British Consul-General in Seoul competence to refuse compliance with a demand duly presented by the proper Korean authorities for the arrest and surrender of a Korean subject? That is the whole case in a nut-shell. Whether the Korean subject be an employee or not an employee of a British subject has nothing to do with the matter, for from first to last the Treaty prescribes no special procedure with respect to such employees: it merely provides that their unrestricted services may be obtained. Thus the question is entirely without complications, and the answer to it is furnished by the 9th article of the Treaty which says:—

If a Korean subject who is charged with an offence against the laws of his country takes refuge on premises occupied by a British subject or on board a British merchant vessel, the British Consular Authorities, on receiving an application from the Korean authorities, shall take steps to have such person arrested and handed over to the latter for trial. But without the consent of the proper British Consular authority no Korean officer shall enter the premises of any British subject without his consent, or go on board any British ship without the consent of the officer in charge.

Treaties are not always remarkable for lucidity, but the above article leaves no room for doubt. It provides two things: first, that British ships or the premises of British subjects shall not become asylums for Korean subjects accused of law-breaking; and, secondly, that such ships and such premises shall be secure against arbitrary entry. No discretion whatever is reserved to the British Consular Authority in the matter of extradition. He is absolutely bound to "take steps to have" the accused "arrested and handed over." He is not entitled to make any scrutiny into the circumstances of the case. His inquiry must be limited to assuring himself that the application for extradition comes from the duly constituted Korean Authorities. That fact once ascertained, he must take steps for the apprehension and delivery of the Korean subject applied for. On the other hand, Korean officials are not entitled to board a British ship without the consent of the officer in charge or to enter the premises of a British subject without the latter's consent, unless the consent of the British Consul has been already obtained. This, it is quite obvious, does not endow the British Consul with any discretionary power as to the matter dealt with in the first clause. The first clause imposes on the Consul the imperative duty of arresting and delivering, on receipt of due application, any Korean subject charged with an offence against the law of the land who may have taken refuge in a British residence or a British ship; the second clause forbids Korean officials to make such arrests on their own authority unless the British Consul delegates the duty to them, or unless the British resident or the officer in charge of the ship shall have given his consent. From first to last there is not one word which can be construed as investing the British Consul with discretionary power except in the matter of authorizing Korean officials to enter the premises of British subjects in despite of the latter's objection, or to board British ships in despite of their master's veto. The Consul has to make the arrest if he is duly asked to do so, but he has discretionary power as to the method of making it.

Allusion may be made to one strange misconception published in connexion with this case. It is that, according to the Treaty, Mr. Yang, "after arrest and during his trial, was entitled to have a Consular representative present to watch over his interests." What the Treaty says is this:—

In all cases, whether civil or criminal, tried either in Korean or British Courts in Korea, a properly authorized official of the nationality of the plaintiff or prosecutor shall be allowed, whenever he thinks it necessary, to call, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to protest against the proceedings or decision.

A very little care in reading this article would have prevented the above misconception. The "properly authorized official" whose presence is provided for must be "of the nationality of the plaintiff or prosecutor." The prosecutor in Yang's case was the Korean procurator. What the article provides is that when a British (or Korean) subject brings an action or lays a charge against a Korean (or British) subject in a court of the nationality of the defendant or the accused, a "properly authorized" British (or Korean) official may attend to watch the case in the interests of the plaintiff or prosecutor. The article does not touch Yang's case at all.

THE FISHERY QUESTION.

Count Komura's resumption of the portfolio of Foreign Affairs is evidently expected to inaugurate a policy of frank friendship with Russia and China. Of course, in China's case there are still several questions to be disposed of, and it is possible that Count Komura may see his way to making such concessions as will entirely win China's complacence. But we are bound to say that, so far as the past is concerned, the Japanese nation itself is a great deal more to blame in our opinion than are its statesmen. The Tatsu Maru affair has been the main source of friction, and its effects are still felt. But it must be fresh in the minds of everybody that had Count Hayashi been swayed by the loud cry of indignation which the press unanimously raised when it was known that Chinese naval officers had unlawfully seized a Japanese ship and hauled down the Japanese flag, a much more drastic line of policy would have been adopted by Tokyo. Even assuming that the Tatsu Maru was in Chinese territorial waters at the time of her seizure, Chinese officials had no right whatever to lay hands on her, and still less had they any right to haul down her colours. Had this happened to a British ship, the British Government's immediate intimation would have been, "release the ship and restore her colours. After those wrongs are righted we can begin to talk about smuggled arms." That was the very least called for by the Japanese press, but Count Hayashi was satisfied with a good deal less, since he practically left the matter in the hands of the British Minister to settle. Thus in this matter Japan must be admitted to have behaved with distinct leniency. Then there is the Fakumen affair, about which all that need be said is that Japan is merely asserting a treaty right which no Western Government situated as she is would dream of waiving. Every impartial observer must see that China's object is to compete in every practical way with Japanese enterprise in Manchuria, and, if possible, to disgust the Japanese with the whole undertaking. It is hard to see how Japan could have behaved differently in these two matters, nor can any one allege that in her assertion of Korea's claims in Chientao there has been the smallest element of peremptoriness or defiance. Nevertheless, Count Komura's return to power opens the way to a new departure, and, being a man of great ability, he is not unlikely to utilize the occasion successfully, though how the thing is to be accomplished one does not immediately see.

As to Russia, there has already been a steady growth of good feeling for the past few months between her and Japan, so that Count Komura will not have much difficulty in that direction. It is confidently asserted that on his recent visit to Moscow he practically pledged his country to join the Behring Sea Convention, a step which would certainly remove many occasions of friction between the two countries. Most of our readers are probably aware that the Behring Sea Convention fixes the limit of territorial waters for purposes of fishery protection at 30 nautical miles, instead of the 3 miles everywhere recognised by international law. The situation at present is that, while neither British, nor Russian, nor American vessels can carry on palagic fishing within 30 miles of the northern coasts, Japanese vessels can engage in the same enterprise 27 miles nearer. That is a very invidious state of affairs, and it naturally creates much resentment among the fishermen of the three nationalities who have signed the Convention. If Japan can see her way to joining, she will certainly make a large contribution to the cause of neighbourly friendship. We read with regret in Tokyo papers that the officials of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce are opposed to the project, and as Baron Oura is a very strong man, his opposition would count for much. But since the question is whether or not Japanese subjects shall be free to engage in operations which America, Russia and England regard as injurious to their interests, it is permissible to hope that Count Komura's policy will carry the day.

THE FAKUMEN RAILWAY.

The Shanghai Mercury publishes a new batch of long telegrams from London with reference to the Fakumen Railway. These telegrams quote the Westminster Gazette and the East Anglian Times of Ipswich. The former journal speaks of the proposed line as 50 miles distant from the Japanese railway, and insists that the alternative plan of building a branch of the South Manchuria Railway to Fakumen is obviously unpractical, as goods would thereby be compelled to travel round two sides of a triangle instead of one in order to reach their destination. As for the Ipswich journal, it declares that Japan is obviously pursuing the same selfish policy as that formerly followed by Russia in Manchuria. The telegrams to the Shanghai paper speak of all the English provincial press as being up in arms, but they quote only the East Anglian Times. It cannot be denied that the British and Chinese Corporation is carrying on its campaign with admirable vigour from the point of view of organised fighting. But from the point of view of justice and international relations it seems distinctly regrettable that a question of a little pecuniary gain to a syndicate should be converted into a mischievous political weapon. The only difference between Japan's procedure in regard to the Fakumen line and the procedure of other Powers similarly interested in Chinese railways is that China is attempting to ignore her agreement with Japan, whereas she has made no such attempt in the case of other States. One point which excites some collateral curiosity is the source from which the Shanghai Mercury receives these long telegrams. Our contemporary is greatly to be congratulated upon its costly enterprise, but we are perplexed to understand why it should have chosen this one particular occasion for such a feat of news-collecting.

We read in the Mainichi Dempo, which writes in a tone suggesting discontent, that Japan had it in contemplation to make some concession with regard to the Fakumen Railway. She does not admit that anything in her previous attitude has been unwarranted by her treaty with China, but for the sake of neighbourly relations, she is not unwilling to make some compromise. Our contemporary hints at another railway concession being thrown into the scale, but there is nothing to intimate the locality of the concession. It is added that Japan's plans will not take definite shape until careful conferences have been held between the Ministers of State for Foreign Affairs and for Communications, and the new Japanese Representative in Peking. We give this rumour for what it may be worth. It would be very welcome news to learn that this Fakumen problem had been solved. There has been a singular determination on the part of Englishmen to take a one-sided view of the matter, and we can only conclude that they have been influenced by the untiring campaign which the concessionaires have carried on. The fact is, however, that English public opinion may be said to have pronounced against Japan in this matter, and if Count Komura can devise some means of correcting the situation, he will be acting wisely.

BRITISH NAVAL POLICY.

The proposal to establish a standing fund of £100,000,000 for the necessities—which may be taken to read emergencies—of the British Navy is one which, if put into practice, means more for the maintenance of British Naval Power than an announcement to build a few additional battleships. To close observers of the Naval Situation in Western Europe it has long been evident that for England to maintain the two-Power standard in any real sense strong measures would have to be taken, and that quickly. The extraordinary efforts made by Germany to overtake at the earliest possible date the British strength in battleships of the Dreadnought type, as evinced by the latest emendation of the ambitious programme of 1906, are such as no reader of the signs of the times can afford to ignore. The effect of the new scheme, by which the efficiency age of every German battleship has been reduced from 25 years to 20, is to increase automatically the number of ships to be laid down each year. Thus in 1908 provision is made for five large armoured vessels, and in 1909 four. In no single year has this number of "capital" ships been exceeded or even reached by Great Britain. It follows therefore that the temporary lead gained by Great Britain when the Dreadnought type was initiated would soon be lost.

In these circumstances the present Liberal Ministry finds itself confronted by an awkward situation. On the one hand, the advanced Radical and Labour sections of their supporters are clamouring for the reduction of armaments and the passing of costly domestic reform schemes in lieu thereof. On the other, stand the Imperialistic section of their party, and a vigilant Opposition backed by the great

B.P., who by this time are fully awake to the fact that any weakening of the Navy endangers the safety of the nation itself.

The device hitherto in favour with a Government which discovers there is leeway to make up in the comparative naval strength has been to bring in a Supplementary Estimate for new construction. The most famous example of this in recent times was the £8,000,000 emergency vote introduced by the late Lord Goschen in July 1898 as a reply to Russian Naval activity. The present Government, fighting shy of so obvious a step, has fallen back upon the less ostentatious expedient of a standing loan, to be drawn upon as occasion requires.

The method will doubtless prove effective, and credit is due to a Cabinet which, up to the present, has not enjoyed the full confidence of the country in matters pertaining to national defence, for thus grappling with a situation not altogether devoid of danger.

It is conceivable that the Government has been emboldened to this somewhat sensational procedure by the economization resulting from the abandonment of the costly naval works at Rosyth: but this is a matter which is not yet clear. In any case, the action of His Majesty's advisers amounts to a frank and welcome recognition not only of the two Power, but the Germany-and-another-Power, standard.

Of course the salient feature of the scheme is that it provides for the increment of the Navy at a minimum of cost to the tax-payer. The money can easily be obtained at 3 per cent. Thus if 3 battle-ships are built each year, the budgetary appropriation would only be £90,000 for the first year; £300,000 for the second year and so on, instead of 5 millions annually. The ease to the Treasury would be very great, even though a substantial sinking fund were included in the programme.

THE IDEOGRAPH.

The North-China Daily News publishes a very interesting memorial, which is about to be presented to the Chinese Government, asking for a commission of inquiry to decide the proper rendering of novel terms into ideographic script. Japan has been through this mill, and now she has ground out of it a vocabulary to meet her needs. It was an immensely difficult task at first. The writer of this note vividly recalls the days, now 37 years ago, when he essayed to teach orthographic and isometric projections to Japanese students in their own language, and found that the task of manufacturing terms was even more difficult than demonstrating the sections of solids projected upon inclined planes. The difficulty has no existence for the present generation of Japanese. Their path to knowledge has been made easy, and there is scarcely a mathematical or philosophical expression in Western science that has not now its apt ideographic equivalent. But the Chinese have lagged behind, and while it is their wonderfully capable language that has enabled Japan to satisfy her needs, they themselves are only now beginning to exploit these resources. The Chinese language is probably the most elastic tongue that exists or ever existed. It is a treasure-house of monosyllables each with a distinct meaning, and these monosyllables can be commuted or permuted so as to convey any idea with admirable exactness. Yet we read in the Memorial that the Chinese have nothing better to express "telephone" and "ultimate" than the mangled phonetic renderings telufeng and yuantimeithun. It is indeed time that they paid to their revered ideographs the homage of using them intelligently. The memorial says in its closing paragraphs:—

There is reason to think that within the past two generations more new words have been added to the English language, than all the 44,000 characters in Kang Hsi's dictionary. In the West new dictionaries of great size, thoroughly made, frequently revised and of scholarly accuracy, are constantly appearing. There are many first class dictionaries of the English language, and they are always being enlarged and improved. In China, on the other hand, since the great Dictionary of Kang Hsi, now about two hundred years old, nothing of the kind has been done. But China has now come to self-consciousness, desiring to control her own soil and her own productions—to manage her own railways and mines, and to abolish the anomaly of extraterritoriality, as Japan did before her. Yet while there is a great deal said and written about "China for the Chinese," we think it strange and indeed inexplicable that almost all that is done for the Chinese language is done by foreigners. During the past century scores of dictionaries of Chinese have been made, from that of Dr. Morrison, the first British missionary, down to the present time. They are large and small, covering the whole language, or separate dialects, of which there are great numbers. Of these dictionaries some have been made by British, some by French, by Germans, by Americans, by Russians, and by Japanese, but with the exception of the admirable work just issued by the Commercial Press in Shanghai, hardly one is due to Chinese labours, and even this is made by men all of whom have been educated under foreigners, either in China or in Hongkong.

This circumstance of the authorship of dictionaries of the Chinese having been for more than a century almost exclusively conducted by foreigners we believe to be without parallel in any other country in the world. Does it not show that while we are trying to protect material interests we are altogether neglecting the far more precious intellectual interests of China? It is to be recollected that the position of Japan is peculiar. She received ages ago the Chinese Literature, Language and Civilization as a gift. Now the Japanese are our teachers, using our Chinese characters, making them into new phrases, giving them strange meanings, inundating China with their books, while no Chinese scholars protest. It is beyond our power to stay this tide of novelties, many of which are of great value; but ought we not to exert ourselves to direct and control the process which we cannot prevent? Is it not the function of the Board of Education to take the lead in this urgent matter? We ask, therefore, for the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry, to be composed of say three or five able men with orders to report at a fixed time: (1) On the existing conditions as outlined above; (2) to be followed on the receipt of their report by an Imperial Edict appointing a permanent Commission on the changes required in the Chinese Language by the needs of the New China. (3) This Commission should be invested with authority to invite the co-operation of competent scholars of Western nations and of Japan in deciding upon the requisite terms, and in general upon whatever cognate matters may come before them. We would point out that no time is to be lost, for language is not like material objects which are subject to physical control. It would have been well had this Commission been appointed ten years ago. The beginnings of the Ta Ching Dynasty were illustrious by reason of the immense literary activity of their Majesties K'ang Hsi and Ch'ien Lung in many literary lines, just as were the early regions of the Ming Dynasty, especially that of Yung Le. It would redound to the reputation and the excellence of the present Dynasty if this matter were taken in hand and were brought to a successful issue. It would probably be well to have such a Commission made a permanent body. If, however, nothing is done, we shall all live to regret it, when perhaps it may be too late. In that case how can posterity hold us free from blame?

The fact that white clothing is unsuitable for use under a blazing tropical sun, as pointed out by Col. Maude in a lecture recently delivered in London, seems to have been overlooked by physicians and manufacturers. The disturbance of the nerves of the spinal column by excessive actinic rays reacts upon the stomach, upsetting digestion as well as, causing sunstroke. The remedy is a non-actinic covering for the skin, and a red lining for wearing apparel and helmet gives the best protection from the discomforts and dangers of exposure to a torrid sun. Yet even a red shirt is hardly to be had in the tropics.

Tuesday, August 25.

The market opened brisk on Monday morning and a general appreciation took place. Before the close of the session, however, rumours that cotton yarns had fallen in price caused a debacle in this class of shares, and others were pulled down in the wake of the cottons. It did not appear, however, that this depression had deep roots, for in the afternoon the market steadied in view of the probable restoration of fine weather. On the whole it may be said that the general tendency at present is upward.

Wednesday, August 26.

The market opened dull on Tuesday owing to two things, namely, the state of the weather and the prevalence of a rumour that the Exhibition is to be postponed, a step which would certainly cause much discouragement. The 25th was the Hassaku and what the rice needs now is bright, warm weather. Clouds and rain, even without a storm, are distinctly detrimental. As quotations declined, however, buyers came to the fore and the afternoon session witnessed some hardening of prices.

Thursday, August 27.

The fine weather and confident announcements that the Cabinet had definitely agreed on the outlines of the Budget affected the market favourably on Wednesday morning. State securities responded conspicuously, and the Tanko Kisen's shares leaped up more than 2 points. For the most part the appreciations were fractional, and the afternoon market showed some signs of weakness, partly because settling day (Saturday) is imminent.

Friday, August 28.

A general decline of prices took place on the Stock Exchange yesterday, but there does not appear to have been any special reason except that settling day is imminent, and many holders had to dispose of their shares or to carry them over. To day the Exchange will be open for one session only, Saturday being the nakai. A good deal of interest attaches, therefore, to Monday's quotations. We append the figures for October delivery:—

THE WEATHER.

Saturday, August 22.

The centre of depression reported a few days ago on the east of Luzon is said to be moving northward towards Formosa and it therefore still constitutes a menace to Japan, but the other depression simultaneously reported from the Bonin Islands has disappeared without spreading. Meanwhile a new depression has declared itself in the Liaotung Peninsula. It is thought that this may be the same depression which recently took its way up the Yangtze valley, and which has now changed its course. At any rate there is danger that this phenomenon may travel up the Sea of Japan and assault the northern regions.

Sunday, August 23.

The centre of depression which made its appearance in the Liaotung Peninsula on the 21st inst. is reported to have caused breaches of embankments such as to interrupt traffic on the South Manchuria Railway for two or three days. The storm then took its way up the Sea of Japan, striking the Korean coast at Gensan and proceeding towards Hokkaido.

As for the Formosa disturbance, it is travelling along a north-easterly course, and on the morning of the 22nd it made itself felt at the Riukiu Islands by the usual precursors, namely, dashes of rain and blasts of wind. This storm now threatens to strike the main island of Japan.

Yet another centre of depression declared itself at Saghalien on the 22nd inst., but this is not likely to become mischievous so far as the Japanese Islands are concerned. Anxiety is confined to the Formosa phenomenon.

Monday, August 24.

The centre of depression which has worked its way up from Formosa reached the neighbourhood of Shikoku on the afternoon of the 23rd inst. It then showed some inclination to bend southward, and if that course were followed the eastern coast of Japan will probably escape. But at this moment of writing (Monday morning) things are uncertain.

Since the above was in type, news has been received that the centre of depression took a north-westerly course from Okinawa, so that it seems likely to cross to the continent, Japan being visited by the fringe of rain only.

Tuesday, August 25.

The Riukiu centre of depression was heading in the direction of Shantung at the date of latest advices, and if it hold on in that direction, it will not hurt Japan. But of course it may at any moment change its direction, so that the Meteorological Department's warning has not been relaxed. Meanwhile, the rain which visited Tokyo and Yokohama on the afternoon of the 24th inst. was not connected with this southern typhoon, but had its origin in petty atmospheric disturbances in the centre of Japan.

Wednesday, August 26.

The Riukiu centre of depression seems to have ceased to threaten Japan, but a new centre has appeared near the Bonins and is causing some anxiety. The rainy weather experienced in Yokohama and Tokyo is owing to a small centre of depression in the Awa and Kazusa regions.

Thursday, August 27.

A centre of depression in the neighbourhood of Riukiu is still causing some uneasiness, and there are signs of a storm brewing in the Bonin region, but on the whole the conditions are tolerably favourable.

ADMIRAL ROJESTVENSKY.

There is only one historical parallel, so far as we know, to the reported death of Admiral Rojestvensky, and that is the delusive account of the capture of the Legations in Peking eight years ago. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the N.-C. Daily News sends to that journal the following interesting account of the results of the mistake:—

The mistake made on July 21 by the official Russian telegraphic agency in announcing the death of Admiral Rojestvensky is the talk of all St. Petersburg. The agency now throws the blame on the German official agency, the Wolff agency, but, however this extraordinary mistake originated, it gave the Admiral's friends a shock. On the strength of this news the German Government telegraphed to its naval attaché here telling him to inform the Russian naval authorities that the German Government desired to render full military honours to the remains, if they were interred in Germany, and the Russian Admiralty went to a lot of trouble in making arrangements for the funeral, as it was decided that the body must be brought to Russia. The Naval Minister received an enormous number of telegrams of sympathy; some from foreign admirals, some from officers who had served under Rojestvensky, and who also went to great trouble in getting wreaths for the funeral. The wife of Admiral Rojestvensky received about one hundred telegrams of condolence, and all the naval attachés in St. Petersburg called at the Naval Staff Office to make inquiries.

All the newspapers in Russia published the sad news and most of them commented on it. The Evening published a portrait of the Admiral and some reminiscences. The Kelch and the Slavo had long articles, wherein they gave an historical sketch of Rojestvensky's career, dwelling particularly on the battle of Tsushima. "The hero of Tsushima is dead," said the Kelch in conclusion, "can we say the same thing of the system which led to Tsushima?" The Slavo was released by the Admiral's death from the necessity of concealing any longer the fact, communicated to the editor by Rojestvensky's immediate subordinates, that at the commencement of the famous voyage to Tsushima the Admiral betrayed signs of insanity.

To complete the resemblance to the great Peking Legation "fiasco," it only remained for a funeral service to be offered up for the "dead" man, and this was done, for a solemn Requiem Mass was said last night at the instance of the sorrowing relatives, who also sent telegrams to Nauenheim asking the Russian Consul there to see that no steps were taken with regard to the funeral until the arrival of the deceased's widow and daughter.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

In connexion with the recent conclusion of a convention between Japan and the United States of America for the mutual protection of patents and trade-marks, the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce has issued to the Governors of prefectures a useful instruction. He directs their attention to the fact that the area of protection for trade-marks, patents, designs and copyrights has been greatly extended by this document, and that the regulations necessary for giving practical effect to the new arrangement have been duly promulgated. His Excellency then—and this is the important part of his instruction—directs attention to the fact that in the absence of any restraining legislation many people have fallen into very lax practices with regard to the rights of others in this kind of property. It will be for the local officials to labour henceforth with the object of correcting this defective state of affairs, and the Minister urges that full attention be paid to this important matter.

The returns of the trade of Japan for the 10 days ended the 20th instant are as follow:—

	Yen.
Exports .....	11,511,000
Imports .....	12,189,000
Excess of Imports .....	618,000

The figures for the period from January 1st to August 20th are:—

	Yen.	Decreases compared with the corresponding period of 1907.
Exports .....	226,578,000	35,513,000
Imports .....	309,827,000	18,139,000
Excess of Imports .....	82,249,000	—
Total Decrease of Trade .....	—	53,652,000

Mr. Yamanouchi, Vice-President of the Railway Bureau in the Department of Communications, is to proceed to St. Petersburg in order to make final arrangements for linking up the Japanese and Russian railway systems in Asia. It is expected that no difficulty will be experienced in effecting satisfactory arrangements, Japan, on the one hand, engaging to effect the necessary improvements in the harbour at Tsuruga, and Russia agreeing to an equitable division of transport charges. After all these matters have been settled, it will be possible for passengers in Europe to buy through tickets to China or Japan as the case may be, and on the other hand people in China and Japan will be able to buy through tickets to any part of Europe.

We regret to have to announce the death of Mr. Miyoshi Taizo in his 63rd year, which event took place on the 18th inst. at Kodzu. The deceased gentleman was at one time President of the Court of Cassation in Tokyo and he enjoyed the reputation of being both an eminent jurist and a man of the highest integrity. His death following at a comparatively short interval that of Mr. Kojima Iken has deprived Japan of two men whose names will always be associated with the best developments of her modern judiciary. The deceased had embraced Christianity and was an active worker in the cause of that faith. Unlike Messrs. Shimada and Tokutomi he adhered firmly from first to the doctrines of orthodox Christianity. The Emperor decorated him just before his decease with the First Class Order of the Rising Sun.

Tokyo newspapers publish an interview granted by General Viscount Terauchi to the Japan representative of the United Press. The interview has doubtless appeared already in American journals. The gist of his Excellency's statements is that Japan earnestly desires peace. Nothing serves to beget an effective love of peace so much as actual experience of the horrors of war. Barely 3 years have elapsed since Japan emerged from one of the most terrible wars in all history, and her people are still deeply imbued with a sense of the sufferings they then experienced. Nothing seems more desirable in their eyes at present than to be permitted to live in tranquillity. It is a great mistake to imagine that there is any wish on the part of Japanese statesmen to expend large sums on such unproductive purposes as armaments' expansion. What they really desire is to devote the country's money to productive enterprises which will tend to heal the financial wounds she experienced in the War. That is what the country wants, and it is also what the present Ministry desires to accomplish.

We read in Japanese newspapers that the great school of Japanese swordsmiths is threatened with extinction. In the feudal era, when the Samurai's sword was his divinity, the forgers of blades occupied an honoured and much patronised position, but since the Restoration their métier has gradually fallen into disuse, and now there remain only two, Sukiyama of Osaka and Miyamoto of Tokyo. These two have the title of swordsmiths to the Imperial Court, and their circumstances are consequently easy enough. But the question of their successors is a difficulty. To become really expert, a Japanese swordsmith must devote seven years to training and six more to the actual practice of his art. The two masters mentioned above, however, are not sufficiently well off to support pupils through such a length of time, and in these days of hurried bread-winning nobody is found willing to embark on his own account in a decadent profession. The Sword Society (Tokenkai), an association of old-time conservatives, has been much concerned of late about this problem, and has managed to bring the matter to the Emperor's notice. The result is that his Majesty has ordered an allowance of 1,000 yen each to be made to the two experts of Osaka and Tokyo for a period of 10 years. This will enable them to support two pupils each, and a very promising pupil has been found in the former place, one Masayoshi, who has already been studying the art for some years.

The master of the Kasado Maru has sent to the Japanese Foreign Office a very favourable report concerning the emigrants which the ship carried to Brazil. The steamer left Kobe on the 25th of last April, and, proceeding by way of Singapore and the Cape of Good Hope, reached Santos harbour on the 18th of June. She carried 780 emigrants, and there was scarcely any sickness and no casualty during the long voyage. All were safely landed, and the medical inspection which followed was not at all of a drastic character. The emigrants were taken round to see the town, but they themselves were in a certain sense a public show for great crowds of people assembled to examine them. They were very hospitably treated, and great favour was shown to them by all classes of people except the Italians, who naturally are disposed to resent the coming of such formidable rivals. Subsequently the immigrants were distributed among the coffee plantations, and it is said that there was a good deal of competition among their employers.

Apparently some advanced sheets of Kuropatkin's history of the War have been published in America, for the topic has evidently become invested with sudden interest and many curious revelations are finding their way into print. Thus it is now said to be fully established that the Czar was primarily responsible for the War, and that his obdurate attitude vis à-vis the advice of his Plenipotentiary, de Witte, and the counsels of President Roosevelt, was due to his determination not to make peace until Japan had been humbled. The worst of such a story is the great difficulty of controverting it. The Czar's position forbids him to step out and make a public denial. But we believe that all thoughtful persons will acquit his Majesty of any desire to draw the sword, or any reluctance to shield it. We are persuaded that the real responsibility for the War rests with Russia's failure to appreciate Japan. St. Petersburg regarded it as quite incredible that Japan should venture to measure strength with the Colossus of the North, and accordingly Japan's protests and demands were treated without any spirit of practical concession.

MORE AMERICAN LYNCH-LAW.

At Russellville, Kentucky, on the 1st inst., four negroes were taken from prison by a mob of fifty white men and hanged to a tree on the outskirts of the town. No shots were fired, and the first indication the inhabitants had of the tragedy was the gruesome sight of the four corpses on the tree. A notice was found pinned to one of the bodies warning "niggers to leave white people alone."

The unfortunate victims of this outrage, it appears, were members of a Lodge, and are said to have expressed approval, at one of their meetings, of the murder by one of his negro tenants of a white farmer belonging to an adjoining district.

TAKAYAMA BEACH.

It is difficult to imagine a more beautiful, restful and generally delightful seaside resort than the little pine-covered bluff called Takayama, near the village of Hanabuchi, and about ten miles from Sendai. There are just ten cottages, and although their occupants come from all parts of Japan, they constitute a very congenial company together, resembling a large family in freedom and joy of fellowship. The physical conditions for rest and invigoration are almost ideal. The bathing is safe and delightful, the ocean and land breezes sweeping through the pines always keep the air cool and comfortable, and the scenery including the sweep of the ocean, a part of beautiful Matsushima Bay and the pine clad hills in other directions, is exceedingly pretty.

Religious services have hitherto been held in one of the cottages, but this year were held in a tent put up for the purpose. A small auditorium is about to be begun, which will probably be ready for use next summer. A tennis court and little musical and social events help to make life enjoyable. A concert got up through the efforts of Rev. J. Monroe Stick on Tuesday evening August 18th, was a fine success. The programme follows. The concluding number was a song composed by that enthusiastic lover of Takayama, Rev. J. H. Pettie, D.D.

The company of cottage owners has recently purchased the whole hill, and lots for a limited number of additional cottages will be laid out. But it is the purpose always to keep the community quite small.

TRADE-MARK APPEAL.

At the Patent Bureau, a decision has been passed on an appeal instituted by Messrs Jardine, Matheson & Co. against a decision given by the examiners of the same office. It appears that the British firm applied to the bureau to register a trade mark showing the word "Comet." The examiners rejected the application stating that a trade-mark displaying the word "Comet" was already registered as No. 15,287 and that though there was a clear difference between the character and illustration, yet the two were ambiguous in idea and appellation. Mr. Y. Toneri, Chief of the Patent Bureau, dismissed the appeal on the ground that the trade-mark presented by the applicants resembled the registered trade mark, No. 15,287 and that such trade-mark would be likely to cause confusion.

THE TOKYO RAILWAY.

THE Jiji Shimpō is engaged in publishing a series of articles intended to show that the affairs of the Tokyo Railway are greatly mismanaged, and that there should be no talk of raising the fares until it has been clearly demonstrated that a reasonable dividend can not be paid with existing rates, supposing skillful and honest management. It is an interesting question, and unless the Jiji is being victimized by some person with an ulterior motive, we must assume that it has obtained access to the books and accounts of the Company and has also been able to mount the back stairs without restraint. As to the nature of the revelations which our contemporary intends to make, we can not yet form any clear idea. Thus far its charges are not very serious. It alleges that the representatives of the three amalgamated companies have never really coalesced; that each party is "running the show" in the interests of its own protégés; that a great superfluity of employees results, and that the average monthly pay of the indoor staff is 5 or 6 yen higher than the corresponding figure in the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. Probably these accusations will be followed by others of a more damaging character, for in such exposés men generally keep their good wine until the last. But, after all, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. Electric railways are not hole-and-corner businesses which can be carried on in the dark. Official reports are published every year, giving all the details necessary for forming a clear idea of their operation. From these reports for 1907 we find that the three lines which pay best in Japan are the Hanshin (Osaka-Kobe), which distributes a dividend of 12 per cent.; the Keihin (Tokyo-Yokohama) which returns 11 per cent.; and the Bungo, whose figure is 9 per cent. Now it appears from the records that the Keihin pays 45 per cent. of its gross earnings for operating expenses; the Hanshin spends 60 per cent.; and the Bungo spends 61 per cent., while the figure for the Tokyo Railway is 47 per cent. In fact, the Tokyo enterprise stands second in the matter of cheapness, and has a better record than two of the four companies, though with its low uniform fare we might expect to find a different result. Can there be much ground for charges of mismanagement in the face of these figures? And, talking of fares, we note that since 153,061,727 persons rode on the Tokyo trams in 1907, whereas the sum collected from them was 5,455,546 yen, it follows that the Company receives, not a 4-sen fare, but a 3½-sen; a fact attributable to the discount allows to labourers and students. We are compelled to say that while citizens of Tokyo will thank the Jiji Shimpō for its efforts, assuming them to be prompted by genuine solicitude for the public good, business-men will be a little perplexed by two features of this affair, namely, the Tokyo journal's method of approaching it, and the fact that such a task is undertaken by a newspaper instead of by the shareholders. As to the former point, the natural and reasonable way to approach the problem would be to set out by showing that the Tokyo Company spends upon the operating and maintenance of its lines a conspicuously larger percentage of its income than is spent by any other company engaged in a similar enterprise. If that were demonstrated, there would be a solid basis for founding a charge of mismanagement or extravagance. But when we find that out of three companies, all paying much larger dividends than the Tokyo Tetsudo Kaisha, and all much better circumstanced for economical purposes, only one is able to show a fractionally smaller percentage of outgoings, and the other two are inferior to the Tokyo line in this respect, we can not but wonder where the cause of complaint exists, and why the Tokyo company should be expected to do so much better than other companies. Then, as to the fact that a newspaper assumes a role belonging properly to the shareholders, the question suggests itself—does the Jiji Shimpō believe that it has obtained access to information which is hidden from the shareholders whose pockets are directly interested in the management of the Company? If the shareholders see reason to trust the Directors and to repose confidence in the staff, why should an outsider, a journal with no substantial interest whatever, be less complacent? After all, however, the real problem is, not whether a few thousands of yen can be saved by economizing here and there, but whether any reasonable man is prepared to affirm the fairness or propriety of a system which enables one person to ride ten or twelve miles for the same sum as another pays who rides only a hundred yards. The Tokyo Railway Company is operating 90 miles of railway, and has 59 miles still to construct. It can not possibly make these extensions, we imagine, with the present schedule of charges, and inasmuch as the value of the suburban districts—a point justly emphasized by the Jiji Shimpō—depends mainly upon their inclusion in the tram system, surely the interests of the city would be better consulted by expediting the completion of the lines than by endeavouring to prove that if the Company were more economical, it might possibly pay its shareholders a dividend half a point higher than it pays them now? It is not real business at all, this meticulous and officious scrutiny. Let the shareholders object if they believe that their money is being squandered, but in the meanwhile let the Jiji Shimpō and other public organs use their influence to promote the consummation of a work which closely concerns the prosperity of the city and the value of suburban property.

The Semi-Final of the Singles Handicap Tennis Tournament, between Mr. T. I. Chapman and Mr. J. M. Mollison, will take place on Friday evening on the Y.C. & A.C. ground, commencing at 5.00 p.m.

RELIANCE ON OFFICIALDOM.

WE are inclined to agree very heartily with the anonymous business-man quoted by a Tokyo contemporary as condemning the tendency now apparent in Japan to attribute all the evils of the time to the Government, and to look to the Government alone for relief. One ought not, indeed, to lose sight of the fact that Japan has not yet travelled very far from a specially disabling past. On the threshold of her modern career she was almost wholly without the essential qualifications for industrial and commercial enterprise. The habit of domestic industry had become second nature in the sequel of centuries of practice, and the idea of combination had been strangled by inter-fief restrictions. Osaka had some rudiments of a system of credit and of banking machinery, but such a thing as a joint-stock company had never been seen or heard of in the country. Even after the Government had been building railways for over ten years, private enterprise remained supine towards this profitable kind of investment, and many of us can recall the difficulties experienced by Prince Iwakura in inducing the nobles to utilize their commutation bonds as capital for the first Japanese railway company, although the Treasury guaranteed interest at the rate of 8 per cent. In fact, had not the Government stepped into the breach and constituted itself the pioneer in sundry and various lines of business, it is difficult to tell how many years would have elapsed before the country shook off its old habits and made a bold incursion into the realm of commerce and industry. These things have always to be placed in the frontispiece of any estimate of business conditions in Japan. The Government has not been a mere preacher of precepts: it has acted as a practical pioneer, and the people have not yet fully learned to be independent of officialdom. Neither can there be any reasonable doubt that the Government's management of finance is in some degree responsible for the depression which overtook the country in the opening months of 1907. The policy of heavy taxes and costly expansions in unproductive as well as productive directions, which the Diet approved in a light-hearted manner at that time, undoubtedly gave a shock to the nation, and materially helped to cause a sharp reaction from the brief mood of buoyancy which marked the closing months of 1906. But, just as the people were themselves responsible in a large measure for the beginning of that boom, so they are now partly responsible for the continuance of the depression that followed it. Some publicists assert that the engagement of immense sums of capital on account of numerous enterprises started during the boom has crippled the people. The truth appears to be, however, that much of the embarrassment is caused by reluctance on the part of speculators to frankly abandon those unsound schemes. There is good authority for saying that nearly a thousand millions of gen are thus pledged, and that unless—which is in the last degree unlikely—another company-promoting mania prevail, these bubble enterprises can not hope to materialize even for a moment. On the other hand, if they were forthwith put into liquidation, a great sum of money would be released for investment. In this matter the people can help themselves much more substantially than the Government can help them. It is evident, too, that the ordeal through which the banks passed last year was not sufficiently drastic to effect a radical sifting. Several of the unfit still survive, constituting a source of danger. There is plenty, therefore, to be done independently of the Treasury.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

Writing in the Michi on the subject of friendship, Mr. Matsumura Kaiseki says:—I have quite a number of real friends. Among them there are learned doctors, authors, journalists, pastors, school teachers, politicians and business men. There are among them men with great strength of will, men of brilliant intellectual gifts, men noted for their polite accomplishments and men rich in spiritual experience. But not one of them was chosen by me on account of any of these characteristics. They were selected by me because they are all good at heart. Not one of my friends is a man of bad intentions or evil designs. In the matter of religious belief they differ widely. There are among them Buddhists, Confucianists, Philosophers, Christians, of the old school of Christian thought and of the new. But not one of them fails to come up to my standard in goodness of heart. (Ichī nin to shite yoi kokoro no hito taru ni rakudai suru mono wa arazaru nari.) Among religious people not a few fail to prove good friends. Some there are who teach religion as a means of livelihood; others who follow the profession of a minister for the sake of the authority and influence it gives them; others again seek thus to obtain a reputation. There are religious people who use all the opportunities that the religious life affords for purely personal aims. There are among religious people men who are black at heart, tearless men, shallow-brained men. Such people while professing religion are far from the Kingdom of Heaven. With such people I have nothing in common.

The Japanese practice of reading addresses to the spirits of the dead has always seemed to us very impressive. There are those who affirm that it shows clearly that survivors believe in the real individual existence of the spirit addressed. We have often consulted Japanese on this point and have been informed that what is said on such occasions, though actually addressed to the spirit of the departed, is intended to serve as solace for bereaved relatives. No public addresses to the spirits of the dead are allowed in Protestant Churches. At Roman Catholic funerals they occasionally are given. A very beautiful French oration of this kind was published in the columns of the Japan Mail a few years ago. Japanese addresses delivered at memorial services usually contain a short sketch of the life of the deceased. The July number of the Universalist, the organ of the Christian Progressives, contains two addresses to the spirit of the late Dr. Cate. One of these, written by Mr. N. Nagano, we translate literally as a specimen of this class of literature:—"Reverentially addressed to the spirit of our kind teacher Dr. Cate. For nearly 18 years most faithfully did you fulfil the mission which the Lord entrusted to you. Born with a mind for details, you ever felt keenly the weight of your responsibility, and we recognized that it was no ordinary pains that you took in planning the work of the church. It is quite certain that the cause of your illness was the day and night anxiety which you felt lest you should fail to fulfil your great mission. You fell a victim to this mission (Kimi wa jitsu ni sono shimei no tame ni taoretaru nari). How can we who have been taught and led by you fail to be stimulated by your example to do all we can to carry out your wishes? Your death (lit. long sleep, shinu) has given us great strength. Pray note this in the land of shades (Kimiyo! meimoku) (冥目 seyo).* When you first came to this country theological controversy was at its height. Christian liberals were engaged in destroying the old faith and had not reached the stage of espousing a positive and active form of belief. This you greatly deplored. Now the spirit of the times is different and our Christianity shows a strong tendency towards establishment on a sound basis, and we may say that the day is not far distant when your great desire in this respect will be realized. You always taught us to value above everything positive belief as the highest of all forms of faith. Can we your followers afford to forget this your real aim? We have taken it deeply to heart and are about to act on it. Let your mind be at rest. The liberality, the sympathy, the patience, the many fine traits of character which your life taught us, along with your departed spirit, will ever abide with us. You will remain our teacher to all time. You are not dead. You live and work among us still. Mourn not your bodiless state; for the strength of your spirit is yet great. Let this comfort you in the other world."

The July number of the Universalist contains an article from the pen of Mr. Abe Isoo, of the Waseda University, on the accumulation of fine traits of character. Mr. Abe holds that as a factor in the production of superior types of manhood and womanhood the physical condition and intellectual and moral qualities of the parents stand for more than education. Education polishes, but no amount of polishing will make copper gold. The number of ways in which children gain or lose as a result of the instincts, proclivities and antipathies which they receive from their parents is very large. Mr. Abe goes into hereditary questions connected with the birth of children. He says that certain Japanese medical men are of opinion that the eldest child in Japan is apt to be physically and mentally inferior, for reasons which we can not state here, but which seem to us convincing. Mr. Abe thinks that in Japan as elsewhere the children who suffer from over-indulgence in drink on the part of parents are very numerous. But one hopeful sign, he says, is the fact that the amount of sake made is decreasing. Mr. Abe believes that traits of character can be preserved in families and handed down from generation to generation like heirlooms. But this can only be done when suitable marriages are made and when married couples carefully observe the physical laws bearing on the production of healthy, highly developed children.

A new religious and literary Magazine made its appearance last month called the Shintenchū (New Heaven and New Earth). It has been favourably noticed by the Yomiuri Shimbun, the Nippon and the Yorozu Chōhō. It professes to be the organ of new ideas on religion and literature. Whether they are discoverable is, forsooth, open to doubt. Various well known writers have promised to contribute to its pages, and the first number contains congratulatory letters from Dr. Nitobe, Mr. Yamaji Aizan, of the Kokumin Shimbun, Mr. Natsume Sōseki, the well known novelist, Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō, Dr. Tsubouchi, Mr. Kōda Rohan, and other prominent men. Whether there is room for a Magazine of this kind it is hard to say. But whereas nearly all the well edited existing religious organs are more or less sectarian or are run with the object of propagating special opinions on ethics and religion, the Shintenchū will be quite independent. The new magazine is published by the Seikōsha Koishikawa, Tōkyō. We hope to notice it more fully next month.

"A Fundamental Question connected with Mission Work" is the title of a leading article that appeared in the Kirisutokyo Sekai (Congregational) a few weeks ago, the substance of which is as follows:—There are two ways of propagating a religion, a direct and an indirect way. The former consists of preaching and teaching its doctrines; the latter consists of the influence wielded by converts, socially, politically, educationally and journalistically. Now, indirect methods of propagating the Gospel of Christ in this country seem to us to have been very successful. The influence of Christianity on general thought is manifest everywhere. It is impossible to take up a magazine or a newspaper without coming across evidence of this fact. There is throughout the country a general acquaintance with Christian doctrines and Christian ideals. This is largely the result of the quiet influence of Christians in the towns and villages where they reside. But when we turn to the direct methods of propagating Christianity and ask ourselves whether they have been equally successful, truth demands a negative answer. Can it be said that the direct fruits of 50 years of preaching have been abundant as far as Protestant Christianity is concerned? It is true that we have nearly 100,000 Protestant Christians, but this is only in the proportion of one person in every five hundred of the population. The population is increasing, at the rate of some 500,000 a year, but our converts only increase at the rate of four or five thousand a year. The ratio does not alter, so that in proportion to the population, Protestant Christianity is actually on the decline and there is no saying that before long the number of our converts may not appear utterly insignificant. (Jinkō ni tai suru shinjō no sū shidai ni sono wariai wo genjite, tsui ni goku shō bunsū-ryō, sunawachi kaimu [nothing] ni chikaki hiri tomo nari owarazaru too ho sen.) As to numbers it is quite plain that the history of Protestantism during the past half a century shows nothing to boast of. When we compare the numerical results of the past 50 years with Buddhist statistics relating to the converts made by the preaching of Nichiren and Shinran or to the success achieved in a short space of time by such sects as the Tenrikyōkai and the Kurozumi-ka,* we perceive how insignificant they are. It may of course be alleged that the higher the form of religion taught the longer it takes to propagate it. This explanation may satisfy some people, but it does not satisfy us. It seems to us cause for wonder that with all our preachers and all our organization we should only be able to gather in a few thousand converts in any one year. We seem to be trying to dip up the ocean with a shell. (Kaigara wo motte daikai no nizu wa kuman to suru to sono sa hatsushite ikubaku co?)

We are quite aware that the numerical test is not the only one that is to be applied to the spread of a religion. But nevertheless it is quite certain that want of adequate numerical progress must be attributed to one of two possible causes. Either it must be the result of lack of vitality or merit in the religion itself or it must proceed from the presence of obstacles to the spread of the religion of one kind or another. Now in this country our want of success is plainly traceable to the paucity of evangelists and to the low status which most of them occupy. Everywhere the fields are ripe for the harvest, but suitable labourers are only found by ones and twos, instead of by the hundred. Then the position occupied in society by our pastors is so low that their influence is small. The social position of a minister is such that it is very hard to induce promising young men to enter the ministry. Most of our pastors are educationally behind the age. Education has gone ahead since they entered the ministry. The training received at our Divinity Halls is all based on conservative lines. It is about what it was 30 years ago. But as regards the standard of learning maintained our Theological Colleges to-day would hardly bear comparison with what they were 30 years ago. Is it any wonder then that our pastors make little headway in society, where they are rated as men whose education is not above that of an ordinary Middle School teacher? Though Buddhism has degenerated in many ways, though it is behind the age, yet the Buddhists have several Universities, where their young men receive a high-class education. In Europe and America, Theological Colleges where a high standard of learning is maintained abound. A little time ago there was a talk of establishing a first-class Divinity Hall here, but the project has evidently been abandoned. Our present training colleges are hardly equal to the task of supplying suitable men for filling the vacancies that occur in our pastorates, much less to turn out men of the type that the age demands in large numbers. We do not think that the views expressed above err on the side of excessive pessimism. The facts we have stated can not be set aside. Two questions demand our attention. (1) How can we raise our numerical strength in the country? (2) How can we raise the standard attained by our native pastors? One thing is certain that if we adopt the laissez faire policy in this matter, mission work in Japan will have to be pronounced a failure. The great want of the day is men. If we can't obtain them, success is impossible.* In order to obtain the right kind of men, the Church must raise the status of pastors, must provide for their better training, must have a pastors' pension fund, and the like. Christians can be found to subscribe the money necessary for raising the educational standard and the social status of pastors. But other measures are needed for getting hold of the right kind of men. There are among lay preachers a good many young men who if approached in the right spirit and if certain inducements were held out to them, would become candidates for the ministry. It is the duty of all ministers to canvas for new candidates for the pastorate. To leave things as they are now is to insure failure. How to obtain a supply of duly qualified workers is the most pressing of all questions connected with Christian propagandism to-day.

The Japanese Branch of the Greek Church held its annual conference last month. It opened on July 15th and closed on the 18th. On this year's meeting the Seikyō Shimpō comments as follows:—Year after year one fact connected with our gatherings impresses us, that is, the great difference between the actual and the ideal. Engaged as we ourselves are week in and week out in literary work, our minds are naturally absorbed by the study of high ideals, and we confess that at times we fail to realize the difficulties encountered by those whose duty it is to put ideals into practice. The reports given by our workers at the Conference showed that considerable progress had been made during the year. They also conveyed to theorists some idea of the numerous obstacles to be overcome by Christian workers in this country. As regards the various resolutions brought up for discussion at the meetings, it is correct to say that seven or eight out of every ten of them were idealistic in character. It was hardly surprising that practical workers should reject measures that they deemed quite impracticable. This in many instances they did. The discussion of unattainable ideals at such Conferences is perhaps not the best way of spending time. The extent to which the central governing body of our church should interfere with local action in the carrying out of various schemes is a question that demands serious consideration. A Conference should indicate in a general way what is the opinion of the Church on proposed undertakings and the way in which they should be carried out, but as far as possible all details should be settled by the local bodies entrusted with the task of putting into operation the measures decided on by the Conference.

* We are reminded by this remark of one of the famous sayings of Saigō Takamori in which he dwelt on the powerlessness of the finest laws, methods and institutions in the absence of men of character to apply them. Nani kodo, seido hōhō wo renzuru tomo, sono hito ni arazareba okonawaregatashi. Hito atte nochi sono hō mata okonawaru. Hito wa daitchi no takara ni shite, onore sono hito ni naru no kokoro-gake kanyō-nari.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

Nearly every year a resolution is brought forward recommending that translators and teachers in the Divinity School should be required to engage in evangelistic work in addition to discharging their own special duties as translators and teachers. Those who recommend this are not well acquainted with the requirements and the circumstances of our Mission. There is a great demand for translations throughout the country. The members of our Mission who are engaged exclusively in translating are only three in number. To expect these men to engage in evangelistic work could only mean delay in the publication of the books which they have in hand. This would be poor economy. Surely a mission as big as ours can well afford to have three of its members engaged in translating valuable books. Then it by no means follows that a good translator will make a good evangelist. To say that translators should turn themselves into preachers in order to fill gaps in the preaching staff shows ignorance of the fact that success in anything depends largely on adaptability. If among translators or school teachers there are men who have a gift for speaking, then these men will hardly need to be ordered by the Conference to take part in evangelistic work provided they can spare the time for doing so, they will voluntarily undertake it. To make general rules that shall apply to everybody in such matters is most unwise. The functions fulfilled by translators and teachers of theology are equally important with those of the preacher of the Gospel. The work carried on by the one worker is complementary to that carried on by the other.

Respecting church organization no important change was made by the Conference this year. We are not in favour of constantly altering forms and ways of procedure. Success depends on the spirit that is put into the work carried on. Display of spirit there certainly was at our Conference. Each of the reports made by our pastors evinced a keen interest in the work which had been entrusted to him.

We gather the following particulars from the full report of the Conference published in the August 1st. number of the Seikyō Shimpō. Thirty ordained Ministers were present at the Conference, 28 of which were Japanese. Three Japanese priests were absent on account of illness. The number of adult baptisms during the year was 401, and those of children 375. The total number of Greek Church converts in Japan is 30,438. The Church has 91 Catechists and 21 acting Catechists (Fukudenkyōsha) and six student-catechists. Three of the Catechists are self-supporting. The total number of unordained workers is only 161 this year, whereas last year it was 204, a decrease of 43. A few of these died, but the majority left the mission or were dismissed for various reasons.

From Archbishop Nicolai's opening address we extract the following remarks:—The year has passed peacefully away and we find ourselves assembled once more to hear reports of what has been accomplished and to take counsel together respecting future work. One thing we must take note of, and that is that, compared with last year, there has been a falling off in the results of evangelistic work in the mission as a whole. It must be born in mind, however, that in some of our districts greater progress has been made this year than in any previous year. What is the cause of the general falling off? Some attribute it to the reduction in the number of workers which took place in accordance with resolutions passed at last year's Conference. It was decided at that Conference that certain expenses hitherto defrayed by drawing from the money supplied by the Russian Church should be defrayed by the native Churches. Some of the Churches have shown their ability and willingness to do this. Christian zeal implies self-support and independence and I trust the day is not far distant when the Japanese Branch of the Greek Church will be in a position to provide all the money required for carrying on the work of the mission.

The July number of the Seikyō Shimpō contains an article written by Mr. K. Mochizuki entitled Genkon no Kyūmu to shite no Dendō iken, which represents the Greek Church in Japan to be deficient in the spirit of independence. It seems to be the opinion of some Greek Church Christians that the mission is suffering from the free use of money subscribed in Russia in the early days of Christian work in Japan. Missions that begin badly in the matter of using foreign money instead of insisting on Churches' establishing funds for themselves invariably find it very hard to right things later on. We have gathered from the perusal of many articles on this subject that the procedure of the various missions in respect of the use of foreign money for work among the Japanese differs considerably. The ideal of every mission is to make all churches independent and self-supporting and to leave their management to the Japanese as much as possible. But only comparatively few sects have begun to realize this ideal. Financially our native Church seems no better situated than it was last year, says Mr. Mochizuki, nor are there any signs of a general awakening among our Christians. Upon this question of financial independence rests the whole future of our church and so we can't afford to sit still with folded arms while it remains unsettled. Self-support and independence are only attainable when Christians are thoroughly sincere and earnest. If, then, we can bring about a general revival in our Church, financial independence will follow as a natural result. Mr. Mochizuki goes on to express dissatisfaction with the dismissal of Christian workers that took place last year. He then propounds an elaborate scheme for rendering churches independent and self-supporting. His proposals do not seem to have been discussed at the General Conference. Whether they could be put into operation or not the leading members of the Greek Church are no doubt the best judges. Mr. Mochizuki makes an earnest and eloquent appeal to his fellow-Christians to take upon themselves the responsibility of maintaining their own churches. Such appeals have appeared in the pages of the Seikyō Shimpō repeatedly, but with the rank and file of the Greek Church Army there seems to be much lagging, and it is quite evident that no sudden change in the situation is likely to take place.

"Culture should go on to the end of Life" is the title of an article appearing in No. 161 of the Waseda Gakuin from the pen of Mr. Shimada Saburō of which the gist is as follows:—When nearing the age of 80 Yasui Sokuken [1799—1876] still studied most diligently. When asked by his pupils why he did this, he replied, "An old man has but few years left in which to complete his self-culture. Hence he needs to apply himself even more earnestly than younger men." This has been the way with a large number of great men. They have gone on attaining to greater heights right up to the hour of death. As long as a man lives his education is incomplete, he has still much to learn. Men who received Doctors' degrees years ago are now generally considered by the world to be out of date; the reason being that a good many of them make no effort to keep themselves abreast of the age in which they live. The older one gets the more valuable to the world ought one to become, owing to the possession of ripe experience and accumulated knowledge. 'Tis somewhat pitiable and a reversal of the right order of things for old people to be dispised because they are old. (Sore ga furui kara to itte Reibetsu reishō (冷奥) wo ukeru to iu no wa, isasaka jiri wo tentō shitaru hanashi de, ikani mo nasakenai shidai de aru.) According to the Confucian ideal, all who aim at doing something worth doing in life should turn their attention earnestly to study at the age of 15, should be thoroughly established as scholars at the age of 30, and at the age of 40 should no longer be subject to delusions or illusions. It is at this age that in China a man commences his official career. Confucius says that even at the age of 70 a man can gratify whatever tastes he has. He himself retained the inquiring spirit right up to the time of death. A curious phenomenon is witnessed in this country. The young men of to-day are surpassed by their seniors in self-culture and self-education. Deficient knowledge, crude ideas, lack of self-control, half-developed powers—these give our young men little concern. It is said that we are troubled in this country with early development and early decay, but the fact is that in many cases the decay comes without any proper development at all. There are a great many young men who expect to obtain rank, influence and distinction in society without the preparation for the attainment of these things which self culture alone can furnish.

Writing in the fitsugyo no Nihon on the mental distress from which so many young men are said to be suffering in this country, Dr. Nitobe says:—There are few young fellows that enter life without passing through years of perplexity and mental depression. In some cases lads of 14 or 15 are enveloped in gloom from which they do not emerge till they are going on for 30. In other cases the clouds begin to gather at the age of 18 or 19 and sunshine does not reappear till a dozen years have passed. Confucius showed how carefully he had observed mental phenomena when he described the years between 15 and 30 as years of bewilderment. According to him not till a man reaches 40 does he cease to worry himself over life's perplexities. Our lads and young men to-day ask themselves why they were born and why they are compelled to spend so many weary hours in study. Life has to them few joys and much hardship. They hope to find some exit from their misery, but most of them fail to do so. "Preaching to them against the state of mind into which they have fallen is of little use. They need sympathy and practical advice.

Scholars in this country have always differed as to whether the Japanese people are religiously inclined or not, according to the current diverse conceptions of what is to be included in the word religion. In a recent number of the Rinri Kōenshū (Collection of Lectures on Ethics) we find an essay entitled:—"The Essential Elements of the Japanese Soul" by Mr. Y. Masuno. After observing that the most prominent traits in Japanese character are patriotism and a martial spirit, Mr. Masuno goes on to draw attention to the presence of sentiments in the Japanese mind which he thinks to be distinctly religious. (1) There is a very great respect for what is just and right. This comes from Confucianism, but it owes much of its power in this country to the way in which it has been upheld and acted on by the warrior class and embodied in the moral code known as Bushidō. (2) There is in the Japanese mind a strong feeling of respect for the gods. This sentiment is very powerful among us, says Mr. Masuno, and it may be regarded as one of the most brilliant of our national traits. (3) We believe in the equality of all men. This belief came from Buddhism. Along with the abolition of all the artificial distinctions between different sets of men, between rich and poor, high and low or between one race and another, comes the doctrine of universal love and charity which Buddhists enjoin and which we have accepted as part of our creed. There are those who say that belief in a future is a surer mark of a religious mind than belief in the equality of all men and universal brotherhood. But this is not our opinion, says Mr. Masuno. The Buddhist doctrine concerning the equalization that permeates the whole universe, however, properly understood, embraces the idea of a future life. (Mushabetsu shiō wo jikan ni ōyō shita mono ga raiset no shinnen de, kore too kūkan ni ōyō shita mono ga hakunai no seishin de aru to wata-kushi wa kai suru. As I understand it, when applied to time equality implies belief in a future life, and when applied to space it is no other than the spirit of universal love.)

In reference to the three above-named essential psychical characteristics of the Japanese people, Mr. Masuno asks whether they are being maintained in this age of change. Of this he does not seem to be quite certain. He observes that the Japanese are known abroad for the possession of two qualities only—patriotism and the martial spirit. It they are religious in the strict sense of that epithet, the outside world has failed to discover it so far. The general impression of visitors to the country is that they do not care much for religion. Mr. Masuno recommends educationists to pay more attention to the development of the religious sentiments of young people. How this is to be accomplished is not stated. The Shintō belief in gods many and lords many and the abstruse, metaphysical Buddhist doctrines relating to spirit and matter are alike ill suited to form a basis for religious teaching in schools, and, as a Christian writer observes, all attempts to revive an interest in doctrines of this sort are foredoomed to failure, the dreams of Japanese conservatives notwithstanding.

* The no-distinction doctrine of the Buddhists does away with past, present and future, that is, with time distinctions. According to this teaching the souls of men have always existed in some form or other and always will exist in some form or other. The little Ego, man's spirit, came originally from the great Ego, the Spirit of the universe, and will be absorbed by the great Ego at the end of its transmigration.—(WRITER OF SUMMARY.)

YOKOHAMA.

A woman (31), living in Tokiwa-cho, was arrested on Aug. 20th by the Isezaki-cho police on a charge of theft. Her method, it appears, was to employ little children to steal.

About a hundred fishermen quarrelled among themselves on Aug. 19th at Oiso, several of them sustaining injuries. On Aug. 21st, some superintendents of the Yokohama police proceeded to the place to hold an enquiry.

About 7.15 a.m. on Aug. 21st a gentle shock of earthquake was felt in Yokohama. The duration was very short.

A telegram has been received in Yokohama to the effect that early on the morning of Aug. 22nd, fire broke out in the house of Mr. Kobayashi Beika (J. E. de Becker), Kamakura, destroying the building. The cause of the outbreak is not known, but incendiarism by thieves is suspected.

The Yokohama Harbour Office intends to make a small reclamation outside the breakwater 1,000 metres to the left of the red light at the entrance to the inner harbour, and to build a quarantine station thereon. A submarine telephone line will be laid between the head office and the new branch. The construction is expected to be completed by the end of this year.

About 11 p.m. on Aug. 21st, a man, apparently a student, threw himself before a freight train near Oiso Station, on the Tokaido line, and was run over. The body, not being identified, was handed over to the village authorities for interment.

The outbreak of cholera among the passengers and crew of the British steamer Arratoon Apar, which is still detained at the Nagahama Quarantine Station, seems to be gaining in virulence. Dr. Heary of the Hongkong Government, one of the passengers, was attacked by the disease on Aug. 22nd. Capt. Stuart and the chief engineer of the steamer are also ill. In these circumstances, the Yokohama Harbour Office has ordered the ship to remain in quarantine five days more, though she was to have been released on Aug. 22nd. Further disinfecting measures will be carried out on the ship. A correspondent reports that the Indians of the crew showed obstinacy towards the Japanese quarantine officials.

Late on the night of Aug. 21st, a mad dog attacked a policeman on Jizozaka, injuring him severely on the right foot. He killed the animal with his sword, and sent it to the office of a veterinary surgeon for examination.

A girl attempted to set fire to a house in Nakamura at 9.30 p.m. on Aug. 23rd, but the flames were extinguished before any damage had been done. It appears that she had had a quarrel with the owner of the house, and committed the crime in a spirit of revenge. She was arrested by the Kotobuki cho police.

A man broke into the house of a fish dealer living in Negishi late on the night of Aug. 22nd. He demanded money from two of the occupants and, on the refusal of his request, he injured them severely with a knife. The offender was arrested on the spot by the Bluff police.

Mr. K. Hara, formerly Minister for Home Affairs, left Yokohama on Aug. 24th by the Empress of India for America. Later he will proceed to England and the Continent, probably extending his tour to the Balkan peninsula. About the beginning of February, next year, he will return to Japan via Siberia.

As already reported, Dr. and Mrs. R. Koch left Yokohama on Aug. 24th by the Canadian mail steamer Empress of India for Vancouver on their way to Washington. A large number of the leading doctors of Tokyo and Yokohama and of the Japanese army and Navy, as well as several officers of the various Departments, were present on the steamer to wish them bon voyage. Fire works were exhibited in the Customs grounds.

The prominent tea-traders of Yokohama and Tokyo intend to provide a special house to welcome the officers and bluejackets of the American Fleet. The promoters will entertain the Americans with tea at any time during their stay in Yokohama. Japanese curio dealers intend to establish a bazaar in Hon-cho, Ichome, for the benefit of the American seamen, where goods will be sold at cost price.

The construction of three bonded warehouses on the new reclamation off Kaigan-dori is almost completed. The buildings will be used by the Customs from about Oct. 1st.

An outbreak of fire occurred at 2 a.m. on Aug. 25th at No. 145, Yamashita-cho, in a two-storied brick building, separated into two tenements, belonging to a Chinaman named Wu Sun-jui. The flames which originated in an upstairs room spread at once throughout the house, and destroyed it in an hour. Two firemen were severely injured through the falling of a wall, and were removed to the Jyuzen Hospital. The cause is believed to have been the overturning of a lamp. The building was insured with a foreign company for yen 3,000.

About 4 p.m. on Monday a man attacked a youth in Yoshihama-cho, and stole from him a purse containing yen 12. The thief is still at large.

A soldier was found on Aug. 23rd crushed to death on the railway near the village of Machida, Tachibana-gori. On the same day a similar tragedy occurred on the railway near Kawakami, Kamakura, the victim being an old man. Both are believed to have been suicides.

The silk handkerchief traders of Yokohama have presented a joint complaint to the ministers for Finance, Agriculture and Commerce, in connexion with the notification, issued by the Tax Bureau, which came into force on Aug. 1st. The petitioners say that the regulations are quite contrary to business, and will impede the silk piece goods trade. They requested the ministers to abolish the new regulations.

The Mitsu Bishi Company has lodged a complaint in the Yokohama Local Court against Mr. Takashima (Kahei) a well-known business man of Yokohama, petitioning to give a decision for selling the property of the latter. In an interview with our representative, Mr. Ishida, Chief of the Sanitary Office, said that the hydrophobia which has been prevalent in Yokohama since the beginning of July has now come to an end. Special attention has been paid to the Bluff, Honmoku, and Negishi, where the first cases of the disease appeared. Between Aug. 3rd and the 25th, 140 ownerless dogs have been killed, and the prefectural notification, No. 71, has been strictly enforced. Four foreigners and five Japanese were punished with fines of yen 1 each for not muzzling their dogs. Among the dogs killed, six were infected with the disease. Four wild dogs living in the woods were also killed. During the period, nine persons have been attacked by mad dogs. One of the patients is undergoing treatment at a hospital in Tokyo, and the others are being treated here by Drs. Saito and Shimidzu. The lymph used for inoculation was taken from rabbits.

We are requested to state that the law suit between Mr. K. Takashima and the Mitsu Bishi Company, reported in a previous issue of this paper, has been settled out of Court.

According to a telegram received at the Yokohama Chief Police Office, the dead body of a young woman was washed ashore off Odawara on the morning of Aug. 26th. The message adds that she seems to have been strangled and thrown into the sea.

A large lighter laden with sundry goods from Yokohama struck a rock on the evening of Aug. 22nd off Misaki, on its way to Chiba, and was wrecked. The sendoes being saved by fishing boats.

An employee of the Yokohama Railway Company has been arrested in Tokyo by the Tobe police on a charge of theft, and was removed to the Yokohama District Court on Aug. 25th. It appears that in April last the accused stole 140 casks of cement from a warehouse belonging to his office, and sold them for yen 732. He spent the money at various race-meetings.

The health returns of Kanagawa prefecture during the week ended Aug. 22nd are as follows:—

Note.—The cases of cholera among the crew and passengers of the Arratoon Apar now at the Nagahama Quarantine Station are not included in the above.

The British steamer Arratoon Apar which has been detained at the Nagahama quarantine station since Aug. 17th, was released on Thursday, arriving at Yokohama the same evening. There were six cases of cholera among the crew and passengers, 60 in all. Three of the patients died and as many, including Dr. Henry, are still undergoing treatment at the quarantine hospital.

On Aug. 27th, the principal officials of the Yokohama City Office proceeded to the Naval Department, where they consulted with the Naval Reception Committee as to the proposed welcome to the American Battleship Fleet.

On Wednesday morning an old woman, living in Kitagawa, was found to have hung herself. Some weeks ago she came from Kobe, and was in a weak state of health.

FORGERY OF SHARES.

Twelve men, including a lawyer, an ex-policeman, and a school text-book author, have been arrested in Tokyo on a charge of fraud. On Aug. 26th, they were removed to the Public Procurators' Office in the Tokyo District Court. It appears that the accused counterfeited a number of the shares of various mercantile companies, and on Aug. 18th sold a false share of the Nippon Brewery Co., and five shares of the Nippon Cement Company, at the office of Messrs. Stanton and Schoene No. 51, Yokohama, for yen 600. They also committed a similar fraud at several places in Tokyo, thus obtaining in all about ten thousand yen. Meanwhile, when Messrs. Stanton and Schoene asked the Nippon Brewery Co., to register what they bought from the accused, the foreign stock-brokers found that the securities were valueless. They at once intimated the matter to the Tokyo Metropolitan Police Office. When the police searched the forgers' houses, they discovered a number of false shares bearing the names of the Kanagafuchi Cotton Spinning, Nippon Brewery, Nippon Cement, Kwansei Railway, Hanshin Electric Railway, Hoden Kerosene Oil Company and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha.

THE IMPERIAL COURT.

The wedding between Princess Kane, daughter of the Emperor, and Prince Kita Shirakawa will take place in March, next year. The betrothal will be announced about the beginning of September. Mr. Nagasaki, an official of the Imperial Household, has left for London and Paris to purchase articles needed for the nuptial ceremony.

According to a telegram received at the Imperial Court, Prince Fushimi, the younger, who has been staying in England since last year, visited Italy at the commencement of the summer vacation, and returned to London on Aug. 13th.

The Crown Prince of Korea arrived at Oiso at 7.47 p.m. on Aug. 21st. He put up at the villa of Prince Ito. He will return to Tokyo on Monday.

Aug. 31st being the 31st anniversary of the birthday of the Prince Imperial, the usual celebration will be made at Tamosawa, in the Nikko district, where His Highness is staying in company with the Princess Imperial.

Prince and Princess Kan-in, now at Odawara, and Princess Nashimoto, at present at Katase, visited Princess Dowager Komatsu on Aug. 23rd at Mishima, where they spent the day.

Prince and Princess Higashi Fushimi returned on Aug. 23rd from Shuzenji spa, in Idzu.

THE LAW COURTS.

ALLEGED TREASON.

S. Ishiyama, a lawyer of Sapporo, and K. Kushitani, a civil engineer, who have been undergoing examination on the above charge before the Tokyo District Court, have been committed for trial.

According to the decision given by Preliminary Examination Judge T. Ushio, Kushitani stole a photograph of a naval station about August 1900 while in the employ of the Naval Temporary Construction Office. He then made over a portion of the photograph to Ishiyama with a view to selling it to a foreigner. Ishiyama asked S. Sudzuki, an interpreter of the Russian Embassy in Tokyo, to bring the photograph to the notice of one of the attaches of the Embassy. The accused should be dealt with, added the decision, under Arts. 1 and 2 of the Military Secrets Preservation Law.

When Mr. T. Watanabe, a lawyer employed by the accused for their defence, visited the accused on Aug. 20th at the Tokyo Jail, says the Yoji, Ishiyama stated that the defendants had made a suggestion to the Chief of the Hokkaido police, and Mr. R. Koga, Director of the Police Bureau, regarding the photograph question without however, any success. The accused added that Kushitani was trying to obtain yen 100,000 for the photograph.

DR. POST.

Many Yokohama residents will remember Dr. Post, Medical Director of the Eastern branch of the Equitable, who left in November last to take up a similar position in London. The Vice-President, Mr. G. T. Wilson, whose name is so closely associated with the Society, being in London in June last gave a banquet in the Piccadilly Hotel, at which were present many persons closely associated with the Society, including Sir Percy Sanderson, for many years British Consul-General in New York, Mr. J. T. Hamilton of Yokohama, and Dr. Post, late of Yokohama.

From a short report of the proceedings it appears that Mr. Hamilton was very cordially received by the guests, and Dr. Post, who has quickly taken a high place in everybody's regard, was received with a volley of cheers.

Those who knew Dr. Post and his charming wife during their all too brief stay in Yokohama will be glad to know that he has won golden opinions in London as he did here, and that his future is full of promise.

MAD DOGS.

A correspondent enquires how a dog may be recognized as mad. Sunny illusions exist upon the point: these may as well be dispersed as a preliminary to arriving at the truth.

It is not the case that the mad dog dreads water, and always foams at the mouth. Nor is it the case that dogs are more likely to go mad in what are called the "dog-days"—which as a matter of fact have no connection whatever with dogs, but have been so called because when Sirius, the principal star of the constellation Canis Major, rises together with the sun, their combined influence was popularly supposed to produce the highest temperature.

In Korea, a country literally infested with mad dogs, the worst time of the year from this point of view is the spring,—particularly the month of March—when, after the privations of the winter, the dogs are, so to speak, fed up. So far from avoiding water, mad dogs have been observed to follow, in their curious zig-zag way, the courses of streams, and when they drink, to do so deeply, plunging their noses and even their heads below the surface. The writer has known a mad dog to swim two miles across a bay, and drop exhausted to the floor of the first house he came to on the other side, where he was promptly despatched.

The first signs of canine madness are irritability, restlessness and obstinacy. In short, the poor creature is ill. In a day or two he becomes violent, and his bark acquires a characteristic sharp, high-pitched note. He will bite everything he comes across, not excluding his own tail and feet, if he can get nothing better. If unfettered, he will be constantly on the move, and soon becomes thin and weak. In the last stages of the disease, when the animal is so exhausted that it cannot stand, the jaw drops, and a stringy, ropy saliva hangs from it. Hence the popular fiction of "foaming at the mouth."

Undoubtedly the surest signs for the casual observer who unexpectedly encounters a mad dog are that it invariably runs tail down, and often head down, snapping at everything in its path.

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

MR. ASQUITH AND THE SUFFRAGETTES.

The recent entertainment of Mr. Asquith, the British Premier, by his brethren at the Bar, was marked by humorous and delightedly received allusions to certain episodes of the female Suffragist movement. The Attorney-General, in his opening speech, remarked that they were perhaps just in time in offering that compliment to their guest, for, said he, "his eminence attracts the lightnings. Already people have begun to break his windows. The gentle sex say he is cold and callous. In order to soften his heart they chain themselves to his railings, and all the time he goes on working, with brutal indifference, in a back room." (Laughter.)

Sir Edward Clarke, in proposing Mr. Asquith's health, expressed the hope that there would never be a lack of lawyers to defend the English nation against the twin dangers of the Socialist and the Suffragette. The cheers were given with enormous enthusiasm, Sir Edward himself interpolating the "Hip hip-his."

The Premier in his reply thus wittily referred to his recent adventure. "The Attorney has mentioned that it is just about one hundred years since a practising member of the Bar was last appointed Prime Minister of England. He was unkind enough to remind you that Perceval came to a sudden and untimely end. Absit omen!" (Laughter.)

But for each of us life has its own peculiar dangers. History records a legendary character who seems to have tried to deal with a feminist movement, somewhere in Thrace, by the device of euphonious generalities. As the result of that policy he was torn to pieces by wild women. (Loud laughter.) Happily, in spite of the adage, history does not often precisely repeat itself."

DIVERSE VIEWS.

To this question of the hour there are many sides—on which 'doctors disagree' and where even angels may fear to tread. Looked at from the fundamental or racial point of view, the following declaration on the subject from a scientist may give food for thought.

A Finnish physician, Dr. Onni Granholm, even accuses the suffrage for women movement of increasing insanity. At Nurmes, it appears, the number of lunatics was only 29 in 1900, with 11,881 inhabitants, but had reached 57 in 1906, with a population of 12,137. Neither heredity nor morbid religious movements explain the increase, and the socialistic and political excitements of Finland have not reached this remote place. But the women—especially teachers—are intensely interested in the newly acquired right to vote and hold office. The domestic life has suffered in consequence, becoming unfavourable for the development of the young, and more mental aberration is a result.

On the other hand a Shanghai contemporary, discussing the subject, maintains that there are good reasons why a change should be made.

"Women in these days are not the dullards or the dolls of the days gone by. Equality of education has put them on a level with the best of the sturdier sex. They take honours in university examinations, they are bracketed equal with the best wranglers. They adorn the ranks of the highest professions, and are to be found earning their daily bread on equal (or rather unequal) terms with their brothers and friends. It is too absurd to suppose that a system which offers the franchise to the fool, if only he have so much of this world's goods, can continue to deny it to the woman of culture possessed of equal means."

Honours in university examinations are all very well, but our contemporary, in its enumeration of the achievements of women, seems rather to lose sight of the one great issue of life, the first claim on womanhood and the declining birth-rate.

"PUNCH" ON THE SPLIT INFINITIVE.

The Court for the Consideration of Hitherto Unpunishable Offences was busily occupied on Thursday last, and the proceedings were of great public interest. The first case on the list was that of an Infinitive, who complained of having been violently assaulted and split by one John James Cropthorpe, described on the charge-sheet as a poet. The complainant appeared in the witness-box in a heavily-bandaged condition, and gave his evidence under the stress of great emotion. It appeared that the prisoner, a man of no attainments, had decided to write a poem entitled "A Song of Sunrise," and had hired the complainant to help him in the first line. The poem had been duly composed, printed and published in a sixpenny magazine, and had been signed by the prisoner with his full name. The first line appeared in the following form:—

To with the lark and with the sun arise. The complainant, in answer to the magistrate, admitted that he had been split before, but added that he had never been split so badly. Ordinary splittings by the insertion of one dividing word he could stand, but the prisoner's offence went far beyond that. A seven-word split gave rise to intolerable sufferings. At this point the complainant fainted, but revived after a strong dose of Lindley Murray had been administered by the magistrate's clerk.

The prisoner made a long and rambling statement in his defence, but called no witnesses. He urged that he had been educated in a public school and a university, and was now doing his best to keep a roof over the heads of his wife and family. He admitted that it was not necessary for him to write poetry. Even if he had committed an offence he pleaded that it was merely a technical one. He had had no intention of injuring the complainant. Quite the reverse. He asked the magistrate to deal with him lightly. In addition to his wife and children, he had an aged mother dependent on his exertions.

The magistrate, in passing sentence, said it was a very bad case. Poetry was very dangerous stuff, and must always be carefully handled, especially when the person employing it had had no previous experience of its use. This kind of thing had gone on too long, but the Legislature had decided that Infinitives were not to be split with impunity any more. It was sad to see a man in the prisoner's position. He might have supported his family by manual labour, for which his physical strength evidently fitted him. Instead of that he had chosen to be a poet. Having made his bed he must lie on it. He (the magistrate, was bound to see that the law was obeyed. Infinitives must be protected in their lawful avocations. If such crimes as the prisoner's went unpunished, we could none of us know whose turn it might be next. He took a very serious view of the prisoner's offence, and felt he should not be discharging his duty properly unless he passed upon him the heaviest sentence permitted by the law. The prisoner must undergo ten years' solitary confinement with a dictionary and a selection of novels written by ladies, to be followed by five years of rigorous confinement in a printing office. The gratitude of the public was due to Police-constable Blunt for the way in which he had prepared the case.

YACHTING.

A fresh southerly breeze made the racing on Saturday afternoon highly enjoyable. Only two boats started for the race round the Kawasaki Buoy, namely Mary (scratch) and Maid Marion, with an allowance of eighteen minutes. Mary at once took the lead which she increased all the way round the course, but only got home seventeen minutes and fifty-three seconds ahead of Maid Marion. The latter therefore takes the prize on handicap.

Five 22 raters, Edna, Sunbeam, Winsome, Pele and Elsa raced around the Tachibana, Mandarin Bluff, and Lightship course for the "Vice-Commodore's Cup." Edna crossed the line just ten seconds ahead of Winsome, Sunbeam close up a good third.

In the Lark class there were eight starters Nos. 3, 4, 5, 10, 11, 12, 14 and 15. The course lay round the Mandarin and lightship marks. No. 11, sailed by Mr. Mason, won; No. 3, second with No. 10 third.

THE FAR EASTERN PUBLIC HALL CO., LTD.

An Extraordinary General Meeting of this Company was held at No. 183, Yamashita-cho, at 4 p.m., on the 27th inst. There were present Messrs. C. F. McWilliams, D. Marshall (Chair), B. M. Ward, C. E. Maligny and J. F. Drummond (Acting Secretary). The notice calling the meeting was read and the minutes of the last meeting confirmed. Proposed from the Chair and seconded by Mr. McWilliams, the Special resolution passed at the meeting held on 17th inst. was confirmed.

According to a telegram from Mr. Nomura, Japanese Consul in Vladivostok, two floating mines were observed on Aug. 7th and 9th respectively off Possiet Bay.

According to a London telegram, Mr. Wilbur Wright, whose aeroplane has met with great success in Paris, flew six miles in seven minutes. This constitutes an aerial record.

An Osaka telegram states that all the members of the committee of the Kwansei Race Club have resigned. On Aug. 24th, Mr. R. Emori and ten others were elected to fill the vacancies.

The New York Equitable Life Insurance Company has obtained sanction of its plans for the construction of a 62 storied building 1,000 feet in height, in the City. The cost is estimated at $10,000,000.

A baseball match was played between the Diamond Head Club and the team of the Keio Gijiku College on Aug. 23rd at Honolulu. At the end of the game the score stood at 5 runs to 4 in favour of the Japanese. The Japanese players will leave Honolulu by the Monchuria for Yokohama; where that vessel is due on Sept. 10th.

The Lambeth Conference concluded with a Communion at St. Paul's Cathedral at which 243 bishops were present.

Admiral Togo, chief of the Naval Staff Office, left Tokyo on Aug. 24th for Aomori where naval manoeuvres are shortly to take place.

The Tenyo Maru has brought on her last trip a large amount of stores and ammunition consigned to the U.S. Government at Manila.

A connexion by wireless telegraphy has been established between the Eiffel Tower in Paris and Cape Finisterre on the north-west coast of Spain.

T. Okamoto, the master of the Fukuyama Railway Station, has been arrested on a charge of having misappropriated yen 700 belonging to his office.

A floating mine was discovered by a fisherman on Aug. 17th off Yagoshi. He brought it to Hakodate, where it was exploded by a number of bluejackets from the Mikasa.

The steamer Ko un Maru ran down a fishing boat on the night of Aug. 19th off the district of Kuga, Yamaguchi prefecture. The boat was destroyed but the fishermen were saved.

According to an official telegram, the crop of cocoons in Italy this year is estimated at 52,000,000 kilos. That of 1907 was 57,580,000 kilos and that of 1906 was 53,830,000 kilos.

About 4 p.m. on Aug. 21st, fire broke out in a dyeing factory in Osaka, destroying the building and eleven others. The factory was insured with the Meiji Fire Insurance Company for yen 13,000.

Fire broke out on the morning of Aug. 24th in a warehouse belonging to the Kure Railway Station, destroying the building together with the contents, consisting of oils, raw cotton, cotton piece goods, flour, rice, etc. The damage is estimated at yen 80,000.

The game of Baseball played on Sunday morning between the Connor Club and the Yokohama Baseball Club, was called off at the beginning of the 6th inning owing to dissatisfaction, on the part of the Japanese, with the Umpire's decision. The score at the time was 5 to 3 in favour of the Yokohama Baseball Club.

The voyage to New York completed by the Lusitania on July 10th was an ideal summer passage, and the Cunarder made several new records. She maintained an average hourly speed of 25.01 knots, while the whole passage took 4 days 19h. 36min., beating her own previous best by 33min. and the Mauretania's record by 39min. The Lusitania also established a new record for a single day's run, namely, 643 knots; but the whole performance, splendid though it was, has been eclipsed by her latest record passage of 4 days 15 hours 40 minutes.

On the 9th inst., a daring burglary was committed in the Macao Post Office. By some means the thieves gained admission into the building after it had been closed for the day. The desks were all forced open and some $350 in money taken away. The cash was collected in the course of the day's transactions and was placed by the clerks in their desks instead of in the safe. It is believed that the Post Office employees will be called upon to make good the loss to the Government, as it was their duty to have put the cash away in some secure place.

Thirteen model cotton farms have been established in Korea since March last. The Chinese Government is also contemplating the cultivation of cotton by modern methods. Special delegates are being sent to America to study not only the cultivation of cotton, but modern methods of spinning and weaving. Upon their return to China it is proposed to establish a big Government cotton mill either at Peking or Tientsin. A recent Edict advised that the people should be encouraged to plant cotton and establish spinning and weaving mills in the various provinces after foreign methods, so as to check the yearly increase of imports of foreign cotton and cotton yarns which come into this Empire to the great disadvantage of the Chinese spinners and weavers. This importation, says the Edict, has resulted in China losing nearly all its trade, and a great increase in the number of unemployed during the last twenty or thirty years.

About 1 a.m. on Aug. 20th, three armed men broke into the shop of a confectioner in Narihira-cho, Honjo, Tokyo. By menacing the occupants, they stole a small amount of money and some articles. Two hours later, a man armed with a sword visited the shop of a green grocer in the same street. He severely injured the merchant and his wife, and absconded with a box containing yen 10. Both offenders are still at large.

The following (from an advertisement of a Danish hotel) has, for residents in Japan, a strangely familiar ring:—"The hotels charmingly situated, surrounded of a nice garden the good cuisine, the kindly accommodation with moderate charge and good conveyances, with easy occasion for salmon and trout fishing, the ascending of the surrounding mountains has done this place well known and praised of all travellers. N. B.—The landlord is spoken English very good."

The Toyo Kisen Kaisha's steamer Tenyo Maru went ashore 5 miles off Wu-Sung where she left on the night of Aug. 22nd. Two steam-launches of the Cargo-boat Company of Wu-Sung were at once sent to assist the steamer. At 5 a.m. on the following day, when the tide was high, she was safely floated. She immediately continued her voyage to Japan, where she is expected to arrive about Aug. 28th.

A later telegram from Wu-Sung via Nagasaki states that the Tenyo Maru is none the worse for the accident.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MAD DOG.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I see from a letter in your issue of this morning written by "Observer" that two foreign ladies were attacked by a mad dog at Honmoku the other evening. I have often wished I could tell a mad dog at a glance, as these ladies are apparently able to do, especially when I have been chased by dogs, cycling through the native quarter of the town. I am sure it would be of benefit to the community at large in these dangerous times if "Observer" would detail a mad dog's symptoms, or tell us, in the words of the poet, "what are 'is' abis."

Yours truly,

Yokohama, August 21st, 1908.

EDUCATION FOR FOREIGN CHILDREN IN JAPAN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—As director of the Morning Star School of which the so-called "French School," St. Joseph's College is an offshoot, allow me to say a few words concerning the important matter of "Education for foreign children in Japan."

Education is such a paramount affair, that it is not necessary to be an educator to understand how anxious parents must be to secure a good school to which they may confide their precious charge; and the outcry of the Advertiser is quite a natural one.

But why try again what has been found impossible at least twice already, i.e. to divide the forces of the foreign community with a view of creating as many schools as there are people of different nationalities? Why not unite to foster schools already in existence, and by support and good advice bring them to a quite tolerable standing, answering the general needs of the whole community? At home, in England or in America for instance, do all children receive only one and the same instruction? Are there not all kinds of schools with various curricula? All a school can do in a colony like ours, is to impart a general education, according to the present condition of the pupils and the requirements of their future life. If to this general education, some private lessons on special subject be added, a bright boy, after having graduated from that school, will be able to enter almost any higher school in his country. "Experto crede Roberto!" I could here mention the names of some of our former pupils, who entered high schools in England, America, and France after having graduated from the Morning Star School.

Perhaps it would be of some interest to your readers to learn how the pupils of the St. Joseph's College are divided according to their respective nationalities: English 18, Americans 22, Germans 21, Russians 20, and 6 of the remaining 37 are French; the rest belonging to seven other nationalities. Your readers may also be ignorant of the fact that five of the teachers who constitute the staff of the St. Joseph's College have come from America, having graduated from the Normal School, Dayton, Ohio.

Is it necessary to state that the support by the mission "whose resources are well known to be extensive" is a mere myth? What has rendered the creation and maintenance of the School possible, is nothing but strict economy and the self-sacrifice of the teachers.

Yours respectfully,

Tokio, Aug. 24th, 1908.

A. HEINRICH.

THE WONDERS OF YAMAGUCHI KEN.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR:—I should like to call the attention of your readers to some natural wonders and scenery in this prefecture—Yamaguchi. Murray's Handbook for 1903, the latest edition in my possession, says nothing interesting about the place, but after having travelled in many parts of Japan during a residence not far short of twenty years I might say that I have found few ordinary towns having such an interesting vicinity for anyone fond of walking or cycling. If, in any future edition, the compilers of Murray's Handbook like to make use of my notes here, they are at full liberty to do so.

Speaking of the town itself, and its most immediate vicinity, there are numerous walks through lovely valleys, leading to picturesque waterfalls and fine hills. Among the waterfalls which, though not large, are extremely pretty, may be mentioned Narutaki, on the road to Mitajiri, about thirty-one ri from Yamaguchi. The fall is not more than about thirty feet in height, but is unique, in that the water rushes down into a small hollow in the rock and is thereby thrown up again in a great fountain. Next might be mentioned Kinkei-no-Taki, also about one ri from the town, at the foot of Ichi-no-saka Pass on the old road to Hagi. This fall is about 100 feet in height, and is very fine after a heavy rain. Near it there are two other falls, one about 70 ft., and the other about 40 ft. in height. About a ri and a half from the town, to the west of the Yamaguchi-Ogori road is Yoshiki-no-Taki, which is about 100 ft. in height, though the upper and lower falls cannot be seen together when standing very near. About two ri to the east of the town is the curious rock called Ju-ishi, or Ju-bako-no-ishi, which is a perfectly perpendicular tower of rock, seemingly made up of square blocks. The whole scenery of the place is beautiful.

What I wish to speak about now, however, is the limestone range and the wonderful caves to be found in the map. Looking at a map of the prefecture (in Murray's Handbook, the map of "Western Japan and the Inland Sea," the village of Akiyoshi will be noticed about sixteen miles west of Yamaguchi. There is a direct and good cycling road direct to this place from Ogori, as well as from Funaki and Ozuki on the Sanyo Railway. In fact the road from Ogori to Hagi via Oda is much better for cyclists than that passing through Yamaguchi, the latter being exceedingly hilly. Akiyoshi seems to be about the centre of the limestone range referred to. In the little village of Hirotani, about a mile and a half to the east of Akiyoshi, there is a wonderful natural cave known as the Taki-no-Ana, or Waterfall Cave. The entrance to the cave is so difficult that I have hesitated to write about it until the present time; but the people at Akiyoshi have at last agreed to make the entrance much easier by providing boats and bridges, which are all to be ready by the 25th of this month. To those who have seen the cave at Enoshima, near Yokohama, I might say that the latter might be packed away in a corner of the Taki-no-Ana, and never be noticed. As there were no bridges or boats when I went there, I will describe the place as I saw it.

At the village of Hirotani, which can be reached by bicycle, though over a rather sandy by-road, guides can be procured, who take a number of torches, and other necessities, and where visitors must get straw sandals (waraji); I say "must" as in some places the cave is extremely slippery. The entrance to the cave is about quarter of a mile from the village, and is about sixty feet high and from ten to twenty feet wide, though inside it is like a cathedral. At first sight entrance appears to be impossible, as there is a waterfall about fifteen feet high pouring out of the cave, and running into a stream which the guides say is about thirty feet deep, but the guide shows one where to place each foot on the edge of the precipice, and where one may find a root or edge of rock as a hold for the hands. This difficult climb round the wall of rock is short, and one soon steps on to the ledge of rock at the foot of the fall. At one side of the fall steps have been cut in the rock, but the fall of water, after rain, is apt to throw one down when trying to ascend. At the top of the fall the water is from a few inches to a foot deep for the first few yards, after which comes what the villagers call a "bottomless pit." Here the guide places a ladder from the edge of the pit to a rock in the centre, and over this one walks, holding on to the side of the cave for support, while the guide holds the ladder down with his foot. Having crossed to the centre rock, the guide then puts the ladder from that place to the other side of the pit, and one has crossed the only dangerous place (at least for those who cannot swim) in the cave. The ladder is placed about one foot below the surface of the water. About a hundred feet beyond this place the stream again covers the whole width of the cave, and I had to wade through water nearly three feet deep. After this there is no deep water to pass through; and the village authorities, who are subscribing more than a hundred yen, are going to provide boats and bridges, so that one will escape wading through more than a few inches of water; and though the cave can be entered now only in fine weather, they say they are going to improve it so that one can enter at any time without difficulty.

The cave inside is immense, and contains hundreds of stalactites and stalagmites. There are also some terraces of little basin-shaped rocks, each full of water, resembling those of the Yellowstone Park in the United States, or the formerly famous yellow and silver terraces in New Zealand, but which latter were unfortunately destroyed by the eruption of Mt. Tarawera. On one side of the cave is a kind of shelf of rock, as level as if it had been made and levelled by an engineer. There is also, near the end of one branch of the cave, an immense pillar, called the Kin-no-Hashira, or Pillar of Gold, of wonderfully regular shape, and perfectly straight from ceiling to floor. Very near this is a curiously shaped rock called the Dai-Ibutsu, and behind this the cave suddenly narrows to about twelve feet, at the end of which is a slippery-looking rock, almost exactly the shape of falling water, known as the Saru-Suberi, or the rock on which even a monkey would slip. However, there are numerous little chinks, which the guide will point out to you, in which one can place his feet and hands, so that this rock, which apparently has an angle of about 45 degrees is by no means so hard to climb as it looks. At the top the "doorway" of the cave is about two to three feet wide, and forty feet high, and has a perfectly level floor; but one must not go without a light, for the floor suddenly ends, as suddenly, in fact, as if it overhung the great pit beyond. The cave beyond this place is very large, and very deep and high, but it is so deep that no villager has yet had the courage to explore further. In one or two other places too, there are other pits, which are very deep, though not very great in circumference. The whole time one is in the cave one hears the rush of the torrent, but the branch of the cave through which the torrent flows has never been explored, though the villagers of Akiyoshi have engaged an engineer for the purpose of doing so. The time taken in seeing the short branch of the cave was a little over two hours and a half, and the distance walked, according to passimetric measurement (which is naturally not very exact in such cases) was one mile and a quarter. I might say that the stalactites in this cave can easily be taken, for in one place where there the ceiling is almost level, and where one can climb up to it, there are hundreds of these stalactites.

In the same village, about four cho distant, is a smaller, though interesting cave, in plan the shape of the letter V. This cave may be entered in boots in fine weather, though one would have to be careful not to slip on the rocks.

On the hills above, there are numerous natural pits, all called by the villagers "bottomless pits," and they are certainly very deep. They say that in a walk of two hours one can see twenty-two of them, though I saw only three in a hurried climb.

On my way from Ozuki to Akiyoshi lately, at the village of Isa (between Shirogawara and Akiyoshi) I noticed the limestone formation, and enquired of some jinrikisha men if there were no caves in the district, and they said that there was a natural pit in the hill just outside the village, and that if one were let down into it, he would find himself in a "long and endless cave." This would be an interesting place to explore.

The village of Akiyoshi is famous for marble, and the marble works of Mr. Honuma, the owner, may be seen in the village.

The next great cave, and the largest it is been my fortune to see, is the Kakeki-yo. This is reached as follows. On the main road from Ogori to Hagi, there is the town of Oda, near Akiyoshi. Going on about a ri on the way from Oda to Hagi, one comes, at the foot of a very steep descent, to the small village of Edo. Almost at the further end of this village is a good road turning to the left. About one ri, or less, along this level road, one comes to the village of Akai, or Aka Mura, where a guide can be obtained. In the winter, and in any dry season, there is no water at all in this cave—which, I ought to say, is a short mile from the village. One can cycle to within a cho of the cave, and in fact the party with which I went all put their cycles into the cave while they were exploring it. The entrance is about forty feet wide and thirty feet high. On each side, just inside the entrance, are two small branches, and in the one on the left an army hid in ancient times. The entrance to this branch is so small that one has almost to crawl, but it gets larger inside. The large cave is nothing more than a subterranean river, and is said to be a ri long. People here in Yamaguchi told me that some people had been right through it and come out into another valley where the stream entered the cave. While in the cave enquiries were made as to the truth of this, and the guide said it was so, and that he could show us the other end. So after having penetrated about half a mile into the cave, which was very interesting, we returned to the entrance, pushed our cycles for a mile or so over the mountains, and came to the valley of which we had heard, where the land descends towards the mountains, instead of away from them, and where there was a cave into which the stream of the valley ran, and the entrance of which was almost as large as the one at the other end. After going in a short distance, however, the cave is so low that one would have to crawl, and this in addition to the fact that there was a considerable quantity of water, made us decide to postpone the journey right through the cave till the winter.

In the village of Matsubara, between Aka-Mura and Edo, there is another cave, the entrance to which is the smallest of all, but which is said to be very fine inside.

All the roads round the province of Chosui are good for cycling, and the scenery is exquisite, but one must be prepared for hilly roads, especially the following: between Yamaguchi and Hagi; Hagi to Shimonoyama; and the Tawarayama Pass south-west of Shimonoyama. The Hatcho Goe Pass, which is the last one passes over on one's way from Hagi to Yamaguchi, is unique, the road passing over great precipices and winding round the mountains like a snake, from a height of over a thousand feet above the foot of the pass. Cyclists should not venture over these passes without good brakes on their machines, as the descents are very long and sometimes rather steep.

I might add that in almost every place there is a neat Japanese inn, and that prices, for those who are content with Japanese fare, are very low.

Hoping that this will open up a comparatively new field of travel to those who are fond of such places, I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully, EDWARD GAUNTLETT.

THE FAKUMEN RAILWAY QUESTION.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Peking, July 22.

You in the South of China recently took great interest in the diplomatic negotiations between the Chinese and Japanese Governments regarding the Tsitsin Maru affairs, but that question did not attract nearly so widespread interest as the Fakumen Railway question is doing. And much of this interest is due, in more ways than one, to a British firm being implicated. This firm is Messrs. Pauling & Co., who contracted with the Chinese Government for the construction of the proposed Fakumen Railway. If this contract should be broken by the Chinese Government on account of the construction of the line not being proceeded with, the proper procedure for Messrs. Pauling & Co. would appear to be to seek compensation from the Chinese Government. But instead of this Messrs. Pauling & Co. are persecuting the Japanese Government by means of a press campaign. If in this they had confined themselves to facts, they would not have done any harm, though they might not have done any good from their point of view.

THE FACTS.

Let me state what the facts are. Something having come to Japan's knowledge on August 12 last she gave a first warning to China. This was repeated on October 12 and November 6. Despite this, on November 8, China entered into a contract with Messrs. Pauling & Co. Were Messrs. Pauling & Co. aware that Japan had objected to the proposed railway? If they were, they have but themselves to blame if they consider themselves aggrieved and injured. If they were unaware of Japan's objections their remedy is against the Chinese Government and not against the Japanese, who cannot be blamed for standing up in defence of their own interests.

The Japanese Government, on learning in January of the conclusion of the contract, lodged, on the 20th of that month, with the Chinese Government a formal protest against the execution of the undertaking. China made no reply whatever till May 6, when she sent to Japan a despatch in which it was dogmatically asserted that the Hsinmintun-Fakumen Railway did not compete with the South Manchuria Railway, and that, on the contrary, the former would be a feeder to the latter in the same way as a branch line like the Kirin-Changchun line would feed the main line of the South Manchuria Railway.

Another dispatch was sent by Japan to the Chinese Government on June 27. In this the Chinese contention was completely refuted. It was pointed out that the Hsinmintun-Fakumen Railway would not be a branch line of the South Manchuria Railway, and that it would, of course, stand in a totally different category from the Kirin-Changchun Railway.

Of course what the Japanese cannot hide from themselves is the fact that once the line was built, the Chinese authorities would naturally by every means in their power, try to draw goods and other traffic from every part of the district. This affair is altogether a product of the "rights recovery" policy now so popular in the highest quarters in Peking.

A MISSTATEMENT.

The Peking Conference of 1905 was referred to in the Chinese Government's despatch of May 6. The statement was made in regard thereto:—"At the time when the engagement in the Protocol—on the strength of which Japan now objects to the construction of the line in question—was made by China, the Chinese plenipotentiaries said that the word 'parallel' was too comprehensive, and that a definite number of miles should be mentioned within which no parallel should be built. The Japanese plenipotentiaries replied that if the number of miles were fixed it might create the impression in other countries that Japan intended to restrict Chinese railway enterprise. They were subsequently asked to agree that the distance should be understood to be such as would be usual in Europe and America, but objected to this proposal on the ground that no general rule existed on the subject. Moreover the Japanese plenipotentiaries declared that under no circumstances would Japan do anything to restrict China in future from any steps she might desire to take for the extension of means of communication in Manchuria."

The above passage is reproduced in the pamphlet written by Mr. Bland in answer to the recently published Japanese Official Statement of the case against the Fakumen Railway Scheme.

AN IMAGINARY CONVERSATION.

As a matter of fact, I understand, no such conversation ever took place, and the statements alleged to have been made are entirely without substantial basis. The Chinese Government must be labouring under a grave misapprehension in this respect, for neither the protocols exchanged between Japan and China nor the detailed procès verbaux kept by the Japanese Government contain anything like the alleged conversation.

THE WORD "PARALLEL."

At that time the Japanese plenipotentiary, Baron Komura, said that, Japan having been allowed to exploit the railway in Manchuria, a prospect of due profit was necessarily to be secured, and consequently an arrangement should be made to preclude any possible infringement of Japanese railway interests by China. After a short exchange of views between the plenipotentiaries, the Chinese representative, Mr. Yuan, replied that China would never build any line competing with the railway in Japan's possession, and that should China ever try to do so, Japan might rightly raise objections, it being a matter of course that China should protect the interests of the Japanese railway. Baron Komura then asked to have this undertaking clearly stated in the protocol, if not as an article in the Convention. Hence the existing self-denying engagement given by China and contained in the protocol. And indeed the word "parallel" appeared for the first time in the draft engagement clause pre-ented by Chinese plenipotentiaries, and accordingly there was no discussion whatever about the term at that time.

THE QUESTION OF COMPETITION.

The question of the possibility of competition between the two lines depends upon various factors, conditions and circumstances, and is not a mere simple question of distance.

To the last Japanese Note above mentioned China has not yet replied. But in the meantime the British firms of contractors interested are carrying on their press campaign and trying to embitter the relations between Japan and China on the one hand and between Japan and Great Britain on the other, and are trying to throw cold water on the Anglo-Japanese Alliance. And he it remarked with emphasis that Messrs Pauling & Co. are not supported in their agitation by the British Government. It is certain, however, that the British Foreign Office would support its own nationals in such a matter if it thought they had a leg to stand upon.

It is exceedingly unfortunate that in the way I have indicated a hindrance is placed in the way of a friendly settlement of the question between Japan and China, the two parties in reality solely interested. Hongkong Daily Press.

THE AMERICAN FLEET AT SYDNEY.

London, Aug. 20.

Sydney is packed full of country people to welcome the American fleet. Some of the towns are so empty that the shop-people have proposed to close their shops. All the public buildings are covered with flags. The Custom House shows a ship representing the Mayflower with the motto, "Seas don't Divide Us." On the arrival of the fleet this morning the cliffs will be lined with spectators to a distance of 14 miles. Wireless greetings have already been exchanged from the north coast between Deakin, Wade and Sperry, emphasizing the ties of race. The Sydney Telegraph says that the fleet will do for America what the British fleet does for Australia, in emphasizing the strength with which the nation is ready to preserve for itself the rights of self-government and restriction of citizenship which it freely concedes to other peoples.

August 21st.

Over half a million people covering the cliffs, the headlands and the foreshores, or afloat in vessels, welcomed the American fleet. The weather was beautiful. The Federal State Ministers went out in a steamer to the warships, the bands exchanging national anthems. That night the city and the harbour were illuminated. Admiral Sperry, in his message to the Australians, declares that he feels there is more behind this demonstration than mere enthusiasm at the sight of the fleet. The New York newspapers contain glowing accounts of the reception. They declare that the Australians are truly kinsmen, faced by the same problems.

THE AMERICAN FLEET AT SYDNEY.

The official landing procession of the American visitors has been attended with great enthusiasm. Sir Henry Northcote, Governor-General, Hon Alfred Deakin, Premier, Hon C. G. Wade, and the Mayor of Sydney welcomed Admiral Sperry from a specially erected pavilion. The Admiral replied eulogizing the British Navy. At the state banquet in the evening the premier urged the need of Australian Unity. The premier of South Australia in his speech prophesied that the Commonwealth would eventually have a fleet equal to that of the United States.

THE BALANCE OF POWER IN THE PACIFIC.

DE FORREST PREDICTS.

DeForrest, the American inventor, predicts that wireless telephony will be established within two years. The apparatus is being installed at the top of a 700 ft. tower on the Metropolitan Life Insurance Building for the transmission of messages to the Eiffel Tower in Paris.

THE MOROCCAN UPHEAVAL.

Later.

Abdul Aziz has been defeated and his army is vanished. Mulai Hafid has been proclaimed Sultan at Tangier and elsewhere. Abdul sought refuge with the French troops. France remains neutral. She will not recognize the new ruler except with the common consent of the Powers, which is inevitable.

ANTICIPATED CONSEQUENCES OF THE AMERICAN VISIT.

London, August 25.

The Times points out that the Australian welcome to the Fleet is based upon feelings of national friendship and mutual respect. It anticipates that the naval spectacle will entail a desire on Australia's part to undertake her own defence.

THE DOMINION OF THE AIR: A NEW DEVELOPMENT.

St. Petersburg, August 25.

Colonel Krongnik has invented a species of flying machine which he claims will attain a speed of 200 miles an hour by means of rotating wheels and strips of tin representing feathers. The inventor says that masts can be fixed to steamships enabling them to travel 150 miles an hour.

ADMIRAL SPERRY IS IMPRESSED.

Sydney, Later.

Lord Northcote, Governor-General of the Commonwealth, reviewed 13,000 American and Australian sailors and soldiers in the New South Wales capital. Admiral Sperry declared that he never in his life had seen so fine a body of volunteer troops. The review was the biggest affair ever held in Australia, and was witnessed by huge crowds.

CRISIS IN THE BOMBAY MARKET.

A DARING HOLD-UP.

New York, August 26.

A single man armed with a pistol held up eleven coaches containing one hundred and twenty-five passengers in Yellowstone Park. He seized £2,500 worth of watches and jewellery. Resistance was impossible, as tourists are forbidden to carry weapons in the famous Federal Reservation.

ABDUL'S LEGACY.

London, August 27.

The legacy left to the new Sultan by Abdul Aziz is not brilliant, for a portion of Morocco is in the hands of another pretender, another portion is in the hands of the French, and the rest is in a condition of anarchy. Moreover, the State debts amount to six million pounds, besides claims from every part. The only assets are the unpledged remainder of the customs duties, a menagerie of wild beasts, and other preposterous rubbish which Abdul accumulated at Fez.

THE FLEET LEAVES SYDNEY.

The departure of the American Fleet was marked by a warm message of thanks to New South Wales from Admiral Sperry, who described the visit as an epoch-making international event. He says that the United States must readjust its views of the Commonwealth, which is destined to play a great rôle commercially in the Pacific.

The principal event of the day was the display given by 800 school-children who were drawn up under the flags of the United States and Australia, between which the Union Jack was hoisted.

"THE TIMES" ON JAPAN.

The chief feature of The Times of the 26th inst. is a long sympathetic review of Anglo-Japanese relations on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of the treaty of Yedo. In an accompanying leading article the creation of Modern Japan is described as perhaps the most remarkable and brilliant episode of Modern History. The writer points out that the splendid patriotism, the ideals of chivalry, the willingness to sacrifice one's self to the interests of the State, the patient endurance of reverses and, above all, the incomparable silence in moments of adversity, are the products of centuries of evolution and are not due to European influence. The Japanese example has now roused aspirations throughout Asia which seem likely to engross the attention of the world during this century. Japan is still undergoing a process of mental readjustment. In her task of adopting the outward forms of Western civilization, while preserving the best features of her national character, she has the friendly influence and sympathy of Great Britain.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

THE WRECKED "KINOSHITA MARU."

From the Japanese Consul at Honolulu.

According to the report of the S.S. Asia, which entered Honolulu on the 17th instant, she saw a Japanese sailing ship wrecked at 33° 56' N.L. and 163° 25' E.L. There was no one on board. She is supposed to be the Kinoshita Maru.

THE CONDEMNED MEN.

The six men of the Miya Maru's crew who have been condemned to death are in prison at Nicolaïfsk. Mr. Consul Suzuki, immediately on taking up the duties of his post, went to the jail to look after them. He found that their treatment had undergone a great change for the better as compared with the time of their arrest, and the whole six are in excellent health.

FUNDS FOR CHINESE WARSHIPS.

The war-vessels ordered from the Kawasaki Ship-building Yard by H. E. Chang Chitung when he was Viceroy of Hupeh have all been finished, but the Hupeh authorities are puzzled to find funds for their maintenance. The present Viceroy, Chen, has therefore memorialized the Throne for permission to raise money by increasing the tax on salt to the extent of 4 mon per catty in Suchwan and Kiangnan. By this means a sum of 300,000 taels will be obtained. The tax was to be imposed from the 1st of the seventh month (Chinese Calendar), and it is now actually being collected.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. Taft, Presidential Candidate of the Republican Party in the United States, has made Mr. Frank Hitchcock his chief of committee, and the Democratic Candidate, Mr. Bryan, has appointed Mr. Norman Mack to the corresponding post on his side. Both parties have declared Chicago to be their head-quarters, and that city will consequently be the centre of competition at the election in the autumn. In the business circles of Chicago it is expected that Mr. Taft will be successful.

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

IMMIGRATION INTO AMERICA.

New York, August 19.

According to information given before the American Immigration Bureau in Washington, 103,006 immigrants entered America from Europe during the first half of this year while the figures for the corresponding period of last year were 786,667—a decrease for the half-year just ended of 75 per cent. This marked decrease is attributed to the depression prevailing in American commercial circles.

ANTI-JAPANESE AGITATION.

Little or no attention is paid in the United States to the question of the Sino-American Alliance proposed by the New York Herald. The Times of the same city is still publishing absurd diatribes against Japan to serve, it is reported, a certain purpose of its own.

REAR-ADMIRAL EVANS.

San Francisco, Aug. 19.

Rear-Admiral Evans, formerly Commander-in-Chief of the American Fleet, retired from office yesterday on the expiration of his term. To an interviewer, the admiral is reported to have said that the world had been made aware, by the cruise of the battleship fleet that American was a leading naval power. He expressed his regret at being unable to proceed to Japan, where he has many Japanese friends. Japan would not make war upon America unless the latter challenged her. While the Japanese were not in reality a warlike people, yet it was not good policy to provoke them to excitement. Japan has no ambitions for territorial aggrandisement in China but was endeavouring to lead her into the path of progress. On its part, the American Government was desirous, solely, of maintaining the open door in China. Probably Japanese policy was in consonance with American views. In conclusion, the Admiral declared that the expansion of the American Navy was an absolute necessity.

THE VENEZUELA AFFAIR.

The Dutch Cabinet has held a conference lasting for nine hours in connexion with the Venezuelan affair. The result of the meeting is not yet known, but it is generally believed that the Government of the Netherlands has decided to take strong measures against Venezuela.

THE TOKYO EXHIBITION.

San Francisco, August 22.

Mr. Loomis, Chief of the American committee to the Grand Exhibition to be held in Tokyo in 1912, arrived in San Francisco on Aug. 21st on his way to Japan. At a dinner given by the leading commercial bodies, he made a speech in the course of which he said that not only for the sake of the further development of trade between America and Japan, but for the strengthening of friendly relations, the United States must assist Japan in the Exhibition. This advice met with general approval and an agreement was arrived at to support the Japanese enterprise. Mr. Loomis will leave San Francisco on Aug. 25th for Japan.

THE RUSSIAN ARMY.

St. Petersburg, August 24.

General Rödiger, Russian Minister for War, has resigned. The vacancy will be filled by General Ivanoff, one of the aides-de-camp to the Tsar, or by General Triwanoff, Vice-Minister of the same Department.

PROMINENT AMERICANS TO VISIT JAPAN.

New York, August 24.

The American business men of San Francisco will shortly leave for Japan, as already reported. The leading Japanese in New York are inducing several prominent Americans of that city also to visit Japan with a view to inspecting personally various conditions there, and also to witness the reception of the Battleship Fleet by the Japanese.

THE N.-Y. HERALD FIASCO.

Strong opposition has repeatedly appeared against the Sino-American alliance proposed by the New York Herald. In consequence, the rather fantastic attitude adopted by that journal has made it a laughing-stock. Nevertheless it still continues to publish its mischievous views.

THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

The American newspapers are publishing the detailed proceedings of the Portsmouth Peace Negotiations. According to them, the Tsar was the first to propose the war, and persisted in a strong attitude at the time of the negotiations, not admitting the advice of President Roosevelt and Count de Witte.

MR. T. KATO, new Ambassador to Great Britain, will leave Tokyo about the end of November for his post.

POLICE CONSTABLE William Taylor died in Hongkong on September 3rd after ten hours' illness, from sunstroke.

GENERAL UNTERBERGER, new governor-general of the Maritime Province, arrived at Vladivostok on Sept. 14th from St. Petersburg.

OWING to high waves from Sept. 10th to the 12th, inundations have occurred in the sea-side districts of Miyasaki and South Naka, Miyasaki prefecture. A number of buildings have sustained damage.

A YOKOSUKA report states that the construction of a new battleship will shortly be commenced, the materials having already been collected.

BARON HAYASHI, new Ambassador to Italy, and Baron Chinda, Ambassador to Germany, will leave Tokyo on Sept. 16th and 18th respectively for their posts.

THE Emperor received Baron de Sental, new Portuguese Minister, in audience at 10.30 a.m. on Sept. 12th, when he presented his credentials to His Majesty.

At 8.40 p.m. on Sept. 10th, a slight shock of earthquake was felt in Tokyo, the duration being 30 seconds. The epicentre is believed to have been in the Tsukuba mountain range.

THE Dempo says that Son Yat-sen, a leader of the Chinese revolutionaries now in Singapore, will shortly leave for France. His visit is reported to be not without significance.

THE Tokyo Metropolitan police have confiscated the copies of a pamphlet entitled the Kyomu-no-Reikuo, and the Shakwai Shinbun, a socialistic newspaper, before they were issued for circulation.

COLONEL BARON COORVISART, an attaché of the French Embassy, who will shortly leave for home, will proceed to the Palace at 10.30 a.m. on Sept. 14th to bid farewell to the Emperor and Empress.

Y. OTA, formerly the manager of the Yennoshima Dock Company, has been arrested at Onomichi, near Kobe, on a charge of having misappropriated money belonging to the office while in employment there.

A QUANTITY of the new rice crop was put on the Shidzuoka market from the Fuji district on Sept. 12th. The quality was good, the complementary price being yen 7.20 per bale containing about 8 pecks.

THE wedding between Miss Haru Hirayama, the first daughter of Mr. N. Hirayama, a member of the House of Peers, and Mr. K. Komura, the first son of Count Komura, Minister for Foreign Affairs, will take place in October.

NEWS is brought by the torpedo-boats Hashitaka, Uzura and Sagi, which have arrived at Saseho, that raids by pirates in the neighbourhood of Korea are still going on. The Chihaya and other Japanese warships are on the look out.

AN international marine law convention will be held in London commencing on Nov. 1st. The Japanese Naval Department will shortly appoint a delegate. Mr. Yamakawa, a councillor of the same office, will be appointed one of the party.

AN official telegram says that the No. 31 torpedo-boat encountered a gale in the Korean Strait on her way to Chemulpo, and the chief engineer and three bluejackets were washed away by the seas. The engineer was saved but the two bluejackets are missing.

ABOUT 7 p.m. on the night of the 11th a foreign lady, while walking up a hill near Daikan-zaka, was pounced upon by a man who snatched away the purse she was carrying, and then made his escape. The matter was at once reported to the Police, who are now tracing the thief.

THE CUNARDER Lusitania, in her last record-breaking run across the Atlantic, eclipsed all previous records. The average speed for the whole trip reached 25.05 knots, while during one day she maintained an average of 25.66 knots, and covered a distance of 650 knots. The time of the voyage, as announced in a previous issue, was 4 days 15 hours. In this context it may be remarked that H. M. S. Indomitable, at one part of her voyage to Que'ec, steamed at the rate of 26 knots for four consecutive hours.

THE sailors on board the British sailing vessel Harrow, which arrived at Kobe on Aug. 26th from Portland with lumber, mutinied against the master on Sept. 13th, demanding payment of their wages. Later they were pacified by the Kobe Harbour police, who appeared on the vessel at the request of the captain.

WE are asked by the Manager of the Imperial Hotel to state, with regard to a paragraph that appeared in our issue of the 11th reporting a case of burglary at the Imperial Hotel, that the thief entered the room through the window, which had been left open by the occupant, and not by the door, as might be inferred from the language of the note in question.

MR. J. L. DEARING, of the Baptist Theological Seminary has been presented with a purse by a few members of the Union Church in recognition of his services in securing pulpit supplies prior to the arrival of the present pastor, the Rev. T. R. Good. Dr. Dearing, it will be remembered, has been appointed travelling overseer of the Baptist Missions in the Far East.

BIRTHDAYS are meant to be celebrated, but it does not fall to many to do so in the manner Mr. P. R. Johnson, the Somersetshire cricketer has done. He reached his 28th birthday on Wednesday and likewise hit up 131 runs for Somerset against Middlesex. As he had made 164 in the first innings he has performed the rare feat of scoring two centuries in the same match.

THE Nagasaki Press regrets to record the death of Captain Julius Andersen, which took place on the 11th at St. Bernard's Hospital, Nagasaki, after a short illness, the cause being ptomaine poisoning. The deceased was a native of Norway and only came to the Far East in February, arriving at Nagasaki on board the Marusan Maru, a whaler which had been built in Norway for the Marusan Whaling Company. He was 36 years of age, had been married about a year, and the widow, who is in Norway, is left with a child born after Captain Andersen's arrival in this country.

A VLADIVOSTOCK telegram to the Asahi says that General Stoessel and Admiral Nebogatoff are in good health in their detention wards. They are paying much attention to the comments of the newspapers. Sometimes they argue on their experiences in the war. Their views seem to differ on every point. On the anniversary of the birthday of the Crown Prince of Russia, Madante Stoessel asked the Ministry to grant the "general one day free." He was satisfied with his present state, however, and refused to avail himself of the temporary release. On the other hand, Admiral Nebogatoff was much dissatisfied with his position.

As an offset to the report mentioned the other day, said the N. C. Daily News, of the probable return of the Dalai Lama, or Buddhist Pontiff, to Tibet, without being accorded the honour of an audience of their Imperial Majesties, the Emperor and Empress-Dowager, a Peking dispatch now states that Grand Councillor Yuan Shih-hai has recommended to the Throne that the Panshen Lama, or Buddhist Co-Pontiff, shall be asked to leave his monastery at Tashilumbo, Tibet, and pay a visit to Peking. The Dalai Lama and Panshen Lama are rivals for the temporal power in Tibet, and it is doubtless the idea of playing the one off against the other that has prompted the suggested invitation to Peking.

KOREA.

Friday, September 11.

It becomes not uninteresting to speculate on the dimensions which will ultimately be given to the Yong Ki-tak affair by sensational writers. The man is under trial for a very miserable kind of offence, and though he may be perfectly innocent, the fact remains to be proved. He may also be guilty, and that too remains to be proved. In the meanwhile, it would be consistent with English ideas of fairness to refrain from creating a hubbub and endeavouring to enlist public sentiment in his favour. His friends—and, shall we not be justified in adding, Japan's enemies?—seem to think only of depicting him in the light of a victim of injustice and would have us believe that he is undergoing shocking treatment in jail at Seoul. To such a pitch of sentimentalism have they worked themselves that the very ordinary incident—common in all prisons the world over—the incident of convicts who have been sentenced to hard labour being “driven along like beasts of burden” is described as something utterly inhuman. The Japan Chronicle seems to be devoting itself to working up this matter. For that purpose it has taken the place originally occupied by Tai Han Mai-Ii Shimpō. The rôle may be congenial, but as a display of loss of the sense of proportion it is very unsightly.

Saturday, September 12.

Some of the provincial authorities in Korea seem bent upon strictly enforcing the Imperial Edict issued in August of last year against the wearing of topknots. The Edict proved at the time a dead letter, for although the Emperor himself and most of the high officials complied with the injunction, the people at large took not the slightest notice of it. The latest news is that the local headmen of the metropolitan province, Kyongki-do, have resolved to enforce the edict strictly. The wisdom of such a measure is very doubtful.

A statement, apparently official, has been published in Seoul with reference to the operations of the gendarmerie against the insurgents from the 1st of January to the 31st of August this year. The figures are 76 insurgents killed and 253 taken prisoner, and 843 rifles seized together with 60 swords and 10 spears. This list represents the result of 364 encounters. It relates to the proceedings of the gendarmerie alone. The record in the case of the troops would of course greatly swell the number of killed and prisoners.

Mr. Yi Yongkyu, leader of the Il Ching-hoi, arrived at Shimonoseki on the 11th instant. He is quoted as saying that the insurrection having now been virtually quelled, he has found an opportunity to visit Japan. We gather from reports published by Tokyo papers that he is not altogether satisfied with the methods of the Residency-General or with the present Cabinet, but the nature of his complaint is not clear. He further says that his party has suffered very material losses at the hands of the insurgents, and that its numbers, which totalled a million before the outbreak, have been reduced by about 100,000. The insurgents are for the most part labouring under an entirely false apprehension of the Ministry's intentions. Mr. Yi speaks in highly appreciative terms of the Eastern Colonization Company. He expects it to reclaim most of the waste lands in Korea, and thus not only to enrich the nation but also to render the Government financially independent. He adds, however, a curious statement, namely, that the missionaries are largely responsible for the misunderstandings between Korea and Japan, that they constitute a serious obstacle to progress, and that unless they are effectually dealt with, the full restoration of public peace and good order can not be hoped for. Such assertions have been heard frequently in the past, but they have never been substantiated. Undoubtedly some of the missionaries are strongly imbued with anti-Japanese feeling, but everything goes to show that such persons constitute a very small minority and that their influence is not to be weighed for a moment against that of the great mass of their conferees who appreciate that without Japan's guidance and assistance Korea's case is hopeless. Mr. Yi adds that although Pak Yongho has returned to Seoul, his influence is no longer what it was, and no very serious notice need be taken of his doings.

Monday, September 14.

The Japanese detachment which is now operating in northern Korea near the left bank of the Yalu River reports that there is a somewhat troublesome body of insurgents in that vicinity. They are Koreans who have become naturalized Russians, and their place of habitation is Novoskoi, whence, under the leadership of Yi Ponyun, they make raids across the river into northern Korea. They have received some instruction in the art of war, and are altogether more worthy of consideration than the general bulk of the insurgents.

The news is confirmed that the local authorities of Kyonkwi-do are taking steps to strictly enforce the hitherto inoperative edict against wearing of topknots. The Provincial Inspector, who corresponds to a prefectural governor in the Japanese system, seems to be favouring this movement, and is quoted as expressing a desire to make his province an example to the rest of Korea. We trust that it will not prove an example of disorderly resistance to an apparently useless sumptuary regulation. After all, governments are entitled to suggest what sort of garments people ought to wear and in what fashion they should dress their hair, but to compel adoption of such suggestions is scarcely a legitimate interference with the rights of the subject.

It would appear after all that the object contemplated by the leader of the Il Ching-hoi, Mr. Yi Yongkyu, in visiting Japan, is to protest against the treatment which his party is receiving. The gist of his complaint seems to be that whereas the Il Ching-hoi rendered great assistance to the Japanese troops during the War, and were essentially useful in promoting the conclusion of the Convention of 1905, they receive virtually no consideration. Fully understanding that their country's hope of progress and prosperity is centered in Japan, they have not hesitated to incur unpopularity and even outrage at the hands of their own countrymen in order to foster relations with Japan, but the present Government is apparently forgetful of all this, and does not even take steps to protect the lives and properties of the Il Ching-hoi. Its members have suffered terrible losses in connexion with the insurrection, but they get neither sympathy nor indemnity, and beyond the immediate range of Japanese military operations, they cannot exist. Without their aid Japan can hardly hope to succeed, yet she gives herself little trouble to recognise that aid, and as they appreciate that Prince Ito is the power behind the Cabinet in Seoul, their leader has come to detail their grievances to the Resident-General. Such, we gather, is the gist of Mr. Yi's observations published in more or less detail by the Tokyo journals.

Tuesday, September 15.

The trial of Mr. Yang was to be resumed in Seoul on the 15th inst. The telegraph says that great interest is excited and that the number of applicants for a place in the court has been very large.

There is some talk of establishing a fixed service of steamers between Chemulpo and Dairen. The Resident General is said to be in communication with the Naval Department on the subject.

The torpedo destroyers which have been engaged attempting to suppress piracy in the waters adjacent to Chemulpo, have returned to Saseho. They report that it is a very difficult matter to deal with these sea-robbers, who conceal themselves effectually the moment that the shadow of a man-of-war comes in sight and emerge to commit their depredations so soon as the coast is clear.

General Usagawa confirms what has often been said by previous writers about the Koreans, namely, that they set a limit to their exertions and their ambitions, and that they will not work for anything beyond that limit. The vast majority regard official appointments as the be-all and end-all of existence, and hence the productive capacity of the nation is not by any means proportionate to its numbers. The spirit of effective economy is also conspicuously absent, which may be a sufficiently pleasant state of affairs for importers of foreign goods, but certainly does not conduce to the welfare of the country. The most pressing need of the time is to educate a due appreciation of the value of labour. The General goes on to say that it does not do to condemn Korean customs off-hand because in some respects they seem to conflict with advanced ideals. Thus in the matter of tax collecting, the old method in Korea was that the tax collectors immediately converted the money into produce purchased from the tax payers, and, transporting this produce to the capital, sold it there, transmitting to the Treasury the portion due to the latter and pocketing the surplus. Such a system is far from being ideal, but nevertheless it has some advantages, notably the fact that it averts all withdrawal of money from the localities, whereas the new system produces a very sensible deficiency of currency. The people themselves greatly preferred the old system.

Wednesday, September 16.

One of our local contemporaries writes:—

A Seoul dispatch reports that “Mr. Cockburn, the British Consul-General in Seoul, is going home shortly. Mr. Arthur Sibley, the British Consul at Chemulpo, has been appointed Acting Consul-General during his absence. It is reported that the Consul-General will probably not return to Seoul.” Although not stated definitely, it is inferred in the above paragraph that Mr. Cockburn's return to England is the outcome of recent events in Seoul in connection with the Yang case. As a matter of fact, Mr. Cockburn at the end of this year retires from the Consular service.

This, we rather think, beats Sam Weller's “pair of patent double million magnifyin' gas microscopes of hextra power.” “Although not stated definitely, it is inferred in the above paragraph.” In truth we congratulate this drawer of inferences on his capacity for reading between the lines.

Thursday, September 17.

The Hochi Shimbun has a telegram from Seoul saying that the debts of the Imperial Household are found to amount to 3 million you, and that a committee of investigation has been appointed.

It is rumoured that the Chinese authorities are building in the Chientao region barracks capable of accommodating four regiments of infantry.

Chientao this year appears to be blest with very plentiful crops. Experiments have been tried with artificial manures, but the results are not satisfactory, the cereals experimented on having run to stalk only. It is inferred that this kind of fertilizing is unnecessary, but the idea suggested to outsiders is that the fertilizers used had too much silica.

Japanese subjects in Chemulpo are reported to be taking advantage of the Trade-marks Convention recently concluded between Japan and the United States, and under its provisions are said to be applying for the registration of English and German trade-marks. A rumour having spread that the Residency-General was disposed to grant this application, a meeting of British and German residents was held on the 16th inst., and a resolution was passed advocating postponement of the operation of the American-Japanese Convention until similar arrangements can be effected with England and Germany.

A telegram to the Kokumin from Seoul says that between the 8th and 14th inst. there were 26 collisions with the insurgents, which resulted in the death of 108 of the latter and the capture of 6.

The Korean insurgents assembled under the banner of Yi Ponyun, in the Transumen region, are said to have divided into two bodies, one moving round by sea for the purpose of effecting a landing at Chiyongjin and Songjin, and the other approaching from the west via Onsheng. The former essay was completely checked, however, by the Japanese warship Chiyoda, and the latter having failed, owing to the presence of Japanese troops, was deflected further south and is now attempting to enter Korea from Chutschieh and Mushan, but it is thought that the vigilance of the Japanese gendarmes will render this attempt abortive.

A Japanese destroyer came across a pirate junk near Kanghwa Island in the Chemulpo offing a few days ago. The pirates saved their lives by abandoning the junk, in which were found 15 rifles, some 300 rounds of ammunition, and a roll containing the names of pirates in that neighbourhood.

The Niroku Shinbun publishes what professes to be a verbatim statement of Prince Ito's views on certain points connected with Korea. The statement opens with an appreciation of the Il Ching-hoi. The Prince is quoted as saying that this Society has its opponents as well as its supporters. The former are regarded as an association influenced solely by motives of self-seeking, and the latter are considered a genuinely patriotic body. The case is counterbalanced by that of the Seiyu-kai and the Shimpoto in Japan. Each has its traducers as well as its panegyrists. As for Prince Ito himself, however, he considers that the Il Ching-hoi, having due regard to the conditions in the Far East, placed full reliance on Japan, and are determined to join hands with her in promoting their country's welfare. They have never changed their policy. It is true that owing to their advocacy of somewhat precipitate reforms as to hair-dressing and sumptuary affairs, the Il Chinghoi have made some enemies, but to say that they are simply self-seekers would be a great injustice. It cannot be denied that their attitude has some influence upon the success of Japanese policy in Korea, but neither must it be imagined that that policy is guided in any degree by the adherence of this party or of that. Japan's policy is based upon what she believes to be the true interest of the two neighbouring countries, and in carrying out that policy she neither repels assistance nor courts favour. As to the rumours recently circulated to the effect that the Il Ching-hoi are dissatisfied with the policy pursued towards them, Prince Ito declared emphatically that nothing of the kind had reached his ears. The Il Ching-hoi comprise a very large number of members, and among them it is not impossible that there may be some who harbour feelings of dissatisfaction. But nothing of the kind has ever been heard from their leaders, Sung Pyongchun and Yi Yongkil. Referring to the rumour that the Il Ching-hoi are opposed to the members of the present Korean Cabinet, the Prince spoke in high terms of the Premier, Mr. Yi, and said that his eminent suitability to his post had in no small degree assisted the work of reform in which the Korean Ministry as well as the Il Ching-hoi were interested. It was not credible that any large section of the Il Ching-hoi disapproved of the personnel of the present Cabinet. The Prince concluded by protesting against the supposition that Mr. Sung Pyongchun had received an important portfolio because of his association with the Il Ching hoi. It was solely owing to his gifts and capacities and to his knowledge of international affairs and Far Eastern conditions, especially those of Japan, that he had received first the portfolio of Agriculture and Commerce, and then that of Home Affairs. So long as Prince Ito had any influence in Korea, high officials would be chosen on account of their merits, without reference to their political complexion.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

The San Francisco correspondent of the Hochi Shinbun, writing under date of the 25th of August, reports that a very marked change has come over the sentiment of the people of the United States towards Japan. The nation itself was never anti-Japanese, but a section of it certainly was so a few months ago. Probably there would have been in any circumstances a reaction from the extreme to which that antipathy was pushed at the outset, but also many solid causes have operated to produce a better mood. It is true that the Hobsons, the Hearsts and their fellow crew of thinkers continue the agitation as vehemently as ever, but the public has gradually become less and less inclined to pay attention to them, and it may now be confidently alleged that anti-Japanese feeling is disappearing in the United States. The correspondent enumerates the causes which in his opinion have tended and are tending to produce this result, but as our readers are familiar with them we need not reproduce them. It will be observed that this correspondent's dictum conflicts more or less with the impression which Dr. Takamine and Mr. Asano have carried with them from their visit to the United States. Mr. Asano's ideas are of course simply those of a passing tourist, but Dr. Takamine is an old resident of the United States, and has access to special sources of information. Corresponding importance attaches therefore to his clearly expressed opinion that Japan should make special efforts to recover America's good will.

MR. MURDOCH.

With reference to the note which recently appeared in some of our Tokyo contemporaries to the effect that Mr. Jas. Murdoch is engaged upon a work about Bushido, we learn that the statement is incorrect, though we are happy to say that the true facts are even more satisfactory than the Tokyo version. Mr. Murdoch is writing a history of Japan in four volumes. Vol. I. deals with the period from the origin down to 1542; Vol. II. with the period from 1542 to 1651; Vol. III. with that from 1651 to 1853, and Vol. IV. with Modern Japan. Our readers are aware that Vol. II. has already been published (in 1903) and that it stands facile princeps so far as concerns the epoch it covers. Vol. I. is all written, and about three-fourths of it are already in type. As for Vol. III., something like one-third of its extent has been covered, and, as Mr. Murdoch has now ample leisure to devote to the work, he counts on being able to finish it in 6 months. All the translations in Vol. I. have been done by the author himself, and when we say that the collecting of material involved the reading of some 50,000 pages of by no means good Japanese print, some idea may be formed of the nature of the task. It is inevitable that the work of an author who treats his subject so exhaustively as Mr. Murdoch does should extend to considerable length. We are not surprised, therefore, to learn that, in spite of Mr. Murdoch's concise and lucid style, Vol. I. runs to 270,000 words, which is only 50,000 shorter than Vol. II. He talks of making Vol. III. less bulky, but considering that the period treated is the Tokugawa era, into which an immense mass of facts about social, artistic and financial details have to be compressed, we doubt whether brevity will be attainable. Great interest attaches to the book, for not only is it a most welcome surprise to find any one willing to undertake such a task, but also Mr. Murdoch's quite exceptional qualifications have been amply proved.

POLITICAL PARTIES.

The Kagoshima members of the Seiyu-kai held a meeting on the 10th inst. in the Chamber of Commerce there, and passed a resolution which, although couched in the abstract terms usually employed by Japanese politicians, is plainly intended to be a protest against what the endorsers evidently regard as a programme of excessive retrenchment on the part of the Government. The Kagoshima men appear to think that the Katsura Cabinet's financial scheme of adjustment errs on the side of over-much economy, and that it will have the effect of crippling the nation's material expansion. It was of course a foregone conclusion that Marquis Katsura's plans, however astute, would provoke hostile criticism at the hands of his political opponents. A fair question, however, presents itself as to whether productive enterprises might not be treated in a more liberal manner. On the other hand, nothing can be more imperative than abstention from all further loans for some time to come, and if that be admitted, it follows that all enterprises demanding loans for their prosecution had better be postponed. Judging from the comments made by Baron Shibusawa, who spoke as representative of the 76 bankers assembled at the Clearing House meeting on the 10th inst., the bankers entirely approve of the Government's scheme, and certainly it will be admitted that they are the best judges.

THE MEETING OF CLEARING HOUSE BANKERS.

This important meeting took place on the evening of the 10th inst. at 6 o'clock in the Bankers' Club, Tokyo. There were 76 bankers present and 15 guests, among the latter being Baron Goto, Minister of Communications, Mr. Wakatsuki, Vice-Minister of Finance, Mr. Mizumachi, Finance Commissioner to London, Baron Matsuo, Governor of the Bank of Japan, and others. The chair was occupied by Mr. Toyokawa Kyohci of the Mitsu Bishi Bank, and, after the special Committee's report had been read with regard to financial adjustment and the time for paying taxes, the chairman expressed a hope that an official statement would be made with regard to financial adjustment. Marquis Katsura had announced his intention of being present, but at the eleventh hour he found it impossible to attend owing to illness, and Baron Goto read the following speech on his behalf:

MARQUIS KATSURA'S SPEECH.

"It gives me great pleasure to meet you all this evening and to have an opportunity of conversing with you, gentlemen, who represent the financial organs of the entire nation.

Looking back to the time when I was last in office, I recall how you and I had to meet the unprecedented incidents of 1904 and 1905. The problems which caused most concern to the Government at that time were those of finance and economy. If it was found possible to engage in a war lasting for a year and a half, to maintain a great army in the field and to defray seventeen hundred million yen of military and naval outlays, not only without giving any shock to the national economy, but also so as to leave an available surplus of funds when peace was restored, that fact must be attributed to the spirit of union and self-sacrifice in the country's cause which pervaded all classes of the people, and I confess that I was profoundly moved to find the national economy based on such unexpectedly strong foundations, and at the same time to observe such unanimity and force of resolution in official and private circles alike.

On this second occasion I have again received His Majesty's commands to form a cabinet, and, more especially, I have been appointed to the portfolio of finance, so that I have to deal direct with problems of finance and economy. Looking at the conditions at home and abroad, I find that the post-bellum programme has not been completed, and that the national economy is not in a favourable state. Therefore it is essential that, if we are to look for a satisfactory development of the country's fortunes, Government and people alike must approach the problem of adjustment and reform with the same measure of firm resolve that they evinced at the time of the war.

On examination of the actual state of the finances, it is seen that the policy hitherto pursued has not been to adapt certain outgoings to certain incomings, but to supplement the latter by greater or less loans every year. The vicissitudes of the time, however, have rendered it difficult to float new loans, and there have resulted discrepancies in carrying the budgets into effect. Therefore I consider that the most urgent need of the moment is to cut off this source of malady so as to bring the revenue and the expenditure into equilibrium, and place the finances on a really firm basis.

Nor is this all. Owing to the sudden increase of their volume, not a few of the national debt-bonds have not yet passed into the hands of bond fide investors, and, moreover, an uneasy feeling has been engendered with regard to our finance, so that our stocks have suffered signal depreciation on the domestic and foreign markets alike, and holders of these securities have been subjected to heavy loss. Hence not only is it necessary that all contracting of new debts must be carefully avoided, but also as the time is approaching when the bonds representing the price of the nationalized railways will have to be handed over, a suitable addition must be made to the fund for redeeming the national debts, thus ensuring the policy of redemption, strengthening public confidence in the bonds, and restoring their market value.

You, gentlemen, are perfectly acquainted with the course of the national economy and its conditions, so that I need not here speak upon that subject. In view of the necessity of replenishing the country's resources, it is out of the question that the present long-continued state of depression should be disregarded.

Taking the above facts for basis, and having determined the general principles of financial adjustment, I have been chiefly engaged since my assumption of office in investigating the actual state of affairs, and, my ideas having finally taken shape, have reached the stage of resolve. I trust that the resulting measures of adjustment will solidify the fundamental basis of finance with due regard to the great policy of the State, and that they will effect a satisfactory settlement of the national debts. These are the points to which I wish particularly to invite your attention.

What principally evoked my admiration when I came to draft a scheme of adjustment was to find that the foundation of the country's finance is, in point of fact, comparatively strong, and is by no means in the unsound condition attributed to it by some observers. Thus, on examining the state of affairs up to the present, I see that the revenues actually collected have exceeded the estimates every year, and, further, that the contemplated expenditures have not been fully incurred in the financial year to which they belong, but have been carried forward in no inconsiderable degree to the ensuing year. Hence by accurately investigating the facts connected with carrying out plans of works, and making correspondingly suitable adjustments, it has been found possible, without any special trouble, to bring the revenue and the expenditures into equilibrium, and at the same time not to make any change in the plans themselves. The various works, in so far as they are economic undertakings, or serve for purposes of national defence or for preserving public peace, belong for the most part to State essentials, and do not admit of sudden alterations or abandonments. But, when it comes to the question of the time of carrying them out, it may be found expedient rather than otherwise to make such adjustments as are adapted to economic necessities. The adjustments that we propose are guided by that idea, and are intended to subserve the dual purpose of meeting financial expediency and carrying the works themselves to full completion. We have not been idly impelled to any positive policy, neither have we fallen into any scheme of negative re-adjustments.

Of course the time has not yet come for me to lay before you the full details of our plan, but I will state the gist of the policy we have adopted.

1.—With regard to the fixed expenditures, we have adapted them to the fixed revenues. As for outlays connected with telephones and the Steel Foundry and extraordinary war expenditures, funds for which have hitherto been obtained by loans, we have made them defrayable out of the general income, and we have abandoned all floating of new loans for the present. This does not apply, however, to the Public Works Bonds of Formosa, which amount to no inconsiderable sum, and for procuring which a special method is already provided.

2.—It has hitherto been the custom to anticipate a natural expansion of the revenue, but in order to place things on a firm footing and to have a surplus for each ensuing year, we have abandoned that custom.

3.—In order to maintain confidence in the State's bonds, thus restoring their market price and protecting the interests of their holders, while at the same time producing indirectly a favourable effect upon the general economy, we have decided to apply a sum of at least 50 million yen annually for the redemption of the country's debts.

4.—As for the railways, they will be gradually placed on a basis of independent operation, and their connexion with the general accounts will be severed. By this means the abuses that have hitherto resulted from mixing up the accounts will be remedied, and a suitable system of special finance will be elaborated. In this special system the general financial policy of abstaining from loans will be pursued for the present. Only the profits derived from the lines, together with accommodation from the working capital of the Deposits Bureau, and moneys saved by economies will be devoted to purposes of improvement and extension.

In order to carry out the above policy a change will be effected in the year period for the fixed expenditures, suitable postponement of annual outlays being made, and administrative expenses will also be curtailed to a certain degree. The result will be an alteration of the original six years' period, and its extension from the 42nd year to the 52nd (1909 to 1919). This extension, as it means an amendment of the annual outlays for carrying out the works, is of an altogether different nature from merely postponing the outlays for one year only, and paying them out in the next. Thus the postponement, being in addition to that already effected in the continuing outlays under the six years' programme, will involve altogether a sum of about 200 million yen. The details of the postponement will be determined after examination by the several Departments concerned, and will then be fixed in accordance with the proper procedure. I believe that the results of these postponements will produce very little effect on the productive enterprises of the people, but with reference to that point further accurate investigations will be made, and care will be taken not to neglect suitable steps. Our policy for adjusting the finances and the national debts having thus been determined, it gives me much satisfaction to have been able to explain it to you this evening.

I am firmly convinced that the basis of the finances having been made firm, and the policy for redeeming the national debts determined, the people will now be able to proceed with their economic enterprises in perfect confidence. And it is my hope that you, gentlemen, in your capacity of men of affairs, with with one mind and united effort do everything in your power to promote economic adjustment and recovery, so that the dawn of economic prosperity and development may soon become visible. Fortunately, the disturbance of economic conditions in Europe and America, which largely contributed to the depression in our country, has disappeared, and things have of late taken a distinct turn for the better. At home, too, the market for our silk has at length become active, and there are prospects of good crops, so that if the assistance of you, gentlemen, who constitute the central organs of economics, be wisely given, there will not, I am persuaded, be any special difficulty in bringing about economic adjustment and recovery. As improvement and development of productive enterprises promote the welfare of the people at home and abroad, and have no little influence in preserving permanent peace, I can not but hope to have your whole-hearted co-operation in pursuing these ends.

The above speech was received with many marks of applause.

Baron Shibusawa then rose and said that they had listened with profound satisfaction to the detailed and exhaustive statement of the Prime Minister, as just read by the Minister of Communications. That the effects of a great war like that of 1904-5 should make themselves felt in all directions, and should exercise considerable influence on the finances of the country, was an experience common to all nations in similar circumstances, and need not therefore excite any surprise. The bankers of the Empire, rendered deeply solicitous by observing the injury suffered by the country's credit at home and abroad, and by the consequent depreciation of the State securities, had formulated the scheme of adjustment embodied in the special Committee's report, as read by the Chairman that evening. But they learned from the statement of the Prime Minister, as just communicated to them, that the Government's view of the situation had extended even further than their own, and that a programme had been drawn up which more than satisfied their hopes. While expressing their appreciation of the Government's thoroughness, they rejoiced to feel that a large part of their own uneasiness was dispelled. Doubtless the country's credit vis à vis foreign nations would now be gradually restored. One word must be added. The bankers, having in their representations to the Government laid special stress upon the necessity of increasing the Sinking Fund, had been charged by some critics with working mainly in their own interests, and had been reminded that financial adjustment demanded measures other than the mere repayment of debts. As to that, he ventured to recall the old Confucian saying that "charity begins at home" (kotei wa sore jin wa nasu no moto). Everything must have its order of procedure, and, after all, the discharge of the large obligations contracted on account of the War must be regarded as the basis of financial adjustment. It was a matter for profound satisfaction that the Government had founded its financial policy upon this principle, and now that a satisfactory state of affairs was about to be established in the region of finance, it would devolve upon the bankers to labour for the restoration of the economic situation, at the same time exercising their influence to check speculative tendencies.

The meeting broke up at 10 o'clock. There has not been time yet for the Japanese newspapers to comment on this important event, but the unequivocal approval of the bankers can not fail to have the effect of largely restoring public confidence.

FINANCIAL.

Monday, September 14.

The Hochi Shimbun undertakes to give a more or less detailed analysis of some of the figures relating to the Government's financial programme, but experience has shown that these non-official forecasts are generally somewhat defective. One interesting point referred to by our contemporary may, however, be noted. In August each year the settled accounts for the preceding fiscal year are made up—that is, to say, for the year ended on the 31st of the previous March. These accounts are said to show for 1907-8 what is called a "natural increment" of revenue amounting to 60 million yen. The settled accounts for the previous year (ended March 31st 1907) showed a corresponding increment of 47 millions. Out of the above sum of 60 millions the taxes yielded 46 millions, and among the taxes those chiefly responsible for the increase were customs dues and the saké tax.

The Asahi Shimbun writing on the same subject notes that, owing chiefly to postponements of public works during the 40th fiscal year, the expenditures fell short of the estimates by 36 million yen, and if to this we add the 60 millions increment of revenue, it results that a sum of 96 millions can be carried over to the accounts for the current fiscal year. The Asahi is very careful to demonstrate that, fine as this result appears, it really affords no matter for serious exultation, because the decrease of expenditures was due merely to postponements, and the increase of revenue was ephemeral and unreliable. The fact is that the tendency of Japanese journalists at present is to take a pessimistic view of their country's finances. It is in some respects a wholesome tendency, but in others it merely reflects the despondent mood of the time with regard to commerce and industry.

Tuesday, September 15.

Some of the Tokyo newspapers have stated that out of the sum of 200 million yen which represent the total postponements effected in the continuing outlays under the present Cabinet's financial scheme, only 43 millions really belong to that scheme, the remaining 157 millions being the amount of the postponements effected by the last Cabinet in its six-year project. The same papers have stated that the postponements in the Army and Navy sections total only 3 million yen. All this is emphatically denied by the Finance Department. The truth is that the postponements made under the Katsura Cabinet's programme are entirely independent of those made under the Saionji Cabinet's programme, and as for the assertion that the total affected in the case of armaments expenditures is only 3 millions, the truth is that the greater part of the 200 millions stand in these very sections, though the exact figures cannot yet be stated.

The Asahi Shimbun quotes an anonymous official financier as saying that what is called the natural increment of revenue, which was collected in the fiscal years 1906-7 and 1907-8, cannot be expected to continue in the immediately succeeding years. During the two last years the country may be said to have been in a state of post-bellum boom and the proceeds from customs dues and consumption taxes were exceptionally large. But this cannot be anticipated during the current fiscal year in view of the state of depression which exists in industrial and commercial circles. It will indeed be fortunate if the revenue actually collected comes up to the estimates, which are tolerably liberal. This same authority thinks that as Japan is generally about one year behind the Occident in receiving economic impressions, the present unsatisfactory state of affairs will not reach its worst until 1909 or 1910. At that time there will be so little demand for money that the bankers, instead of asking to have the national bonds redeemed, will be wanting to have redemption dispensed with.

That is a curious forecast. Recent experiences do not show by any means that Japan takes a year to experience the acutest effects of European and American economic conditions. Certainly that was not the case last year when the American panic was felt almost immediately in this country. Moreover, cheap and plentiful money in Japan has never since the commencement of the Meiji Era been a symptom of bad times. Quite the contrary indeed.

It is now stated that the Treasury has resolved to hand over the bonds for the nationalized railways in two installments, one in 1909 and the other in 1910.

The Japanese members of the Establishment Committee of the Eastern Colonization Company are to be publicly nominated today. They are to consist of 15 official members, 15 members of the two Houses of the Diet, and 53 representatives of the business world, making 83 in all; these with the 33 Korean members will form the whole Committee of 116. The first meeting is to take place on the 21st inst. and is expected to last five days. On the 15th inst. Marquis Katsura, in his capacity of Minister of Finance, invited the Korean members to the official residence in Nagata, cho and expounded to them the purposes of the Association. Tokyo newspapers publish the names of the Japanese members. Among them we observe those of Count Okimachi, Viscounts Hotta and Mishima, Barons Shibusawa, Iwasaki, Mitsui, Matsuo and Takahashi, and Messrs. Soyeda, Sonoda, Ikeda, Yasuda, Toyokawa, Hayakawa, Nakano, Okura, Kondo, Takata, Murai, and other well known men. There can be no doubt that the cream of the business world is represented on this committee.

General Usagawa is quoted as saying that about 30 years must elapse before this Company attains full results, and that nobody who looks for rapid returns, as is the fashion now-a-days, ought to join it.

THE YALU TIMBER QUESTION.

It is now confidently stated that the Yalu Timber Convention was finally signed at Mukden on the 11th inst. The Japan Times has obtained information which appears to be authentic with reference to the 20 articles comprising the Convention and it publishes the gist of them as follows:—

That the company shall be opened on the 25th day of September of the 31st year of Meiji, corresponding to the 1st day of September of the Chinese calendar.

That the capital of the company amounting to 3,000,000 yen shall be paid in on the opening day of the company equally by the Chinese and Japanese Governments.

That the capital of the company and the income account shall be treated with the Peking silver dollar as the standard, and it shall be deposited equally with Chinese and Japanese banks.

That officials of the company shall be composed of one president, two chief managers, more than two managers, some experts and others. The presidency shall be filled by the Tao'ai of Tungpien, the chief managers shall be appointed by China and Japan, and other officials shall be appointed after consultation by the chief managers.

That commissioners shall be dispatched sometimes by China as well as Japan to inspect the work of the company.

That the company shall be bound to get the consent of both China and Japan when making any contract.

That the company shall be bound to lay aside 5 per cent of the net profit as a reserve fund.

That all the timber handled by the company shall be granted 2 per cent. reduction in duty as compared with the former tariff.

That the management of drifting timber shall be entrusted to the company.

That although the selling and buying of timber shall belong to the work of the company, the existing Chinese middlemen may engage in their work with the consent of the company.

THE AIR-SHIP.

We gather from The Times' correspondent in Berlin that the utilities of the air-ship for purposes of war have been considered in Germany with more attention than we had supposed. He writes:—

The spice of political excitement with which the movement has been favoured has begun to give rise to misgivings in various quarters. Objection is taken to the fact that Count Zeppelin's more enthusiastic admirers appear to be chiefly impressed with the military possibilities of his invention and with calculations as to whether in time of war an airship of this type could, for example, accomplish a voyage from Metz to Paris and back. But although such financial assistance as the Government is conceding to Count Zeppelin has been appropriated under the estimates for the Imperial Home Office, it has already been pointed out that the primary value of these costly and unwieldy machines will be for the purpose of reconnaissance in warfare. An enormous fabric, with the proportions of an ocean liner, but with a carrying capacity equivalent to the weight of only 12 or 20 persons, can as yet scarcely be reckoned of serious account for the practical purposes of daily life. To the eye of the layman, moreover, these structures seem to present a target of dimensions which might conceivably, in no small degree impair their utility in time of war. The problem of housing these monsters of the air on land is another of the difficulties which still have to be solved.

MANCHURIA.

Friday, September 11.

It is officially announced that the Vice-Consulates in Tieling and Liaoyang have been raised to the rank of Consulates, and that Consular Offices were duly opened there for business on the 10th inst.

It is now definitely alleged that the exceedingly protracted negotiations with reference to the Yalu forestry question have at length been brought to a satisfactory conclusion, and that the delegates will affix their signatures in a day or two. According to present expectations, the offices of the enterprise will be opened from the 25th inst., namely the 1st of the 9th month according to the Chinese calendar.

Saturday, September 12.

The special train, conveying Viceroy Hsu, arrived at Port Arthur at 10.30 on the 12th inst. His Excellency was received by a large number of Japanese officials at the station and drove to the hotel in a carriage sent by the Governor General and escorted by a troop of cavalry. In front of the hotel the Viceroy was welcomed by General Viscount Oshima. After luncheon the Viceroy visited 203 metre hill, and in the evening he was entertained at a banquet given by the Governor General. It is said to have been a very brilliant affair. A torch light procession was organised that night in honour of the illustrious visitor.

Monday, September 14.

It is stated that the Russians have intimated their desire to restore to China the coal mines in the vicinity of the Taihei River, of which a concession was granted to them by China in the year 1900. This is not to be interpreted as an act of mere benevolence. The mines have proved unremunerative and have involved their exploiters in a loss of 100,000 taels.

There is a rumour that, owing to difficulty in procuring materials, the construction of the Amur Railway will be suspended this autumn.

The Syndicate of flour manufacturers which has just been organised at Harbin was to commence operations on the 14th instant.

It appears that Viceroy Hsu's trip to Port Arthur is in the sequel of a memorial presented by him to the Throne by telegraph. His Excellency urged that he had been visited in Mukden by the Governor-General of Kwantung, General Viscount Oshima, by the President of the South Manchuria Railway, Baron Goto, and by the Vice-President, Mr. Nakamura. He considered that to return these visits was not only a matter of courtesy, but would also tend to promote the good relations between the two Empires, and therefore he proposed to make a journey to Port Arthur and Yingkow, pushing on thence to Peking. It is to be presumed that he will make a very short stay in the capital, as the leave he has applied for is only a week.

Japanese newspapers publish voluminous telegrams about the reception given to the Viceroy. The details are that at 6 a.m. on the 13th inst. he witnessed a march past of the 39th regiment of infantry, and subsequently visited the museum where the war trophies are displayed. He lunched with the staff officers of the garrison. In the afternoon he visited the forts of Erlungshan and Sunshuan, which were the scenes of such bloody encounters during the siege, and in the evening he dined at the officers' mess. There were brilliant illuminations, fireworks, search-lights, bands of music, and cheering such as never has been heard before at Port Arthur. The Japanese are past masters in the art of entertaining, and they seem to have lived up to their reputation in this instance.

Tuesday, September 15.

There has been another Hunghutsz outrage on the South Manchuria Railway at almost the same place as the last episode of a similar character, namely, between Hwankiatun and Mengkiatun. The raiders numbered eight and they succeeded in shooting the two Japanese guards before the latter could accomplish anything, after which they rifled the passengers of about 8,000 yen. The Mainichi Dempo's information is that these miscreants came by the train from Harbin. It is evident that unless an effectual stop can be put to such outrages, travel by the South Manchuria Railway will be badly affected.

On the morning of the 14th inst. Viceroy Hsu left Port Arthur for Dairen. It is scarcely necessary to say that he had a great send-off, several thousands of persons assembling at the station to give him a parting cheer. There was of course an interchange of gifts between him and the Governor General, Viscount Oshima's present being a suit of old Japanese armour. At 10 o'clock a special train carrying the Viceroy and his suite reached Dairen and found a repetition of the decorations, fireworks and demonstrations of rejoicing which had marked the visit to Port Arthur.

Viceroy Hsu attended a meeting of the officials and citizens of Dairen in the Public Hall at that place on the 14th inst. The Mayor of the Japanese municipality delivered a short address of welcome, and the Viceroy in replying alluded to the growing prosperity of Dairen, to the steadily increasing number of Japanese merchants settling in Manchuria, and to the constant development of mutual interest. His Excellency said that he trusted that the two nations would long enjoy the blessings of peace, and that the inhabitants of Manchuria would all labour to promote a good understanding and happy relations.

In the evening the Viceroy was entertained by the officials of the South Manchuria Railway Company, and after the banquet there was a garden party. The town was illuminated, and fireworks and a torchlight procession contributed to the gaiety of the scene, which is described as having been very brilliant. On the following morning at 7 o'clock the Viceroy took his departure for Yingkow by train.

MR. KATO.

Mr. Kato Takaaki, interviewed by a representative of the Chuo Shinbun, is quoted as saying that his domestic affairs render it impossible for him to start for London before November. When he last represented his country at the Court of St. James, the War between China and Japan took place, and for the first time the Western world seemed to awake to the fact that such a country as Japan existed in the Orient. One result was that, in the excitement of this discovery, a great desire manifested itself to pay courteous attention to the new Power. Invitations were showered upon its Representative, and Mr. Kato, recognising that one of the duties of the time was to advertise his country, responded to and reciprocated the civilities as far as possible.

Then followed the Anglo-Japanese Entente, afterwards amplified into an Alliance, and subsequently the War with Russia took place. It is but natural that as the Alliance grows older the feeling which inspired it should lose something of its warmth. That is the way of human nature. Custom begets indifference. Moreover the ententes between England and France and England and Russia have since been effected, on the one hand, and similar ententes have been concluded by Japan with the same countries, on the other. Thus it may be said that the political atmosphere in which the Anglo-Japanese Alliance grew to maturity has undergone a measure of change, and nothing is now more essential than to restore it to its old condition. Japan's accession to a place among the comity of great Powers necessarily exposes her to some envy and jealousy. She has been of late feeling the effects of these latter sentiments, and even among her English friends some have conceived grounds of offence, as, for example, in connexion with the Fakumen Railway question. As Japan develops her material resources and grows in competitive competence, points of friction will certainly disclose themselves in her relations with foreign Powers. Diplomacy therefore has its work cut out, and it must be the earnest endeavour of Japan's Representatives to smooth over these points of friction and, above all, to preserve an Alliance which makes so materially for the peace of the East.

THE EXHIBITION.

Our readers doubtless remember that at a meeting of the ward officials of Tokyo, held a few days ago, a resolution was adopted to the effect that a domestic exhibition should be opened in Tokyo in the year 1912 and a committee was appointed to give effect to this resolution. The Committee met on the 15th inst. and decided that an exhibition should be held, which decision being simply a replica of that adopted by the original meeting seems somewhat superfluous. A working committee of 7 members was then elected under the chairmanship of Mr. Koizuka Riu. It is stated that several of the leading business men are in favour of this project, and that the idea is to devote about 3 million yen to the exhibition.

Meanwhile the Municipal Council has decided that the levying of buai-zai shall be suspended temporarily, and as this tax was imposed solely on account of the Exhibition, the City Assembly will doubtless endorse the Council's decision.

We may mention here that the Minister for Home Affairs has issued a formal order accepting the resignation of Mr. Ozaki Yukio from the office of Mayor and requiring that an election shall be held to choose his successor. The method in this matter is that the City Assembly votes for 3 candidates whose names are submitted to the Minister of State for Home Affairs and by him a final selection is made. The order is now in the hands of the Governor of Tokyo, and will doubtless be transmitted to the Municipality without delay. But in the meanwhile the Aldermen and the members of the Assembly have not yet made up their minds about the new Mayor, and it is said that if the election were held now, Mr. Ozaki would be defeated by a majority of two. The expectation is therefore that four or five days will elapse before any steps are taken.

PRESS METHODS.

Mr. W. T. R. Preston has thrown a lighted match into a powder magazine. Writing in the National Review under the heading "Fair Play for Japan," he says:—

"It may not be out of place here to refer to the somewhat singular position that Japan occupies on account of the unrestricted liberty accorded to foreigners. This is specially noticeable as regards newspapers published in foreign languages, some of which are controlled and edited by notoriously anti-Japanese influences. Their organs continually impugn Japanese character, administration and authority. The Government is ridiculed, the administration is pronounced incompetent, the public finances are alleged to be on the verge of bankruptcy, a slight deficit between revenue and expenditure is cited as showing the pending inability of the nation to meet current obligations, an excess of imports over exports foreshadows a financial crisis, veiled hints are given that foreigners need not look for justice in legal tribunals, and the authorities are accused of encouraging the spoliation of foreigners. Nothing whatever is left undone to weaken respect for authority at home, and to destroy public confidence abroad. Japanese are referred to as 'Japs' and 'natives'—phrases which are as objectionable to them as 'Cockney' if applied to an educated Englishman. Many Japanese regard this propaganda with suppressed indignation, although some profess absolute indifference. The outside world reads the papers published in English in Japan, and is encouraged by an anti-Japanese clique to misjudge the character of the Japanese, as well as the financial, political, and commercial outlook of the nation.

"What, I may ask, would happen in Berlin if a French journalist established a newspaper there, and accorded similar treatment to the Kaiser's Government; or in Paris if a German had the indecency to follow suit; or in Russia if a Japanese newspaper were established in St. Petersburg to 'crab' all things Russian; or if an Austrian undertook such a mission in Genoa or Milan. Even in London, patience under such aggravating circumstances might reach the breaking-point. The liberty allowed to foreigners in any country may unconsciously broaden into licence, when it becomes intolerable and leads to deep and legitimate resentment. It seems to be forgotten by these anti-Japanese foreigners, that the Japanese are sensitive in their national pride as the people of the West."

We can foresee with tolerable accuracy the explosion that will follow these comments by Mr. Preston. Experience teaches, for similar comments in our columns have never failed to evoke a pretty smart discharge of fireworks. The Seoul Press, in reproducing the criticism of the Canadian Trade commissioner, wonders what he would have said had he been here in the days prior to treaty revision, when the foreign local press subjected itself to no kind of restraint, and used any and every handy stick to beat the Japanese. Yes, indeed, "a marked change has come over the attitude and tone of these papers during the past ten years." They are now veritable sucking doves. But in some of the old leaven works still and on behalf of the great majority the best plea that can be set up is that their hostility is sufficiently veiled to be generally decent. Hostility it is, however: unequivocal hostility. An observer like Mr. Preston, whose purview is not obscured by comparative memories, must of necessity be struck by the fact that of frank friendship for Japan there is almost none visible in the columns of the local foreign press, and must ask with some curiosity whether this tone reflects its surroundings.

Our prediction about Mr. Preston has been fully verified by facts. The old familiar charge is put forward that he has not been long enough in Japan to form any sound judgment about the tone of the foreign local press. Naturally he will answer—and we agree with him—that not much time is needed to arrive at a conclusion on that point. A year's perusal of some of the newspapers published in the English language in Yokohamia and Kobe—and we believe that Mr. Preston has had more than a year—is amply sufficient to arrive at a clear estimate of their spirit, and therefore to discredit the Canadian Commissioner on the ground of lack of experience is very defective logic. It will entertain him to be told with delightful naïveté that "he hopes perhaps to truckle to the Japanese by abusing the foreign press." In that one utterance he will see quite sufficient proof of the justice of his indictment, for unless the foreign press were habitually hostile to the Japanese, the possibility of truckling to the latter by abusing the former is not perceptible. We do not imagine, for the rest, that Mr. Preston will be much moved by the graceful epithets delivered at his address. He will not greatly mind being accused of "slap-dash readiness to form conclusions;" or being called "another eccentricity loosed on us;" or being dubbed "a freak who injures his country's reputation and its commercial cause by snap judgments." Probably he will point to these rejoinders as illustrations of his thesis. With regard to the question—posed apparently in all seriousness—whether Mr. Preston "can point to any foreign paper published in this country which has held the Japanese Government up to ridicule," he will reply very easily that only a few weeks have passed since a Yokohama English newspaper deliberately charged the Japanese Authorities with having trumped up a false charge against a Korean in Seoul, with having compelled the police to effect his arrest, and with having induced a law court to remand him for trial, not at all because he had been guilty of any crime, or was honestly suspected of having been guilty, but simply because the Japanese Government had a vindictive desire to persecute him in consequence of certain evidence given by him in a court of law, though the same Japanese Government had officially promised to hold him immune from any troublesome results of that evidence. It may be retorted that such accusations cannot be described as "holding the Japanese up to ridicule." That is true; the description is altogether inadequate. But, after all, could there be any more ostrich-like performance on the part of a section of the local foreign press than this attempt to hide its guilty head under the sands of special pleading? There is no room whatever for discussion. Everybody knows that Mr. Preston is right when he speaks of foreign local organs "controlled and edited by notoriously anti-Japanese influences." None knows it better than do the editors themselves of those organs.

THE EASTERN DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

The 33 Korean members of the Establishment Committee of the above Company assembled at the Finance Department, on the 15th inst., and in answer to an exposé of the objects of the Company by Mr. Katsuda, their representative, Mr. Han, made an address expressing the conviction of himself and his fellow members that the formation of this Company is essential to the material welfare of Korea and that its success is to be most earnestly desired. At the same time he did not conceal the fact that certain Koreans entertained mistaken views about the enterprise and were disposed to oppose its consummation. He and his colleagues promised that they should spare no effort to correct this false impression and to make known the really beneficial objects of the project. The Committee then repaired to the official residence of the Prime Minister, where Marquis Katsura made a brief speech dwelling on the importance of the undertaking in the interests of Korean development, thanking the members for taking such a long journey, and informing them that their Japanese colleagues would soon be in a position to combine with them in organising the company, and that he, Marquis Katsura, hoped to have the benefit of their advice from time to time.

It has been decided that the office of the Company shall be established for the time being in the official residence of the Minister of Finance and that it shall be under the charge of Mr. Den, Secretary of the Finance Department.

The 83 Japanese members of the Establishment Committee of the Eastern Development Company have now been gazetted. The Chairman of Committee is Count Okimachi. The Committee is to meet on the 21st inst., the 33 Korean members being of course present, and it is expected that the Company's statutes and all essential rules and regulations will be at once adopted, as they are understood to have been already drafted. The Committee will of course have to decide among other things the time of placing the shares on the market, but the present forecast is that this will be done at the beginning of October. Of course only one-fourth of the face-value of the shares (50 yen) will be called up at first, and thus the sum which the subscribers will have to find immediately is 2,500,000 yen. October will be chosen because, in the first place, the Japanese money market is generally easy in that month, and in the second the Treasury will be redeeming 25 million yen worth of national bonds. The Development Company has a subsidy of 300,000 yen for 8 years, so that subscribers for its shares are assured of fine interest on their money from the outset. In fact, the subsidy represents 12 per cent on the first installment of the capital. There is, however, one difficulty, namely, the payment of share capital by the Korean members of the Company. The charter says that one-third of the shares must be held by Korean subjects, which means that the Koreans will have to put up more than 800,000 yen towards the first installment. This is considered to be quite beyond their strength, and there is talk of their subscription taking the form of land. But whether such a substitution is sanctioned by law remains to be determined, and at any rate two inconveniences are connected with it, namely, that if this privilege be granted to Korean members, it can not be withheld from Japanese, some of whom would be glad enough to thus get rid of lands held by them in Korea; and in the second place, the wisdom of fixing so large a sum of the Company's capital at the outset is doubtful. We should think that the way out of this dilemma would be to limit the payment by the Korean members to the bargain money, 250 yen per share, and to get a bank to lend the rest.

According to the Official Gazette, three British Consuls have been appointed namely: Mr. R. G. E. Forster, as consul in Tainan; Mr. H. E. Parlett as vice-consul in Hokkaido including the jurisdictions of Aomori, Iwate, and Akita prefectures; and Mr. J. T. Wawn, as vice-consul in Dairen. The Japanese Foreign Office issued exequaturs to them on Sept. 8th.

CHINA.

Saturday, September 12.

At last year's autumn manoeuvres the Japanese military instructors who are in the service of the Chinese Government were very much en evidence. In fact they may be said to have figured as directing the movements of the troops. This year, however, orders have been issued that the Japanese military instructors shall not take any active part in the manoeuvres, but shall be limited to the role of spectators. This change is attributed by some critics to the rights-recovery spirit now permeating the Chinese nation, but surely that is an extravagant view. Nothing can be more natural than that the Chinese should desire to dispense with visible foreign aid on such an occasion.

Viceroy Twan has memorialized the Throne in the sense that very severe measures should be adopted against vernacular newspapers published in Shanghai. His Excellency recommends that any journals failing to comply with the laws of the land shall be deprived of all privileges, including the reduced rates of postage and telegraph, and shall not be carried by steamers or railways. Copies transmitted by foreign posts shall be confiscated at the place of mailing. This proposal has received the approval of the Throne. The Asahi Shimbun, in publishing this news, describes the action of the Chinese authorities as barbarous. We confess that we do not share our respected contemporary's view. Our impression is that a little of this treatment, to which it gives the epithet banko, might be applied to the third pages of Japanese newspapers with considerable advantage. Hardly a day passes without the publication of something outrageous in this section of the Tokyo press.

The Nippon's version of this affair suggests that the measure is directed mainly against newspapers which, though printed in the Chinese language, are nominally or really owned by foreigners, and thus enjoy a measure of immunity from the provisions of the press law.

Tuesday, September 15.

It appears that Mr. Tang Shaoh is to make his trip to the West via Japan. Telegrams from Peking say that he is instructed to investigate the financial conditions in Japan as well as those in the United States and the leading European countries, which duty will supplement the principal object of his journey, namely, to return China's thanks to the United States Government in connexion with the Boxer indemnity. It is expected that Mr. Tang will leave Peking early next month and that he will remain in Japan until the 4th of November. He will be accompanied by a staff of about 20 secretaries versed in the languages of all the countries he intends to visit.

The Canton correspondent of the Asahi Shimbun says that owing to the frequent representations made by Mr. Consul Segawa, the Chinese local authorities have recognised the mutually injurious effects of the boycott. Viceroy Chang has accordingly ordered the Governor of Kwangchow to issue an instruction to the Self-Government Associations and to the various newspapers in the sense that the boycott should be discontinued. What practical effect will be produced by this step remains to be seen, but at any rate it is an important move in the right direction.

Hankow telegraphs to the Mainichi Shimbun that the preparation of the special Japanese settlement at that place has made great progress, and that about 100 Japanese subjects, hitherto resident in the settlements of other nationalities, have moved to the new site.

It is stated that the Viceroy of Chili, who is exerting himself actively for the resurrection of the Chinese navy, holds the view that China ought to rely in this matter on Japanese expert assistance, as she is doing in the organisation and training of her army.

Wednesday, September 16.

There has been a breach of the embankment of the interminably mischievous Yellow River, and the Viceroy of Chili has sent 300 soldiers to assist the work of repair.

The Chinese merchants of Poochow are sending a deputation to Peking to protest against the recent increment of the salt tax.

The Dalai Lama is to enter Peking in the beginning of October, and it is stated that one of the Imperial Princes will be sent as far as Paoting to meet him.

Thursday, September 17.

It is reported from Peking that his Excellency Ma Yukun, Viceroy of Pehchihli, has died, and that the Viceroy of Kansu has been temporarily appointed to succeed him. Mr. Ma is well remembered as Commander of the Chinese forces posted on the west of Manchuria during the war with Russia to preserve Chinese neutrality. He was Commander-in-chief in Chekiang in October, 1899, and he held the same post in Chihli in 1900 during a part of the Boxer troubles. In 1902 he was appointed Junior Guardian of the Heir Apparent.

Peking telegraphs that the special correspondent of the New York Herald is going the round of Chinese statesmen and Chinese newspapers, endeavouring to discredit Japan and to create a feeling of hostility to her. This is scarcely credible. That the New York Herald should engage in a crusade for the purpose of bringing about a Chinese-American alliance, and that it should incidentally represent Japan as the Power whose aggressions necessitate such an alliance is not altogether illegitimate, but that it should use its correspondents for the deliberate purpose of sowing seeds of discord between two neighbouring countries is something not easily believed.

It is stated that the Chinese Government is pressing for the removal of the explosives magazines of the various Powers to a position outside the city. This measure of precaution is attributed to the recent accident in the German barracks.

THE PRESS ON THE FINANCIAL PROGRAMME.

The Jiji Shimpō undertakes to read the bankers a lesson in their own province. It has scarcely anything good to say about the financial programme announced on the evening of the 10th inst., and it therefore ridicules the bankers, who welcome that programme with such unequivocal expressions of satisfaction. That by abstaining from further loans and by abandoning the impractical course of including in each year's estimates what is called the natural increase of taxation revenue, a step has been taken in the right direction. But it is not in any sense a radical step. The Premier himself admits that the volume of Japanese bonds hitherto issued exceeds the demand of bona fide investors, and that the point of saturation having thus been passed, confidence has necessarily been impaired and appreciation has resulted. But Marquis Katsura is much mistaken if he supposes that this situation can be corrected merely by refraining from further loans and by appropriating a paltry sum of 50 million yen annually for the sinking fund. The comparative futility of such procedure becomes apparent at once when we observe that from 4 to 5 hundred million yen worth of stocks have to be added to the existing large total in the near future in connexion with the nationalization of the railways. What the Jiji Shimpō regards as the fundamental measure of financial adjustment is the regulation of taxation. It thinks that the nation is oppressed and tormented by the continuance of the hastily devised system of increased taxation, dictated by the exigencies of the War. Until that problem is resolutely taken in hand and satisfactorily solved, it is futile to talk of financial adjustment. We do not profess to understand the Jiji Shimpō's line of argument. It seems to insist on the one hand that nothing is more essential than to create a substantial margin of taxation, which can be effected only by reducing the present taxes, and on the other it appears to regard as futile the reductions of expenditures contemplated by the Cabinet.

The Chuo Shimbun, which is the recognised organ of the Seiyu-kai, takes an unexpected line. It says that, according to well informed persons, 150 million yen out of the 200 millions affected by the programme of postponements stands in the Army and Navy columns. But does the state of the world at present justify this deliberation in the matter of armaments? The Cabinet is shouldering a tremendous responsibility, and the Chuo obviously thinks that the country's safety will be imperilled by such a course. The bankers may be satisfied, but the bankers do not represent the nation. If Marquis Katsura really desires to have universal co-operation in carrying out his programme he must take into consideration the views of all parties.

The Yomiuri Shimbun, now regarded as an organ of the Seiyu-kai, plants itself comfortably on the fence, though it obviously leans in an anti-Katsura direction. It refuses to pronounce any definite opinion until it sees the details of the programme, but it hints very plainly that productive enterprises, really essential to the country's material expansion, have been sacrificed as companions to the postponements of non-productive expenditures. Should that prove to be the case—and the Yomiuri is evidently persuaded that it will so prove—then the Cabinet will stand convicted of failure to discriminate between jewels and pebbles. There can be no doubt that the Government has won the approval of men of affairs, and in that respect it has placed itself in a more convenient situation than that occupied by the last Ministry. But whether the Cabinet has been actuated merely by a desire to curry favour with business circles, or whether it has been influenced by genuine motives of financial reform, remains to be seen. The Yomiuri concludes by striking a more certain note; it declares itself an advocate of a positive policy in finance, whereas the Katsura Cabinet's policy is essentially negative.

The Asahi Shimbun speaks in an impartial and statesmanlike tone. It approves of the programme just announced, and it notes that the Premier spoke of administrative reform, though he qualified his statement by the words "to a certain extent." Nothing very great is perhaps to be expected in the face of such a reservation, but still that something will be done may fairly be assumed. What the Asahi emphatically welcomes is the Government's announced determination not to include in the yearly revenue what is called the natural expansion of income. That such expansion will take place is practically certain, and therefore its proceeds may ultimately be employed for the purpose of reducing the taxes, which will doubtless be the second stage of the Cabinet's programme. Altogether the Asahi Shimbun is satisfied with the prospect.

THE YANG CASE.

The third hearing of the Yang case took place on the 15th instant in Seoul. Mr. Bethell was examined. He stated that originally the Debt Redemption Fund of sixty thousand yen was lodged with Messrs. Collbran Bostwick and Company, but subsequently one half was withdrawn and deposited at the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. Thereafter twenty-five thousand of the latter sum was invested in mining shares, and subsequently the remaining five thousand, together with the money remaining in the hands of Messrs. Collbran, Bostwick and Company was lent to M. Martin, a French citizen. Mr. Bethell maintained that this was a proper disposition of the money. He went on to defend Mr. Yang, whom he described simply as an irresponsible employee so far as these particular matters were concerned. The Court was then about to proceed with the examination of M. Martin, when Mr. Marnham, editor of the Dai Han Mai Il Shimpō, who had obtained permission to appear as amicus curiæ for Mr. Yang, fell to the ground in a fit and the Court was adjourned. In the afternoon proceedings were resumed, and M. Martin, being examined, gave evidence similar to Mr. Bethell and alleged that the lending of the money to him was an ordinary transaction of business. The manager of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank at Chemulpho did not appear, as he was travelling in the country, and Mr. Collbran also did not put in an appearance, his contention being that he ought to be examined through his consul. Those two failures to appear are unfortunate as they will probably create the impression that there is no desire to promote the ends of justice. The Court adjourned without fixing a day for resuming the case, and the Japanese papers, from which we take these particulars, say that the matter is becoming more involved than ever.

MR. SHENG.

His Excellency Mr. Sheng Ihwai arrived in Tokyo at 11 a.m. on the 10th. He was received by a large number of Japanese officials and men of affairs, but his own companions and retinue quite outshone the nature of his reception. He was accompanied by about 200 persons, and the Japanese newspapers comment in terms of unfeigned admiration on the resurrection of the noble spectacle of the genuine daimyo's procession, and on the magnificent length of his Excellency's nails. It is stated that the Chinese Minister of Commerce desired to engage the whole of the Hotel Metropole for the purposes of his party, but the proprietors were not able to place more than one half at his disposal. It appears that he has brought his own cooks with him, and further expressions of admiration are excited in connexion with the dimensions of some of the culinary utensils carried in his Excellency's train. His Excellency intends to place himself under the care of Drs. Kitasato and Aoyama. He is in his 64th year, and he has obtained two months' leave of absence to recruit his health. It is to be sincerely hoped that his visit to Japan will have the desired effect, for Mr. Sheng ranks as one of his country's best servants.

Dr. Kitasato has diagnosed Mr. Sheng Ihwai's malady to be disease of the lungs, which, though likely to yield ultimately to treatment, will require more than two months' care. His Excellency is in a very debilitated condition and the doctors recommend that he should spend some months at Kamakura.

MARQUIS INOUE.

Sunday, September 13.

On the afternoon of the 12th inst. Marquis Inouye's symptoms underwent a change greatly for the worse. The nurses had occasion to shift his position and this slight movement seriously affected the heart's action. Temporary relief was obtained by camphor injections, but the patient fell into a lethargic condition and his case inspires the gravest alarm.

Monday, September 14.

Marquis Inouye's condition showed some improvement on the 13th and the change for the better continued on the 14th. His temperature was normal on the latter day and his pulse had gained perceptibly in strength and regularity. There was great drowsiness, but the sleep seemed natural.

Tuesday, September 15.

The accounts of Marquis Inouye's condition continue to be reassuring. He has recovered his appetite and his condition altogether inspires hope. When Marquis Matsukata went to visit him, the patient was able to converse with his old friend. The state of the heart, however, is not yet altogether satisfactory and it can not therefore be said that danger is past.

Wednesday, September 16.

Marquis Inouye's condition continues to improve, and the doctors are now beginning to be sanguine.

Thursday, September 17.

Marquis Inouye's condition continues to inspire hope. He passed the greater part of yesterday sleeping quietly.

THE PORTFOLIO OF FINANCE.

The Mainichi Dempo confidently announces that Marquis Katsura has decided to hand over the portfolio of Finance to Baron Sakatani, and that the Baron has signified his willingness to accept it. There was at one time much talk of Viscount Sone, but his duties in Korea held him there. Then Baron Goto and Baron Hirata seemed the most likely candidates, but they have been allotted to different chairs. As for the House of Peers, it is represented in the Ministry by Viscount Okabe. Thus unless Marquis Katsura continues himself to hold the portfolio, there can be no more appropriate holder than Baron Sakatani, who has served in the Finance Department throughout the whole of his official career, and whose ability is universally recognised.

On the heels of the above very confident statement the Hochi Shimbun follows with an equally assured assertion that the portfolio of Finance is to be given to Viscount Sone. The Hochi explains that the difficult problem of dealing with the postponements in the Army and Navy programme having been solved by Marquis Katsura, there is no further occasion for the Premier to remain in charge of the Finance Department. Accordingly Marquis Katsura after consultation with Prince Ito, has decided to appoint Viscount Sone. As for the office of Vice-Resident General, it will be left vacant for the present.

THE WEATHER.

Friday, September 11.

The Riukiu centre of depression, which is moving with extreme slowness, namely, at a rate not exceeding 5 miles an hour, reached the neighbourhood of Oshima (Satsuma) on the 10th inst., and its presence was felt in the southern part of Kyushu. It is not a deep centre of depression, but it may at any moment develop larger proportions, and at any rate its propinquity at this particular time is unfortunate. Yesterday (11th inst.) was the second critical period—the 220th day.

The latest news (Friday evening) is that the Riukiu depression is now moving N. N. E. and has reached Haruka Bay in Shikoku. A minor depression has made its appearance in the vicinity of the Bonin Islands.

Saturday, September 12.

The centre of depression which had come up from the Riukiu Islands and reached the vicinity of Shikoku, seems to have thence taken an easterly trend so as to pass out towards Hachijo-jima, without invading the main island. This was at 6 a.m. on the 12th, and doubtless the proximity of the storm is responsible for the heavy weather prevailing in Tokyo and Yokohama on the 12th and 13th. Meanwhile there is another centre of depression on the west of the Ogasawara Islands which is advancing in a north-easterly direction and seems likely to reach Japan. Yet a third has developed in the Yellow Sea, but its course is via the north-east coast of Korea and thence to Siberia. Finally there is a fourth of these phenomena in the Sea of Japan. It is moving in a north easterly direction and consequently menaces Hokkaido. On the morning of the 13th, the forecast of the Meteorological authorities was that there would be at least a temporary recovery of the weather on that day and they were right.

Monday, September 14.

The two centres of depression which were lingering in the neighbourhood, one, of the Ogasawara Islands, and the other, of the Hachijo-jima group, have both taken their way into the Pacific Ocean, and have consequently ceased to menace Japan. As for the third of these phenomena, namely, the one in the Sea of Japan, it has held its course to the northeast, and on the 14th inst. it struck Hokkaido. Thus for the moment these mischievous conditions have disappeared.

Thursday, September 17.

The meteorological reports are somewhat confusing, but the gist of them is that no specially bad weather threatens Japan for the moment.

Notice is given by the Department of Communications that Honmoku Buoy on the east extreme of Ara-su off Honmoku (Treaty Point), outside of Yokohama Harbour, will shortly be changed into a light buoy and renamed Ara-su Lighted Buoy.

Further notice will be given when the change has been effected.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, September 11.

There is a good deal of talk about the probable action of the Diet next session towards shipping subsidies. It appears to be thought more than probable that the House of Representatives will insist on the introduction of some system for checking the growth of this source of expenditure. It is unfortunate that the question should come up at a time of commercial depression like the present, but of course the depression itself is one of the chief causes of the agitation.

Mr. Kondo Rempei has been interviewed again with respect to the increase of railway rates in America, and has pointed out that unless some adjustment, not now visible, can be effected, the trans-Pacific carrying business of companies like the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha will inevitably be diverted to the Suez route.

The Mainichi Shimbun alleges that the settled accounts for the 40th fiscal year, namely, that ended March 31st 1908, show a natural increment of revenue to the extent of over 60 millions of yen, and an increment of revenue in the extraordinary section amounting to over 13 millions. Some part of the former large figure is doubtless due to the operation of laws, but in the main it must be regarded as the outcome of a natural development of the sources of taxation.

The officials of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce are quoted as saying that Japan's adherence to the Behring Sea Convention is opposed by her deep-sea fishermen mainly because they apprehend that it would involve the withdrawal of the State aid which they now enjoy. But this is said to be an error of calculation. There are now 35 Japanese vessels engaged in deep-sea fishing, and the aid they receive from the Treasury does not exceed 600 yen each. The loss of such a petty sum could not possibly produce any sensible effect on an industry which has shown during recent years palpable signs of robust development.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun quotes an anonymous official with reference to the continual outcry for the abolition of the transit tax and the taxes on salt and textile fabrics. The tax on salt is considered specially obnoxious because salt is an essential item in the food of even the lowest classes. But, as a matter of fact, the lowest classes are least affected by the appreciation of commodities, for their wages being elastic, respond to this appreciation. Thus a little examination of their condition shows that they are living very comfortably, and are quite able to spend money on pleasures and even luxuries. As a matter of fact, the salt tax amounts to only 50 or 60 sen annually for each household of five persons, and such a paltry impost can hardly be considered embarrassing. This is the view attributed to officialdom by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun.

Several Tokyo newspapers call attention to the very rapid growth of local taxes in the City Tokyo. They give figures in support of this assertion and certainly the figures are striking. They are as follow:—

	yen per head.
National taxes .....	1.369 7.498
Prefectural taxes .....	0.533 0.697
City taxes .....	0.778 1.199
Ward taxes .....	0.066 0.518
Totals .....	2.746 9.512

This shows that each unit of the population is now paying 9.51 yen, and if his other burdens be added, the result is that he has to pay a yearly sum of over 11.50 yen. Comparing the total amounts collected in the form of taxation, it appears that the national taxes have grown in the period above tabulated from 1,951,525 yen to 15,233,673 yen, an increase of eight times; while the ward taxes have grown from 94,243 yen to 1,112,296 yen, or 12 times.

Saturday, September 12.

The Jiji Shimpō has reached its 17th leading article of assault upon the Tokyo Railway Company and this is not the last. Our respected contemporary must have profound faith in the inexhaustible character of its readers' patience, and the writer of this interminable series of articles, which are not yet ended by any means, must be inspired by a sentiment of extraordinary resolution. He has fully persuaded himself that amongst all the corrupt companies of the day, the Tokyo Railway Company is the most corrupt, and he roundly denounces the idea of allowing an increase of fares without due conditions.

The Nippon, which has always been an opponent of the Tokyo Railway, writes now in the sense that although an increase of fares may be necessary, it should not be allowed while the present directors are in office. Its contention is that these directors are responsible for having compiled accounts which led the Tokyo Municipality to bid for the Railway, and that after such an escapade, the directors should be put out of office before any question of increased fares is considered. There is some reason in our contemporary's argument, but its final import is to represent the whole of the Tokyo Municipality as tarred with the brush of corruption. It was from the Municipality that the offer to buy the lines came in 1907 as well as in 1906, and when a neighbour comes and seeks to buy one's property, that one should endeavour to obtain the best price possible is a common business proposition. If there is really reason to suspect so much corruption and mismanagement on the part of the present directorate, why not appoint a committee of prominent business men to scrutinize the Company's affairs. Nothing is more noticeable than the fact that these assailants of the Railway Company have not in one single instance produced concrete and conclusive evidence of the truth of even one of their charges, and have always been careful to couch those charges in the most general terms.

The Korean members of the Establishment Committee of the Eastern Development Society arrived in Tokyo on the 12th inst. and will have a clear period of 8 days for sight-seeing, as the first meeting of the Committee is not to take place until the 21st. It is expected that the shares will be placed upon the market at the end of October or beginning of November. The names of the Japanese members of Committee will probably be announced on the 15th inst.

At their general meeting in Osaka on the 8th inst. the cotton spinners considered and virtually adopted a project introduced by Mr. Taniguchi Fusazo for encouraging the export of cotton yarns. We gather from the Shogyō Shimpō that the project is as follows:—By stopping night work, which is equivalent to reducing the number of spindles by 27 per cent., the total production of cotton in Japan will be 800,000 bales. On each bale it is proposed to put up a sum of 2 yen, thus obtaining a total of 1,600,000 yen. This money will be devoted to cheapening exported yarns by 5 yen a bale and thus enabling them to compete with Indian yarns in the Chinese market. The assistance of the Government will be sought to avert the danger of re-importations. This appears like taking money out of one pocket in order to put it into the other, but probably the programme is to raise the price for the domestic consumer. For the purpose of carrying out this project the spinners propose to form an export trust with all the companies as members. A final decision on these points will be taken at a general meeting on the 22nd or 23rd inst.

The foreign trade for the first 10 days of this month showed exports totalling 8,948,000 yen and imports totalling 9,879,000 yen, the excess of imports thus being 930,000 yen. This means that the aggregate imports from the beginning of the year have amounted to 331,115,000 yen, being a decrease of 20,464,000 yen as compared with the corresponding period of last year; while exports have totalled 246,516,000 yen being a decrease of 42,766,000 yen. The total excess of imports for the year thus far is 84,599,000 yen.

Sunday, September 13.

It is stated that the Government has decided to pay over something like 250 million yen worth of bonds during the course of next year on account of the nationalization of the railways. The figures are given as follow:—

Hokkaido Tankō Tetsudō.....	30,997,100
Kōbu .....	14,599,550
Nippon .....	142,523,532
Sanyō .....	76,639,200
Nishinari .....	1,847,900
Sanyetsu .....	?

The forecast is that this operation, if effected at an opportune time, will not impair the market price of the State's securities, but should there be any signs of such a result, the 50 millions set apart for the Sinking Fund will be utilized to check the depreciation.

There is a movement on foot to effect a coöperative arrangement between the various steamship companies engaged in the carrying trade on the Pacific Ocean in consequence of the action taken by the American railroads. At present, however, things do not look very favourable for effective combination. Tokyo journals have a good deal to say on this subject but we question the correctness of their information.

Baron Matsuo, Governor of the Bank of Japan, is quoted as denying that there is any intention at present of lowering the Bank's rate of discount.

Monday, September 14.

Tokyo papers publish another item of intelligence about the English and Japanese Hydro-Electric Power Company. They say that its unsubscribed shares have now been reduced to 90,000, and that on the return of Mr. Kisli from London steps will be taken to invite public subscriptions for this residue.

The Asahi says that, whereas the Japanese steamers carrying goods to Europe obtained ample cargoes until quite recently, they have now begun to feel the effects of the bad times very severely, and their cargoes have fallen off by about one third.

Japanese emigration to Peru promises good results. Tokyo journals note that very favourable terms are given to the immigrants, one condition being that if they are incapacitated by sickness their employers have to supply them with food, and another that after four years' full service they will be entitled to have their passage money paid home to Japan.

Mr. Kawaguchi, an expert of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, is quoted as saying that, if the weather takes up during the next two or three days, the recent cold snap will not be found to have produced any serious effect upon the rice crop.

Tuesday, September 15.

Mr. Murakami, the head of the Insurance Bureau in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, is said to take the view that the action of the marine insurance companies in raising their rates and declining to take risks on old ships is more or less unavoidable. One effect of the War was that many more or less antiquated vessels came into the hands of Japanese owners, some having been purchased by private speculators, and others being prizes of war which were sold by the Government to the people. Not only are many of these ships scarcely seaworthy, but also competent sailors to man them have not been available in numbers proportionate to the increase of tonnage. It results that the yearly average of wrecks has risen to 25,000 tons, and as the winter season is now approaching, the insurance companies are not to be blamed if they protect themselves by increased rates and reasonable restrictions.

It is stated that although the release of the Miye Maru has been duly declared by the Vladivostok Tribunal, the schooner has suffered so severely at the hands of the Russian soldiers that she is unable to make the home voyage and is therefore lying idle at Petropavlovsk.

Mr. Takano Takanori, member of the House of Representatives and formerly a judge on the Formosa Bench, has been duly remanded for trial on a charge of fraud, after investigation by a preliminary tribunal. His offence, briefly stated, is that, having formed a company to exploit oil wells in Echigo, he purchased an oil field for 16,000 yen, 6,000 of which was paid in the form of a promissory note drawn on the Banzo Bank, of which he himself was the Manager. This document he subsequently recovered from its holder on the plea that it would not look well to discount a note signed by himself at a bank of which he was President. Thereafter the owner of the note failed altogether to obtain his money.

Wednesday, September 16.

Quite a sensation has been caused in connexion with the production of kerosene in Japan, and the shares of the Takarada Company have suddenly leaped up. It appears that since the 4th inst. two of this Company's wells have been discharging large quantities of oil at regular intervals of time, one well giving 200 koku per diem and the other 150 koku. The oil is exceptionally pure, fully 80 per cent. being fine, whereas hitherto the best percentage in Japan has been 60. This means an addition of some 85,000 yen monthly to the income of the Company. A very interesting point connected with the event is that this sudden increase of productiveness has resulted from sinking the wells to the third stratum, a depth of over 300 feet, and it seems to be thus established that if this stratum be tapped, Japanese wells will yield a practically unlimited supply. At present the import of oil into Japan amounts to 16 or 17 million yen, and Echigo's production has represented about 8 millions, but there is now talk of being able to dispense altogether with foreign oil in the course of two or three years.

The Toyo Kisen Kaisha will hold its semi-annual meeting on the 20th inst. The results of the half year's working have not been satisfactory. The Company's 10,000-ton ships plying on the Pacific have not as a rule obtained six or seven hundred tons of cargo, and had it not been for considerable shipments of kerosene oil the outcome would have been still worse. The Tenyo Maru has begun her career most successfully, but as her first trip was not made until June, she scarcely affects the accounts at all. The Company is nevertheless able to place 10,000 yen to its reserves and to pay a dividend at the rate of five per cent on its ordinary shares, after paying 12 per cent on its preference shares. That is not such a bad showing, yet the Company's shares (50 yen paid up) are now quoted at 25 yen in the open market.

Thursday, September 17.

The Nippon quotes Mr. Kondo Rempei as saying with all reserve that if the Government withdraws its subsidies from the European, Seattle and San Francisco services, those lines will have to be abandoned, and the Japanese flag will no longer be seen in waters where it now floats in the sequel of long years of effort. Some people have said that, were these services abandoned by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, they would be taken up by the Osaka Shosen Kaisha. But the Osaka Shosen Kaisha can not afford to run steamers at a loss, any more than other companies can. It would be simply a surrender of the lines to foreign flags, or at any rate to such of them as receive the support of their governments.

This question of shipping subsidies is sure to come up in the next Diet, and the world will watch with much interest Japan's method of dealing with it. We venture to predict now that the camp of such foreign publicists as advocate the withdrawal of the subsidies will consist for the most part of men whose good will towards this country has been proved on many occasions to be a vanishing quantity.

The much talked-of project of building a harbour at Yokkaichi is said to have suffered a setback owing to the change of the Miye Prefect, which took place when the present Cabinet assumed office. The scheme would require an outlay of 2,600,000 yen, and five years would be needed for the work, but the new Prefect seems indisposed to submit the project to the local Assembly.

The tendency to form trusts seems to be growing. It began with the sugar companies, went on with the spinings, and is now said to have extended to three of the flour companies, namely, the To-Wa, the Teikoku and the Nisshin. It will be observed that the Nippon Company is not included, and it is not to be understood that the project has yet matured.

The Shogyo Shimpō says that it has now been definitely decided to sell the Government's timber yards, and that the preliminary investigations are in progress. These yards were established originally for the purpose of furnishing models to the people, but they now stand in the position of competing injuriously with private enterprises of a similar nature.

At a meeting of the Nihon Eiyeki Kyokai (Japan Trade Association) held on the 16th inst., Baron Motono made a short but interesting speech. He said that he had carried back with him from Russia a most pleasant impression as to the great change which has come in the attitude of the Russian people towards Japan; a change evidenced by the conclusion of the new Commercial Treaty. The Treaty, however, was merely a matter of words. To make it a reality was a task devolving upon the members of this association. It had often been remarked to him in Europe that although Japan has gained a high place in the comity of nations on account of her civilization and her military prowess, it is strange that transactions can not be conducted with her merchants on a basis of credit. He would have liked to contradict this, but he could not honestly do so, and he hoped earnestly that the members of the Trade Association would furnish models in this matter.

The election of the Mayor of Tokyo is fixed for the 22nd inst., but whether the successful candidate will be Mr. Ozaki or Baron Senge remains to be seen.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

The Mainichi Dempo has a paragraph which, being confirmed by the Japan Times, may probably be taken as authentic, and if so, is of great importance. Its gist is that Count Komura recognises the importance of arriving at a speedy settlement with regard to the various questions outstanding between China and Japan. His Excellency therefore proposes that these questions be taken up en bloc and disposed of with all possible expedition. The Chinese Government, our contemporary goes on to say, entertains a similar view and has proposed that special commissioners be appointed. But Count Komura does not think this necessary. He is prepared, so far as concerns Japan, to leave matters in the hands of the new Representative, Mr. Iijun. With regard to questions which present special difficulties—we presume that Chientao is here alluded to and perhaps the Fakumen Railway—Count Komura's idea is that they should be submitted to an arbitral tribunal.

There can be no doubt that the above policy would meet with the hearty approval of all nations and would greatly conduce to the interest of Japan.

SHOOTING COMPETITION AT OMORI.

On Sept. 13th, a shooting competition between Tokyo and Yokohama teams was held at Omori. The first event in the programme was the shooting of flying birds and the second the championship competition. The programme was successfully carried out, in which Messrs. T. Kojima, T. Nishimura, T. Okochi, K. Otsuka, and K. Ijūin of the Tokyo party and Messrs. S. Yano, Drummond, Eytan, and K. Shiino of Yokohama were the best shots on the occasion. Tokyo had 233 points while the Yokohama team had 214.

It may be mentioned that in April, 1900, in the first competition held between the two parties the Yokohama team was successful and obtained the champion flag. The second meeting was held on May 5th, 1903, when Yokohama was again successful. In October of the same year, when a further meeting was held at Tsurumi, the competition ended in favour of the Tokyo team. The present meeting was the fourth.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Saturday, September 12.

The Premier's declaration of financial policy was expected to have a good effect on the market, but Friday's prices were nearly all on the downward grade. Rumours of approaching centres of depression and of a small excess of imports during the first 10 days of the month seemed to have much more effect than a solid adjustment of the national finances. The bears also circulated a report that the Premier absented himself from the Bankers' meeting, not because of illness but because he wished to avoid inconvenient questions. Such things would be insignificant if any confidence whatever existed, but they are potent in the existing state of nervousness. There was a slight tendency towards improvement in the afternoon session, but on the whole things look as though the downward grade is to be continued.

Monday, September 14.

The weather on the 12th instant gave a heavy blow to the Stock Exchange. People conceived the idea that the much talked-of rice harvest would be a failure after all, and the day was one of general gloom with prices falling all round. The shares of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha suffered a veritable debacle, dropping as much as 380 points. This was due to the discouraging outlook of the Trans-Pacific line, and to a discovery made by the bears that the Toyo's scrip ruled disproportionately high. The only shares that escaped with comparatively little damage were those of the Stock Exchange. The weather is expected to clear soon, but some days must pass before the market recovers from the effects of the past week.

Tuesday, September 15.

The 14th instant was an active day on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. The weather having cleared, the temperature having risen and there being no further occasion for uneasiness about the rice crop, all shares appreciated in a more or less marked degree, those of the two great shipping companies alone excepted. There is much pessimism at present about the outlook of the maritime transport business, and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha's shares recovered only 0.05 of the 380 points lost on the 12th inst. Failing some special material for bear operations the market should at any rate be free from renewed collapses.

Wednesday, September 16.

There was a tendency to general appreciation on the 15th instant, but profit-taking sales exercised a depressing effect, and prices were little more than maintained. The shares of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha were the object of bear operations. Rumours were set on foot that the great Company's subsidies will be reduced in the next Budget, and that its dividends will have to be lowered. Thus the shares were forced down more than one point.

Thursday, September 17.

Apprehensions about the weather again affected the market injuriously on Wednesday. News was received that a centre of depression had developed on the south of Kyushu, and that its depth was 752 mill. There seems to be no probability of escape this time, and as no one can test what effect may be produced on the rice-crop, buyers naturally held their hand. Until this question of the crop is definitely disposed of, the market is likely to remain depressed.

Friday, September 18.

The return of fine weather and a marked fall in the quotation for rice—proving that a fine harvest may now be regarded as assured—affected the Stock Market favourably on Thursday, and nearly all shares rose. The Nippon Yusen Kaisha re-acted from its recent collapse, and the Toyo Kisen Kaisha followed suit on a lower scale. We append the quotations for November delivery:

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The Yokohama-Hachioji Railway, which was opened to traffic yesterday, ought, one imagines, to have been built long ago. It opens up the silk districts of Koshu and Shinshu, which are perhaps the most important in Japan. Goods from these regions for Yokohama, which is the main port of shipment, have hitherto had to be carried round by the Shinjuku suburb of Tokyo, and thus had to make a journey of 27 miles, whereas now they will be carried by a direct railway, and thus the distance will be reduced to 14 miles. An extension of this new line is also projected from Hachioji to Omama, and thus the silk-producing districts of Koshu, Shinshu, Yashu, and Joshu will all be brought into direct communication with Yokohama, instead of having to travel round, some by the lines northward of Tokyo, and others by its western suburb. The Hachioji road may justly be called a line of silk.

In 1898 the Government of the day, which happened to be a Katsura Cabinet, submitted to the Diet a scheme which obtained the latter's approval for establishing a number of forestry stations throughout the Empire. This measure was said to be necessitated by the indiscriminate felling of timber which had taken place in the past. Something like 40 of these stations were established, and they seem to have been managed successfully at first if we may judge by their returns of revenues and expenditures. Subsequently, however, they became a source of loss to the Treasury and the question is now under consideration whether it would not be wiser to transfer them to private hands. Nothing seems to have yet been decided, but the opportunity is seized by certain Tokyo journals to represent this as an official job intended to put money into the pockets of certain prominent business men, and thus to win their political support. All State enterprises afford food for rumours of that sort, which is one of the reasons against official incursions into the realm of commerce and industry.

It appears that eleven men altogether have been arrested in connexion with the forgery of rouble notes in Nagasaki. Five of them are Russians, five Japanese and one Chinese. There are rumours that some Russian officers on the active list are connected with the fraud. The gang entrusted the duty of preparing the plate to Mr. Watanabe, a well known engraver of Soya, but it does not appear that he has been arrested, though the printers in Nagasaki are now lying in prison. The imitation is said to be so perfect that the notes can scarcely be distinguished from genuine paper. The part taken by the Chinese, who is under arrest, was to put the notes into circulation at Chefoo, and he seems to have been very successful. A thousand notes of 10 roubles denomination were seized at the printer's establishment in Nagasaki, but it is thought that about 100,000 roubles' worth have been successfully put into circulation at Harbin.

At a meeting of the Tokyo City Assembly held on the 12th inst., two questions were debated. One created some commotion. It was in effect a vote of censure upon the Aldermen's Council for lodging a part of the Municipal funds in a bank which did not satisfy the qualifications prescribed formerly by the Council itself, namely, that the Bank must have been three years in existence. Attempts were made to amend this resolution or to delete it, but they failed and it ultimately passed the Assembly. The second question related to the Mayor. It was decided that Mr. Ozaki's resignation should be accepted, and that an election should be held to fill the office thus vacated. It remains to be seen whether Baron Senge will present himself as a candidate.

It is stated, on what authority we can not discern, that in addition to the new Railway Bureau which will have to be created under the system of independent railway finance, the Government will ask the Diet next session to endorse the organisation of a colonial department. The latter would have charge of all matters relating to Manchuria, Formosa, Korea and Saghalien. Its Minister would be independent of Cabinet changes so as to avoid all breaks in the continuity of the department's policy. The Hochi Shimbun, which publishes this rumour, indicates Baron Goto as the first holder of the new portfolio.

Our benign contemporary the Japan Advertiser, referring in its issue of the 10th inst. to a recently deceased gentleman, says "He never married, but was sincerely esteemed..." The implied suggestion that it is hard for the unmarried man to enter into the kingdom of esteem is a little severe on local bachelors. How the men in wedlock must rejoice at this paternal patting on the back! Surely our contemporary may justly be suspected of some ulterior design, such as encouraging the local birth-rate (possibly in the interest of the school to come) or winning benedictions to its subscription-lists. Yet perhaps, after all, it was a case of unconscious humour.

On the 11th inst. there were launched by English builders two warships which are said to be the most powerful in the world; so powerful indeed that they mark an epoch in naval construction. One is the British ship St. Vincent, and the other a vessel built to the order of the Brazilian Government. No doubt a good deal of conjecture will be excited by this excursion of the Brazilian Government, but for our own part we fail to see why a Power, whatever its international status, should not have the best ships procurable if it has any at all.

San Francisco telegraphs that the number of Japanese who entered the United States during the year ended June 30th, 1908, was 9,600, which is only one-third of the total recorded in the preceding year. These figures are said to have caused much satisfaction in Washington, as they show that Japan is heartily coöperating with the American Government to accomplish the end that the latter has in view, namely, the restriction of undesirable immigration without recourse to vexatious legislation.

Mr. Kato Takaaki proceeded to the Palace on the 12th inst., and was duly nominated by the Emperor to take charge of the Embassy in London. Nothing is yet stated as to the probable date of his Excellency's departure.

An official of the Formosa Government is quoted by the Asahi Shimbun as making some interesting remarks upon the opium question, with special reference to the Conference which is to be held in Shanghai at the beginning of next year by representatives of the United States, Japan, China and Great Britain. He thinks that the Conference will have to decide between the immediate and the gradual processes, and he affirms that Japan's experience is entirely in favour of the latter. She gave a great deal of thought to the question and investigated it very closely at the time of taking over Formosa, and the conclusion she reached was that precipitate measures in such a case are certain to produce evils scarcely less than those which it is desired to eradicate. She therefore adopted the gradual method, and it may be said to have been eminently successful in Formosa, for whereas there were 160,000 habitual smokers in the Island at the outset, there are now only 120,000, and the number is steadily diminishing. It may be confidently predicted therefore that the Japanese delegate to the Conference will advocate the gradual process, in spite of the fact that the Chinese Government seems bent upon heroic measures.

The Japanese military authorities are said to be busily discussing a problem which has already received much thought in Europe, namely, the possibility of utilising motor cars as part of an army's equipment. The system which seems likely to find favour in Europe is analogous to that pursued by several States with regard to military marine transports. That is to say, the private owners of certain motor cars would receive a subsidy on condition that the cars were kept in good order, and were always available when required for campaigning purposes. It is thought doubtful whether motors could be of much service in Japan for purposes of war, the country being so hilly, but on the other hand if Japan has to fight any battles, their scene is not likely to be on these islands.

It may be mentioned here that the Japanese artillery have achieved a feat which is said to have been attempted several times previously without success, namely the crossing of the Ashigara Pass at Hakone with 36 guns.

Our amiable and benign contemporary the Japan Advertiser appears to have developed of late a quite remarkable turn of epidemic tenderness. This is possibly a little characteristic of its new régime, and apparently outweighs the sense of gratitude one might venture to hope for when "in lighter vein" we pointed out "a small mistake" which recently appeared in its unique columns. If it was "a palpable typographical error," the awful indignation of our contemporary is as palpably out of place. Possibly this fact has suggested itself to its heated imagination, for it leaves the point to wax discursive on questions of 'taste.' The matter over which the "small mistake" was made is neither here nor there. The question of 'taste' is neither here nor there. The error was linguistic: we dealt with it as such, and to our humble mind it did not appear to be altogether devoid of humour. We have frequently observed that it is the fashion among individuals of a certain type when palpably hit to take refuge in tall talk on the subject of taste. Who is to pose as the judge of that very wide question? The Japan Advertiser? Its poet?

However, we observe elsewhere in its latest issue that our tender contemporary "is going to be better" in future. Accepting that as evidence of true contrition, veiled only for the moment by the tingslings of super-sensitiveness, we patiently await that happy time.

We regret very much to have to state that Mrs. Okuma, wife of Count Okuma's adopted son, is dangerously ill. She was attacked some time ago by typhoid fever, which is complicated by lung trouble. Her state was slightly better yesterday (Wednesday), but much uneasiness is still felt.

"China has been seriously antagonized by Japan's unfriendly attitude which had its culmination in the Tatsu Maru affair. The independent foreign press warned the country of the inevitable effects of its high-handed policy. It was the same to some extent with the Kanto (Chientao), the Fushun Colliery, the Faku-men Railway, the Manchurian discrimination, etc."

The above is quoted from the Japan Gazette. It will be observed that according to that journal Japan was wrong in the Tatsu Maru affair; in the Chientao affair; in the Fushun-Colliery affair, in the Faku-men-Railway affair; in the Manchurian-discrimination affair; and, lest the list should not be sufficiently comprehensive, our contemporary adds "in etc." In short, Japan has been wrong in every international question with which she has been concerned during the past three years. The amusing point is that the passage we have quoted finds an innocent place in an article vehemently directed to proving that the Japan Gazette is Japan's very good friend, and that all who deny the fact are conscience-less romancers. Is it not true that if some folks be given rope enough they are apt to do themselves a mischief?

We learn from the Rev. H. S. Jefferys that, in order to help the submerged tenth to understand and be in a position to welcome the United States blue-jackets, so many of whom will soon visit these shores, two night-schools have been started where free instruction is given to steady students. One is at No. 59, Nichome, Mannen-cho, Shiba, on Wednesdays, and the other at No. 12, Suga-cho, Yotsuya, on Fridays.

Japanese newspapers state that the British Consul-General in Seoul has been recalled. That is a mistake. Mr. Cockburn applied last year for leave to return to England, and he sometime ago received permission to return so soon as his duties permitted.

THE BOOKSHELF.

The Flight of An Arrow, and other stories, by the Author of "Lui Shing." KELLY and WALSH, LTD., Yokohama, Hongkong, etc.

SOME of these stories will be fully understood only by those who have read the author's previous book "Lui Shing," for Lui Shing has fair prominence in the present publication. There is variety of interest and quite an assortment of scene. The first sketch is of what may be called seamy life in Hongkong—chiefly about a woman who plays the piano in a grogshop; the second deals with India, London being included by means of correspondence; other sketches bring in Japan,—Yokohama, Nikko, etc.—dreams and the payment of Karmic debts and so forth. The contents of the volume will be found interesting, for there is plenty of incident and the stories are well told.

The International (August, Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, London) is a comprehensive, carefully and thoughtfully prepared review of the world's progress during the month before its publication. The articles in the present issue include one by the editor, Dr. Rodolphe Broda, on "The Technical Age" in which he comes to the conclusion that England, slowly though it may be and after some long period of time is bound to recede into the second rank among industrial nations; that in France, with her high wages and stationary population that tendency is already in operation and her future must lie in devotion to spheres of activity—art and intellect—which demand not large numbers of workmen but individual talent; that Germany's rapidly increasing population, rich coal and iron deposits, extensive overseas markets, which are constantly being enlarged owing to the political strength of the Empire, all of which afford extremely favourable chances for the indefinite expansion of German industry give her the prospect of taking England's place; while the United States, compared as a whole with the individual States of Europe (which is necessary in view of the political division of the latter) will naturally have every chance in their favour of reaching the top among the industrial world Powers. Mr. J. H. Ledebor has a short but convincing article on the present and future of aerial navigation, and the progress of polar exploration is dealt with by Dr. R. Hennig; Mr. Carl S. Vrooman writes of railroad regulation in America; the editor has a note on the Brussels Sugar Conference; and there are other papers and articles of no less importance.

A PICTURE IN JAPAN.

NI-KO.

Around the overhanging eaves
Of village roofs, on April days,
The bloom of peach and cherry weaves
A mist of white, a coral haze.
You hear along the narrow street
The splash of churning water-mills,
The click of wooden-sandalled feet,
The rush of overflowing rills.
Above the street the sunlight fades
To dusk, where spectral silence broods
In avenues and dim arcades
And stairways of sepulchral woods.
And up the paths a pilgrim throng
Moves silently in winding files,
While tremors of a ghostly gong
Go echoing down the forest aisles.
By mystic lamp and sacred fount,
And demons grasping golden rods,
A thousand granite steps they mount
To shrines of their vermillion gods.

in the Spectator.

TRADE-MARK PROTEST.

Mr. Sukune, Chief Examiner of the Patent Bureau, has given a decision on a protest instituted by Messrs. Jardine Matheson and Co., Yokohama. It appears, according to the Official Gazette, that the firm applied to the bureau to register a trade-mark showing a dragon and the Sun. The authorities rejected the application on the ground that the trade-mark resembled that of No. 5786, already registered. The applicants contended that the designs of the marks are quite different, and asked the Chief Examiner to re-examine their mark. The protest was dismissed in accordance with the 4th clause of Art 2 of the Trade-mark Law.

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

THE question of the parliamentary enfranchisement of women raises—hardly less for this than for generations yet unborn—the most far-reaching and momentous issues, political and racial. Whether or not, as far as Britain is concerned, it ever enters the realm of things accomplished, it is rapidly assuming bulk as one of the questions of the hour. Hitherto, indeed, it has been little more than a means of affording to the casual on-looker a large measure of good-humoured amusement. The tactics adopted by the militant section of those who advocate the immediate realization of this vast project have even tended to bring it to the level of disparagement. The spectacle of misguided females, no matter to what class of society they belong, indulging frantically in actions heretofore regarded as peculiarly within the domain of the hooligan—window-breaking, bell-ringing and the like—is apt to inspire not merely pity, but a less tender sentiment held to be akin thereto.

However, this quite ineffectual procedure of noise and violence may at length be said to be discredited, and to have given place, in part at any rate, to methods more legitimate, more reputable, and better calculated to court the serious consideration of mankind. The promoters of 'Votes for Women' may fairly claim to have won over to their way of thinking a large and influential section of British public opinion.

No question of vital importance was ever decided by one party only. Opposition has always risen, and that opposition, if neither conciliated nor defeated, triumphs in the end, and the question enters the limbo of the dead past.

In true accordance with this characteristic of the political world there has come into being an organization uncompromisingly opposed to the Female Suffrage movement. Designating itself "the Women's National Anti-Suffrage League," this organization is fast gathering into its ranks what many will consider the wiser women of Britain. The new League has shown its wisdom in more ways than one. That it may not be decried as mere man-made opposition, all actual direction of its operations is given into the hands of women, under the presidency of LADY JERSEY. The watchword—one might almost say, war-cry—of this Anti-Suffrage League strikes the right note of challenge when it says "the women's suffrage movement can be defeated—it must be defeated, and by women themselves." An opening manifesto issued by the League breathes prudent counsel from first to last. The skilful marshalling of its arguments is believed to be the work of that distinguished woman, Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, one of the leading spirits of the new movement. While refraining from reproducing the document in full, we may remark that it is based upon three fundamental facts and consequences.

To begin with, there is the obvious and unanswerable fact that women are not men.

Both in the social as in the physical world their functions are distinct, and from natural causes must ever remain so. "The misguided and anarchical members of the sex who are agitating for this 'reform,' can not and will not recognize" this underlying truth. To put political power into the hands of what we would fain continue to regard as the gentler sex is to be confronted with the possibility of a direct conflict between the two sexes in any matter of prime political importance—a possibility the consequences of which no one can measure, for the British house, in very truth, would be divided against itself.

Then follows the argument of domestic dislocation and mischief to the race. Who will deny that the true sphere of woman is the home? Who will deny that the chief duty and glory of womanhood lies in the maintenance of the national life? What is to happen to the home, and what to the nation, when women, in lieu of these prime and elemental duties, are wrangling in the political arena? For England, faced as she is with the solemn, ruin-boding fact of a falling birth-rate, such a policy spells suicidal madness.

Finally, there is the argument of physical disability. On physical force, in the last resort, rests the government of the nations of the world, whether by that force be meant naval and military power, finance, or the great mining, constructive and shipping industries, which involve vast interests. All these unite to make social and political world-force. To man, by irrevocable dispensation of Nature, belongs the attribute of physical power, and it is therefore upon man that the government of the world must, in fine, devolve.

On the other hand, it may be argued, the question is no new one. The experiment has been made in various parts of the world. What are the teachings of history? Has experience no light to shed upon the problem?

It is in the answer to this query that the opponents of the Female Suffrage movement find the most cogent of their appeals to reason. The case of the United States of America is quoted. There women have enjoyed this precious boon of the franchise for more than a generation. There the advocates of female suffrage have had a fair chance, the movement a generous trial. The result is that, after a probationary space of forty years, the movement is practically dead. Like a child with a new toy, la belle Américaine has wearied of the coveted privilege, has discarded what her British sister is now fighting tooth and nail to win. Who shall say she is wrong?

After all, life is in the main a conflict. From the straining of the athlete to the struggle for daily bread, from the ruling of nations to the final arbitrament of arms, all is strife. Is it not well that man can turn from this strenuous phase of existence to the still waters of domestic peace and feminine tenderness? Is it well for the world that woman, who is born for what is 'gentle, tranquil and true,' should enter the field of conflict, and strive on even terms with men? Is this the true sphere of womanhood? Would it really make for the good of the world, for the betterment of mankind, for domestic happiness, for the highest interests of the family and the nation? The answer of calm reflection, of sturdy common sense, of experience, of foresight is bound to be a thousand times—No.

COOPERATIVE ENTERPRISES IN JAPAN.

THE impression conveyed by a leading article in the Fiji Shimpo is that quite a number of coöperative enterprises planned by Japanese and foreigners have failed. We have not heard of them. Not more than one or two have actually proved abortive. One, with which all are familiar, owed its failure to a special cause which could scarcely have been foreseen, and another was wrecked by altogether abnormal happenings. Apart from the mere question of numbers, however, we fully endorse our Tokyo contemporary's criticism that foreigners are apt to fall into the hands of unscrupulous Japanese. Such incidents have undoubtedly happened, though they have not, perhaps, been accompanied by very disastrous results. The trouble of becoming associated with Japanese of an inferior class is not so much what may ensue in the matter of actual chicanery as that the enterprise is at once "turned down" by respectable Japanese, and all hope of smooth and successful relations may then be abandoned. Reputation is just as important in this country as in the West: more important indeed, for the number of those recognised as solid men of affairs in Japan is comparatively small, and all outsiders are looked at askance. On the other hand, a moderate measure of common care is alone necessary to avoid the pitfall of evil association, and if relations are established with the right kind of people, there is ample ground for confidence. It does not follow, however, that the actual coöperative working of an enterprise is smooth. There the language question presents a great obstacle. Accounts, minutes of proceedings and so on may be translated with ease, but when it comes to holding a directors' meeting, for example, where some of the members know no Japanese, a considerable exercise of patience and tact is needed. That, however, is not peculiar to Japan: it would be true anywhere. The only difference is that foreigners are inclined to essay feats in Japan which they would scarcely try elsewhere. One can hardly imagine a business combination between Frenchmen and Englishmen where some of the managers were ignorant of the others' language. There is one other difficulty, and we should be pleased to have the Fiji Shimpo's opinion about it. It is that foreign capitalists are not likely to be greatly tempted by a country where the methods and morals of business enterprises are subject to such unrestricted and irresponsible journalistic attack as is the case in Japan. Take, for example, the campaign now conducted by the Fiji Shimpō itself against the Tokyo Railway Company. We have read every one of the 19 articles which form the indictment thus far, and the impression they have produced on us is one of vindictive persecution. Or take the onslaught recently perpetrated by the Asahi Shimbun upon the Hydro-Electric Power Company. Such assaults are not committed on serious commercial and industrial undertakings by leading journals in Western countries. The Asahi's article suggested that British and American engineering experts are quite incompetent, and that British capitalists, whatever be their standing, are ready to invest in rash and immature schemes; and the Fiji's interminable series of onslaughts must be read as implying either that a terribly low standard of morality exists in Tokyo business circles, and that Tokyo men of affairs are singularly indifferent to their own interests, or that its columns have been opened to a writer more sensational than scrupulous. Whatever be the true explanation, we would seriously ask our two great contemporaries whether the conditions indicated by their writing are calculated to attract foreign investors to Japan. Are European or American capitalists likely to be tempted by a country where the privacy of business is liable to invasion by irresponsible scribblers, and where the credit of a mercantile or manufacturing company is exposed to indiscriminate assaults by important newspapers? We say nothing of the minor representatives of the Fourth Estate in Japan. Their excursions into the region of slander, shameless as they are, must be condoned so long as their great confreres set a bad example. Can any one point to a single leading English journal during the past twenty years which has allowed itself to deal fast and loose with commercial and manufacturing reputations, and to misrepresent the condition of business concerns after the fashion not uncommon in Japan? These are questions which seem to deserve a little thought when coöperative enterprises come upon the tapis.

ARMAMENTS AND RESPONSIBILITY.

WHILE the attention of the World, and particularly of the Far Eastern World, has been drawn to the display of naval force made by the Battleship Fleet starting from port to port in the Southern Pacific, it is as well to be reminded that the greatest concentration of naval power which has yet been seen remains unabated in the North Sea. On the low shores of that shallow basin about the sea-frontiers of the three chief naval powers, whose combined fleets comprise between them some 150 battleships. But a few years ago, the Mediterranean was regarded as the naval theatre of the European Concert, and British statesmen were at some pains to maintain in those waters their principal fleet, besides two naval bases of the first-class. Now the scene is changed. The naval centre of gravity has shifted to the North.

If one were to ask our amiable German contemporary the Japan Herald the reason of this remarkable change in the naval situation, one would doubtless be met by childlike and intocent protestations of ignorance. Nothing to do with Germany, of course. It has been the fashion of late among German apologists and semi-official organs to cry "Peace! peace!" while the battleship programme is increased and increased again, and the War-Lord of Europe himself takes the gilt off the gingerbread of his pacific utterances by declaring his fixed resolve "to maintain and develop the forces and interests of his country without fear or favour." The following is our innocent contemporary's contribution to the German game of dust-throwing (the italics are ours):

"The building of an additional warship by either one of these Powers (Germany and Great Britain) has evoked a feeling of jealousy among a section of the other nation. . . . Germany, with a comparatively small naval force and a growing mercantile marine, may claim that an increased navy is necessary if she is to maintain her commercial position among great Powers. . . . That she even pretends to become a great Naval Power we do not believe, while the talk of outrivalling Great Britain in this direction is too absurd to need serious consideration."

"An additional warship"! Note the insinuating innocence of our contemporary, and this while the German revised programme provides for the laying down, for a number of years to come, of from four to five or six Dreadnoughts yearly. "A comparatively small naval force"! What unsurpassed humility! Alas! in an evil moment, a little earlier in the same article, our humble contemporary quoted certain authoritative figures as to comparative naval strength, so that its humility can be answered out of its own mouth. Here are the figures:—

(THE DIKE PARLIAMENTARY RETURN,
MARCH 31ST 1908.)

Great Britain, battleships built and building .....	67
Germany .....	43
France .....	38
United States .....	30
Italy and Japan, each .....	19
Russia .....	15

Our contemporary cannot refrain from a sentiment of smug satisfaction as it notes that "Germany takes second place in the list." So much for the "comparatively small naval force." It is comparatively small only when put beside that of one certain Power: side by side with all the rest it is comparatively big.

In the race for naval supremacy, then, Germany has outstripped all Powers but one. Not satisfied with this, our German apologist suggests that Germany's growing mercantile marine needs protection. Against whom? Who is meditating a descent upon that flourishing concern? Germany stands confessed the second naval power. She and her mercantile marine are therefore safe from attack from all quarters save one. Wherefore the need for the increased navy which she may claim as necessary for the maintenance of her commercial position? Here comes the innuendo of our guileless contemporary, after the turn of dust-throwing. He would have you believe, gentle reader, that there is a Power which is ever threatening, imminently threatening. Gory Great Britain, he would have you understand, covets that growing mercantile marine, the few debt-bound dependencies that hang millstone-like about the neck of Pan-German hegemony. England, in short, (such is the idea he would have you assimilate) waits only an opportunity to spring at the throat of the Fatherland.

But much dust throwing hath made him blind. The ordinary man would ask—though of course it would not occur to our inoffensive contemporary—if Great Britain was really possessed with these bloodthirsty intentions, why did she not carry them out years ago, when there was no such thing as a German High-Seas Fleet, or an 'Admiral of the North Sea'? Why not make short work of it now, while the two navies are still divided by a considerable interval of strength?

How absurd it would all seem, even to our childlike contemporary, if he could but get that self-introduced beam of British hostility out of his eye! The growth of German maritime ambition and the consequent rise of German naval power have been the cardinal facts to be taken into consideration, not alone by British, but by European, naval policy for the last decade. This mad idea of rivalry with Britain has come from the same source, and the fruits of it are the enormous expenditure on naval armaments, which our good contemporary professes to deplore.

For England, by reason of her insular position, her dependence on open sea-communication for the import of raw materials and even for the food of her people, a navy of indisputable supremacy is necessary to her very existence. For Germany, a continental Power defended by the finest of modern armies, such a navy would be a luxury, a needless gratification of ambition. Any thinking man will admit that a British Navy, maintained at the only safe level of the Germany-and-another-Power standard, is the surest guarantee of the World's peace.

For these fundamental causes, for many years past, and in all quarters save German Anglo-phobe circles, the British navy has come to be recognized as essentially an instrument of defence, a preserver of the peace. British naval policy for the past half-century has been simply one of reply. When other Powers have displayed extraordinary naval activity, the British Admiralty have felt bound to lay down just so many ships as would prevent the endangerment of the immense interests entrusted to their keeping. That policy will still be adhered to, regardless of the cost, as recent telegrams from London have indicated.

THE SECRET CAUSES OF THE WAR WITH JAPAN.

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF THE KUROPATKIN MANUSCRIPT.

The exact causes of the great Russo-Japanese War have never been made plain. Apparently the two nations were brought into the conflict by the aggressions of Russia; but what lay back of these aggressions has never yet been shown. Now, four years after the time, the secret history of the events leading up to the war is revealed by the first publication, in the September number of McClure's Magazine, of the Memoirs of General Kuropatkin, Russia's Minister of War and Commander-in-chief, which were suppressed by the Russian Government. The revelations of this document show a war more barbaric and mediaeval in its origin than could have been imagined. It was not, primarily, a war of national antagonism; it was a war of personal greed. A million men were killed, wounded or disabled; hundreds of millions of money were lost to protect the speculation of highly placed personages in a timber company in Korea.

That the Yalu timber concessions had a considerable part in the opening of hostilities between Russia and Japan has been known; but the influences working through this company have not been seen. In 1898 a Russian promoter named Briner secured timber rights of fabulous value from the Korean Government; in 1902 these came into the hands of Alexander Mikhailovich Bezobrazoff, a speculator and promoter with high connection in St. Petersburg. From that time on, Bezobrazoff—holding a minor office of a State councillor—became a great and mysterious power back of the Throne of Russia. Imperial ministers were openly charged with being afraid of him. The reason for this was that this promoter was backed by the investments of the funds of the Czar of Russia and the whole royal family. It was this promoter whose acts dragged Russia against her will into war with Japan.

Russia had made two great mistakes, Kuropatkin shows: The first, of building a railroad across the foreign territory of Manchuria; the second, in holding and building Port Arthur and Dalny. In the spring of 1902, Russia agreed to China to evacuate the territory of Manchuria within a year. Bezobrazoff fought this evacuation with all his power. "Mukden had already been abandoned," says Kuropatkin, "when suddenly everything stopped." The reason of this sudden change in policy is not far to seek. Manchuria was not evacuated because of the influence of Bezobrazoff and Company.

"One incredible scheme of Bezobrazoff followed another," says Kuropatkin; "and in the summer of 1903, there was submitted to me (as Minister of War) a project of his which provided for the immediate concentration in Southern Manchuria of 70,000 men. Among the requests he made were to send into the Korean territory 600 soldiers in civilian dress; to organize for use in the same territory a force of 3,000 Khankhuzes (mounted Manchurian bandits)."

In the spring of 1903, three Russian ministers met in a special council to see what could be done to check the enterprises of this timber company, now become a national danger. Witte, Minister of Finance, Lamsdorff, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Kuropatkin, then Minister of War, protested unanimously to the Czar that Bezobrazoff's company must stop its aggressions; or there would be danger of war with Japan.

"It pleased his Imperial Majesty to say," writes Kuropatkin, "after he had listened to these expressions of opinion, that 'war was extremely undesirable.' The Company formed for the purpose of exploiting the timber on the River Yalu must be a strictly commercial organization, must admit foreigners who desired to purchase it, and must exclude all ranks of the army."

Kuropatkin was then sent by the Czar to Japan to learn the state of public opinion there.

Bezobrazoff and Co. kept on its aggressive practice through the summer of 1903—in spite of the public ruling of the Czar. Its chief promoter bore down ministerial opposition so far that Witte reported in May that he "was not in disagreement with him, so far as the essence of the matter was concerned." But Kuropatkin did not make any concession of this kind. He returned from Japan and reported to the Emperor in July—6 months before hostilities began:—"If we do not put an end to the uncertain state of affairs in Manchuria and to the adventurous activity of Bezobrazoff in Korea we must expect a rupture with Japan."

Meanwhile Bezobrazoff and his timber company were able to keep the armed forces of Russia, to which Japan violently objected, in Korea. The members of the timber company—many of them Russian army officers—were fire-eaters. "Acting State Councillor Bolesheff," says Kuropatkin, in a report to the Czar on June 24, "has a disposition quite as warlike as that of Bezobrazoff. If Admiral Alexeieff had not succeeded in intercepting a dispatch from Bolesheff with regard to 'catching all the Japanese,' 'punishing them publicly, and 'taking action with volleys' there would have been a bloody episode upon the Yalu before this time."

The opposition of Kuropatkin and the other ministers was not sufficient. Suddenly, during the summer of 1903, Admiral Alexeieff, who had been used by Bezobrazoff to his own advantage, was made Viceroy of the Far East by the Czar. Kuropatkin resigned as Minister of War, and was given a long leave of absence by the Czar. Witte was put out of the Ministry of Finance by being promoted. The whole government of the Far East was turned over to the sympathizers with Bezobrazoff. This organization headed straight for war. Japan protested angrily against their policy, Viceroy Alexeieff replied stiffly. "References were made," says Kuropatkin, "that offended Japanese pride, and the whole correspondence became strained and difficult as the result of the Admiral's unfamiliarity with diplomatic procedure and his lack of competent staff assistants." On February 6th, 1904, matters ended with the beginning of the war.

The secret history of the development of the extraordinary circumstances leading up to this war is given in detail by Kuropatkin. His own reports are reproduced, and the comments of the Czar, and the position of both himself and the other ministers is shown not only in regard to the relations with Japan but with the general foreign relations of the nation. The sight of the three great ministers of the Government working blindly against the private and illegitimate influences of a commercial promoter makes a striking picture. Kuropatkin does not, of course, treat of the Czar's personal relations with the timber company. He could not be expected to do this. But he shows very frankly the lengths to which the timber company moved.

The relation of the Czar to the enterprise is added in a supplementary article by George Kennan, giving new light on this subject, including a series of five remarkable telegrams implicating the Czar with the Bezobrazoff interests. The two contributions together give a view of the beginning of the great war such as has never been possible before, and present facts as novel as they are striking.

[TRANSLATOR'S NOTE.]—The suppressed memoirs of General Kuropatkin are in four bulky volumes and contain, in the aggregate, about 600,000 words. The first three volumes are devoted, mainly, to a detailed review of the three great battles of the Russo-Japanese war—Liao-yang, the Sha-ho, and Mukden—from the standpoint of modern military science. The fourth volume, which is entitled "Summing up of the War," covers a very wide field, dealing partly with Russia's national problems, her military history, and her policy in Asia, and partly with the causes of the late war, the rise of Japan as a military power, and the reasons for the overwhelming defeat of Russia's armies on the Far East.

I have chosen, as the subject for this article, General Kuropatkin's narrative of the events which preceded the rupture with Japan, in February, 1904, and which may be regarded, historically, as the causes of the war that ensued. It contains many new facts, and throws a flood of light upon Russian governmental methods, upon Russia's Asiatic policy, and upon the character of the monarch who now sits on the Russian throne.

Kuropatkin begins this part of his work with a review of Russia's policy and territorial acquisitions in the Far East, which may be briefly summarized as follows: The question of obtaining an outlet on the Pacific Ocean was theoretically considered in Russia long ago; and the conclusion reached was that, in view of the sparseness of Russia's population east of Lake Baikal, and the insignificance of her commerce, foreign and domestic, in that part of the world, the task of getting access to the Pacific, which might involve a serious struggle, ought not to be imposed upon the existing generation. An outlet was not needed at that time, and it is not needed yet. The Russian War Department, moreover, has always regarded with apprehension, and as far as possible combatted, the opinion that "Russia is the most western of Asiatic states, not the most eastern of European," and that all her future lies beyond the Urals.

Prior to the Japanese-Chinese war, nobody questioned that the trans-Siberian railway should follow a route inside of Russian territory; but the weakness shown by China in 1894-5 suggested a new project, namely, to carry the road through Manchuria and thus shorten it by five hundred versts. General Dukhovski, governor-general of the Pri-Amur, commander of the forces in that territory, opposed this project, and pointed out that a line crossing the boundaries of China would not connect the Pri-Amur with European Russia securely, and would benefit the Chinese rather than the Russian population. His opinion was not approved, and this railroad which had for Russia such immense importance, was carried through a foreign country. This change of route, which proved to be so unfortunate, was the first striking proof of the fact that Russia, in the Far East, had begun a policy of energetic action. The occupation of Port Arthur, the foundation of Dalny, the construction of the southern branch of the railway, the formation of a commercial fleet on the Pacific, and the timber enterprise of State Councillor Bezobrazoff on the Yalu River in northern Korea, were all links of one and the same chain, which was to unite permanently the destinies of Russia and the destinies of the Far East—and thus bring gain to Russia.

"There is a prevalent opinion," says Kuropatkin, "that if we had confined ourselves to the construction of the main trans-Siberian road, even though we built a part of it through northern Manchuria, there would have been no war; that the war was caused by our occupation of Port Arthur and Mukden, and, more particularly, by the Bezobrazoff timber enterprise in Korea. There is also an opinion, held by others, that the building of the main line through northern Manchuria should be regarded not merely as the first of our active enterprises in the Far East, but as the basis and foundation of them all, because if we had carried the road along the Amur, through our own territory, we should never have thought of occupying the southern part of Manchuria and the province of Kwang-tung."

After reviewing the Boxer uprising, the occupation of Manchuria by Russian troops for the protection of the railway, and the treaty agreement with China to evacuate southern Manchuria by April 8, 1903, and northern Manchuria within six months thereafter, General Kuropatkin, who was at that time Minister of War, begins his narrative of later events as follows:—

Prior to the conclusion of the treaty with China, in April, 1902, there was a difference of opinion between the commander of Kwang-tung (Admiral Alexeieff) and myself, as to the expediency of evacuating Manchuria, and the importance to us of the southern part of that country. I believed that occupation of southern Manchuria would bring us no profit, but, on the contrary, would involve us in trouble with Japan on one side, through our nearness to Korea, and with China on the other, through our possession of Mukden. I therefore regarded the speedy evacuation of southern Manchuria and Mukden as a matter of extreme necessity. Admiral Alexeieff, on the other hand, as the commander of Kwang-tung, had reason to contend that occupation of southern Manchuria was important because it insured the safety of railroad communication between Kwang-tung and Russia.

This difference of opinion, however, ended with the ratification of the Russo-Chinese treaty of March 26, 1902 (April 8, N.S.). By the terms of that convention, our troops—with the exception of those guarding the railway—were to be removed, within specified periods, from all parts of Manchuria, southern as well as northern. This settlement of the question was a great relief to the War Department, because it held out the hope of a "return to the West" in our military affairs. In the first period of six months, we were to evacuate the western part of southern Manchuria, from Shanhai-kuan to the river Liao; and this we punctually did. In the second period of six months, we were to remove our troops from the rest of the province of Mukden, including the cities of Mukden and Yinkow (Newchwang).

The War Department regarded the agreement to evacuate the province of Mukden with approval, and made energetic preparations to carry it into effect. Barracks for the soldiers to be withdrawn were hastily erected between Blagovestchensk and Vladivostok, in the Pri-Amur country; plans of transportation were drawn up and approved; the movement of troops had begun; and Mukden had actually been evacuated; when, suddenly, everything was stopped by order of Admiral Alexieff, the commander of Kwang-tung, whose reasons for taking such action have not, to this day, been sufficiently cleared up.* It is definitely known, however, that the change in policy which stopped the withdrawal of troops from southern Manchuria corresponded in time with the first visit to the Far East of State Councillor Bezobrazoff, retired. Mukden, which we had already evacuated, was reoccupied, as was also the city of Yinkow (Newchwang). The Yalu timber enterprise assumed more importance than ever, and in order to give support to it, and to our other undertakings in northern Korea, Admiral Alexieff, commander of Kwangtung, sent a force of cavalry with field guns to Feng-wang-cheng.† Thus, instead of completing the evacuation of southern Manchuria, we moved into parts of it that we had never before occupied. At the same time, we allowed operations in connection with the Korean timber enterprise to go on, despite the fact that the promoters of this enterprise, contrary to instructions from St. Petersburg, were striving to give it a political and military character.

There is good reason to affirm that the unexpected change of policy that put a stop to the evacuation of the province of Mukden was an event of immense importance. So long as we held to our intention of withdrawing all our troops from Manchuria (except the railway guard and a small force at Kharbin), and so long as we refrained from invading Korea with our enterprises, there was little danger of a break with Japan; but we were brought alarmingly nearer to a rupture with that Power when, contrary to our agreement with China, we left our troops in southern Manchuria, and when, in the promotion of our timber enterprise, we entered northern Korea. The uncertainty, moreover, with regard to our intentions, alarmed not only China and Japan, but even England, America, and other Powers.

WITTE CREATES THE PORT OF DALNY.

In the early part of 1903, our situation in the Far East became very much involved. The interests of the Pri-Amur were thrown completely into the background, and General Dukhovski, the military commander and governor-general of that territory, was wholly ignored in the consideration and decision of the most important questions of Far Eastern policy. Meanwhile in Manchuria — on Chinese territory — enterprises involving many millions of roubles were undertaken and carried on by virtue of authority that was wholly special. The Minister of Finance (M. Witte) was building and managing there a railroad about two thousand versts in length; he had the direction of a whole army corps of railway guards; he was trying to increase the economic importance of the railway by running in connection with it a fleet of sea-going steamers; he had on the Manchurian rivers a flotilla of smaller vessels, some of which carried guns and gunners; and in military matters he was so independent of the War Department that, without consulting the latter, he even selected and purchased abroad the artillery for the railway guard. Vladivostok, as a terminus, no longer seemed to satisfy the requirements of an international transit line, so, regardless of the fact that the province of Kwang-tung was subject to the authority of the provincial commander, M. Witte, without consulting either the latter or the Minister of War, located and created therein the spacious port of Dalny. The enormous sums of money spent there only lessened the importance and weakened the strength of Port Arthur, because it was necessary either to fortify Dalny, or prepare to have it seized by an enemy and used as a base of operations against us—a thing that afterward happened. Finally, the Minister of Finance managed the affairs of the Russo-Chinese Bank, and had at Peking, Seoul, and other points, his own agents (in Peking, Pokotiloff).

INCREDIBLE SCHEMES OF PROMOTER BEZOBRAZOFF.

It thus appears that in 1903 M. Witte controlled or directed in the Far East not only railroads, but corps of troops, a fleet of commercial steamers, armed river boats, the port of Dalny, and the Russo-Chinese Bank. At the same time, Bezobrazoff and his company were developing their enterprises in Manchuria and Korea, and promoting, by every possible means, their timber speculation on the Yalu. One incredible scheme of Bezobrazoff followed another; and in the summer of 1903 there was submitted to me for examination a project of his which provided for the immediate concentration in southern Manchuria of an army of 70,000 men. His aim was to utilize the timber company as a means of creating a sort of "screen," or barrier against a possible attack upon us by the Japanese, and in 1902-1903 his activity, and that of his adherents, assumed a very alarming form. Among the requests that he made of Admiral Alexieff were, to send into Korean territory six hundred soldiers in civilian dress; to organize for service in the same locality a force of three thousand Khunkhuzes*; to give the agents of the timber company the support of four companies of chasseurs (six hundred mounted riflemen) to be stationed at Shakhedze, on the Yalu; and to occupy Feng-wang-cheng with a body of troops capable of acting independently. Admiral Alexieff denied some of these requests, but, unfortunately, he consented to station one company of chasseurs (one hundred and fifty mounted riflemen) at Shakhedze, and to send a regiment of Cossack cavalry, with field guns, to Feng-wang-cheng. These measures were particularly serious and injurious to us, for the reason that they were taken at the very time when we were under obligations to evacuate the province of Mukden altogether.

The Ministers of Finance, Foreign Affairs, and War (Witte, Lamsdorff and Kuropatkin) all recognised the danger that would threaten us if we continued to defer fulfilment of our promise to evacuate Manchuria, and, more especially, if we failed to put an end to Bezobrazoff's activity in Korea. These three Ministers, therefore, procured the appointment of a special council, which assembled in St. Petersburg on the 5th of April, 1903 (April 18, n. s.), and took into consideration certain propositions which Bezobrazoff had made to its members separately in writing. These propositions had for their object the strengthening of Russia's strategic position in the basin of the Yalu. All three of the Ministers above designated expressed themselves firmly and definitely in opposition to Bezobrazoff's proposals, and all agreed that if his enterprise on the Yalu were to be sustained, it must be upon a strictly commercial basis. The Minister of Finance showed conclusively that, for the next five or ten years, Russia's task in the Far East must be to tranquilize the country and bring to completion the work already undertaken there. He said, furthermore, that although the views of the different departments of the Government were not always precisely the same, there had never been—so far as the Ministers of War, Foreign Affairs, and Finance were concerned—any conflict of action. The Minister of Foreign Affairs pointed out, particularly, the danger involved in Bezobrazoff's proposal to stop the withdrawal of troops from Manchuria.

THE TSAR TAKES ACTION.

It pleased His Imperial Majesty to say, after he had listened to these expressions of opinion, that war with Japan was extremely undesirable, and that we must endeavour to restore in Manchuria a state of tranquillity. The company formed for the purpose of exploiting the timber on the river Yalu must admit foreigners who desired to participate, and must exclude all ranks of the army. I was then ordered to proceed to the Far East, for the purpose of acquainting myself, on the ground, with our needs, and ascertaining what the state of mind was in Japan. In the latter country, where I met with the most cordial and kind-hearted reception, I became convinced that the Government desired to avoid a rupture with Russia, but that it would be necessary for us to act sary for us to act in a perfectly definite way in Manchuria, and to refrain from interference in the affairs of Korea. If we should go on with the adventure of Bezobrazoff & Co., we should be threatened with conflict. These conclusions I telegraphed to St. Petersburg. After my departure from that city, however, the danger of a rupture with Japan, on account of Korea, had increased considerably—especially when, on the 7th of May, 1903 (May, 20, n. s.), the Minister of Finance announced that "after having had an explanation from State Councillor Bezobrazoff, he (the Minister) was not in disagreement with him, so far as the essence of the matter was concerned."

In the council that was held at Port Arthur, when I arrived there, Admiral Alexieff, Lessar,* Pavloff,† and I cordially agreed that the Yalu enterprise should have a purely commercial character, and I said, furthermore, that, in my opinion, it ought to be abandoned altogether. I brought about the recall of several army officers who were taking part in it, and suggested to Lieutenant Colonel Madritoff, who was managing the military and political side of it, that he either resign his commission or give up employment which, in my judgment, was not suitable for an officer wearing the uniform of the General Staff. He chose the former alternative.

In view of the repeated assurances given me by Alexieff that he was wholly opposed to Bezobrazoff's schemes; that he was holding them back with all his strength; and that he was a convinced advocate of a peaceful Russo-Japanese agreement, I left Port Arthur for St. Petersburg, in July, 1903 (o. s.), fully believing that the avoidance of a rupture with Japan was a matter entirely within our control. The results of my visit to the Far East were embodied in a special report to the Emperor, submitted July 24th, 1903 (August 6, n. s.), in which, with absolute frankness, I expressed the opinion that if we did not put an end to the uncertain state of affairs in Manchuria, and to the adventurous activity of Bezobrazoff in Korea, we must expect a rupture with Japan. Copies of this report were sent to the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Minister of Finance, and met with their approval.

KUROPATKIN'S PROTEST CRITICISED.

By some means unknown to me, this report was given publicity; and on the 11th of June, 1905 (June 24, n. s.), the newspaper Rassvet printed an article, by one Roslavleff, entitled "Which is the Greater?" the object of which was to prove that I must be included among the persons responsible for the rupture with Japan, because, through fear of Bezobrazoff, I signed the minutes of the Port Arthur council which put the Yalu enterprise under the protection of Russian troops and thus stopped the evacuation of Manchuria.* This article has been reprinted by many Russian and foreign journals, and there has never been any refutation of the misstatements that it contains with regard to my alleged action in signing certain fantastic minutes. M. Roslavleff quotes from my report to the Emperor the following sentences and paragraphs:

"Our actions in the basin of the Yalu and our behavior in Manchuria have excited in Japan a feeling of hostility to us, which, upon our taking any incautious step, may lead to war. . . . State Secretary Bezobrazoff's plan of operations, if carried out, will inevitably lead to a violation of the agreement that we made with China on the 26th of March, 1902 (April 8, n. s.), and will also cause, inevitably, complications with Japan. . . . The activity of State Secretary Bezobrazoff, toward the end of last year and at the beginning of this, has practically brought about already a violation of the treaty with China and a breach with Japan. . . . At the request of Bezobrazoff, Admiral Alexieff sent a force of chasseurs to Shakhedze (on the Yalu) and kept a body of troops in Feng-wang-cheng. These measures put a stop to the evacuation of the province of Mukden. . . . Among other participants in the Yalu enterprise who have given trouble to Admiral Alexieff is Actual State Councillor Balasheff, who has a disposition quite as warlike as that of Bezobrazoff. If Admiral Alexieff had not succeeded in intercepting a dispatch from Balasheff to Captain Bodisco, with regard to 'catching all the Japanese,' 'punishing them publicly,' and 'taking action with volleys,' there would have been a bloody episode on the Yalu before this time.* Unfortunately, it is liable to happen any day, even now. . . . During my stay in Japan, I had an opportunity to see with what nervous apprehension the people regarded our activity on the Yalu, how they exaggerated our intentions, and how they were preparing to defend, with arms, their Korean interests. Our active operations there have convinced them that Russia is now about to proceed to the second part of her Far Eastern programme—that, having swallowed Manchuria, she is getting ready to gulp down Korea. The excitement in Japan is such that if Admiral Alexieff had not shown wise caution—if he had allowed all the proposals of Bezobrazoff to go through—we should probably be at war with Japan now. There is no reason whatever to suppose that a few officers and soldiers, cutting timber on the Yalu, will be of any use in a war with Japan. Their value is trifling in comparison with the danger that the timber enterprise creates by keeping up the excitement among the Japanese people. . . . Suffice it to say that, in the opinion of Admiral Alexieff, and of our ministers in Peking, Seoul, and Tokio, the timber enterprise may be the cause of war; and in this opinion I fully concur."

After quoting the above sentences and paragraphs from my report, M. Roslavleff says: "Thus warmly, eloquently, and shrewdly did Kuropatkin condemn the Yalu adventure, and thus clearly did he see, on the political horizon, the ruinous consequences that it would have for Russia. But why did not this bold and clear-sighted accuser protest against the decision of the Port Arthur council? Why, after making a few caustic remarks about Bezobrazoff, did he sign the minutes of the council which put the Yalu adventure under the protection of Russian troops, and thus stopped the evacuation of Manchuria? Why? Simply because, at that time, everybody was afraid of Bezobrazoff."

Such accusations, which have had wide publicity, require an explanation.

The council held at Port Arthur, in June, 1903, was called for the purpose of finding, if possible, some means of settling the Manchurian question without lowering the dignity of Russia. There were present at this council, in addition to Admiral Alexieff and myself, Actual State Councillor Lessar, Russian Minister in China; Chamberlain Pavloff, Russian Minister in Seoul; Major General Vogak; State Councillor Bezobrazoff; and M. Plançon, an officer of the diplomatic service. We were all acquainted with the will of the Emperor that our enterprises in the Far East should not lead to war, and we had to devise means of carrying the Imperial will into effect. With regard to such means there were differences of opinion; but upon fundamental questions there was complete agreement. Among such fundamental questions were:

1. The Manchurian question.

On the 20th of June (July 3, n. s.) the council expressed its judgment with regard to this question as follows: "In view of the extraordinary difficulties and enormous administrative expenses that the annexation of Manchuria would involve, all the members of the council agree that it is, in principle, undesirable; and this conclusion applies not only to Manchuria as a whole, but also to its northern part."

* In June, 1903, there was a good deal of friction between the employees of the Bezobrazoff company and those of a Japanese-Chinese syndicate which had obtained from the Korean Government, in March, a timber concession in this same region. Two Chinese were shot by the Russians, and the rafts of the syndicate were seized. Balasheff's dispatch probably referred to this or some similar incident, and the Captain Bodisco to whom it was addressed was probably an officer in the service of the Bezobrazoff company on the Yalu.—G. K.

2. The Korean question.

On the 19th of June (July 2, n. s.) the council decided that the occupation of the whole of Korea, or even of the northern part, would be unprofitable to Russia, and therefore undesirable. Our activity in the basin of the Yalu, moreover, might give Japan reason to fear a seizure by us of the northern part of the peninsula. On the 24th of June (July 7, n. s.) the council invited Actual State Councillor Balasheff and Lieutenant-Colonel Madritoff, of the General Staff, to appear before it, and explain the status of the Yalu enterprise. From their testimony it appeared that the business was legally organized, the company holding permits from the Chinese authorities to cut timber on the northern side of the Yalu, and a concession from the Korean Government covering the southern side. Although the enterprise lost, to some extent, its provocative character, after the conclusions of the St. Petersburg council of April 5, 1903 (April 18, n. s.) became known in the province of Kwang-tung, its operations could not yet be regarded as purely commercial. Its affairs were managed by Lieutenant-Colonel Madritoff, of the General Staff, although that officer was not officially in service.

After consideration of all the facts presented, the members of the council came to the conclusion that "although the Russian Timber Company really appears to be a commercial organization, its employment of officers of the active military service to do work that has military importance undoubtedly gives to it a politico-military aspect." The council, therefore, acknowledged the necessity of "taking measures, at once, to give the enterprise an exclusively commercial character, to exclude from it officers of the regular army, and to commit the management of the timber business to persons not employed in the service of the Empire." On the 24th of June (July 7, n. s.) these conclusions were signed by all the members of the council, including State Councillor Bezobrazoff.

It is evident, from the facts above set forth that the statement in which M. Roslavleff charges the members of the council with signing minutes of proceedings that gave the Bezobrazoff adventure a place among useful imperial enterprises is fiction. Upon what it was based we do not know. The duty of immediately carrying into effect the conclusions of the council rested upon Admiral Alexieff, by virtue of the authority given to him. The thing that he had to do, first of all, and that he was fully empowered to do, was to recall our force from Feng-wang-cheng and the company of chasseurs from the Yalu. Why this was not done I do not know. Personally, I did not allow Lieutenant Colonel Madritoff to continue his connection with the timber company as an officer of the General Staff, and I may add that he and other officers who associated themselves with the enterprise did so without consulting me.

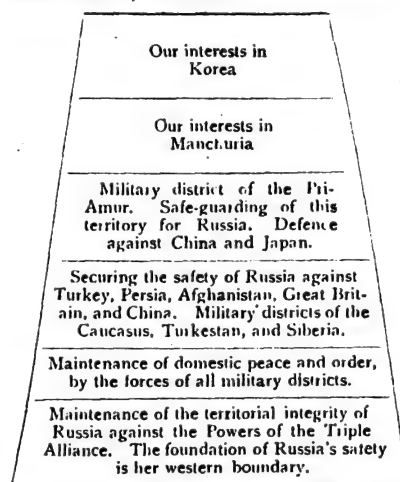

But no matter how effective might be the measures taken by Admiral Alexieff to give the Yalu enterprise a purely commercial character, I still feared that this undertaking, which had obtained world-wide notoriety, would continue to have important political significance. In my report of July 24, 1903 (August 6, n. s.), which was presented to the Emperor upon my return from Japan, I therefore expressed the opinion that an end should be put to the operations of the timber company, and that the whole enterprise should be sold to foreigners.

MUST WE BREAK THE RUSSIAN EMPIRE?

The thought that our interests in Korea, which were of trifling importance, might bring us into conflict with Japan, caused me incessant anxiety during my stay in the latter country. On the 13th of June, 1903 (June 26, n. s.), when I was passing through the Inland Sea, on my way to Nagasaki, I wrote in my diary:

"If I were asked to express an opinion, from a military point of view, with regard to the comparative importance of Russian interests in different parts of the Empire, and upon different frontiers, I should put my judgment into the form of a pyramidal diagram, placing the least important of our interests at the top and the most important at the bottom, as follows.

"This diagram shows clearly where the principal energies of the Ministry of War should hereafter be concentrated, and what direction, in future, should be given to Russia's main powers and resources. The interests that lie at the foundation of our position as a nation are: (1) the defence of the territorial integrity of the Empire against the Powers of the Triple Alliance; and (2) employment of the forces of all our military districts for the preservation of internal peace and order. These are our principal tasks, and in comparison with them all the others have secondary importance. The diagram shows, furthermore, that our interests in the Pri-Amur region must be regarded as more important than our interests in Manchuria, and that the latter must take precedence of our interests in Korea. I am afraid, however, that, for a time at least, our national activity will be based on affairs in the Far East, and, if so, the pyramid will have to be turned bottom side up and made to stand on its narrow Korean top. But such a structure on such a foundation will fall. Columbus solved the problem of making an egg stand on its end by breaking the egg. Must we, in order to make our pyramid stand on its narrow Korean end, break the Russian Empire?"

Upon my return from Japan, I showed the above diagram to M. Witte, who agreed that it was correct.

KUROPAKIN ASKS TO BE RELIEVED.

The establishment of the Viceroyalty in the Far East was for me a complete surprise. On the 2nd of August, 1903 (August 15, n. s.) I asked the Emperor to relieve me from duty as Minister of War, and after the great manoeuvres I was granted an indefinite leave of absence, of which I availed myself with the expectation that my place would be filled by the appointment of some other person.

In September, 1903 (o. s.) the state of affairs in the Far East began to be alarming, and Admiral Alexeieff was definitely ordered to take all necessary measures to avoid war. The Emperor expressed his will to this effect with firmness, and did not limit or restrict in any way the concessions that should be made in order to avert a rupture with Japan. All that had to be done was to find a method of making such concessions that should be as little injurious as possible to Russian interests. During my stay in Japan, I became satisfied that the Japanese Government was disposed to consider Japanese and Korean affairs calmly, with a view to arriving at an agreement upon the basis of mutual concessions.

In view of the alarming situation in the Far East, I cut short my leave of absence, and, in reporting to the Emperor for duty, I gave this threatening state of affairs as my reason for returning. The Emperor, on the 10th of October, 1903 (October 23, n. s.), made the following marginal note upon my letter: "The alarm in the Far East is apparently beginning to subside." In October I recommended that the garrison of Vladivostok be strengthened, but permission to reinforce it was not given. Meanwhile there was really no reestablishment of tranquility in the Far East, and our relations with Japan and China were becoming more and more involved.

On the 15th of October, 1903 (October 28, n. s.) I presented to the Emperor a special report on the Manchuria question, in which I showed that, in order to avoid complications with China and a rupture with Japan, we must put an end to our military occupation of southern Manchuria, and confine our activity and our administrative supervision to the northern part of that territory. My report was, in part, as follows:—

THE GREAT ADVISABILITY OF EVACUATION.

"If we do not touch the boundary of Korea, and do not place garrisons between that boundary and the railway, we shall really convince the Japanese that we have no intention of first taking Manchuria and then seizing Korea. In all probability, they will then confine themselves to the peaceful promotion of their interests in the peninsula, and will neither take possession of it with troops, nor greatly increase the strength of their army at home. This will relieve us of the necessity of strengthening our forces in the Far East, and of supporting the heavy burden of an armed peace—even should there be no war. If, on the other hand, we annex southern-Manchuria, all the questions that now trouble the two nations and threaten to bring about an armed conflict will assume a still more critical aspect. Our temporary occupation of certain points between the railway and Korea will become permanent; our attention will be more and more attracted to the Korean frontier; and our attitude will confirm the suspicion of the Japanese that Russian intends to seize the peninsula.

"That our occupation of southern Manchuria will lead to Japanese occupation of southern Korea there can be no doubt. Beyond that, all is dark. One thing, however, is certain, and that is that, if Japan takes this step, she will be compelled to increase rapidly her military strength, and we, in turn, shall respond by enlarging our Far Eastern force. Thus two nations whose interests are so different that they would seem destined to live in peace will begin a contest in which each will try to surpass the other in military resources and power. And we Russians shall do this at the expense of our fighting readiness in the West; at the sacrifice of the interest of our native population; and for the sake of portions of Korea which, so far as Russia is concerned, have no serious importance. If, moreover, other Powers take part in this rivalry, the struggle for military supremacy is liable to change, at any moment, into a deadly conflict, which may not only retard, for a long time, the peaceful development of our Far Eastern possessions, but check the growth and progress of the whole Empire.

ARBITRATION CONVENTION BETWEEN JAPAN AND THE UNITED STATES.

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan and the President of the United States of America, taking into consideration the fact that the High Contracting Parties to the Convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes, concluded at The Hague on the 29th July, 1899, have reserved to themselves, by Article XIX of that Convention, the right of concluding Agreements, with a view to referring to arbitration all questions which they shall consider possible to submit to such treatment, have resolved to conclude an Arbitration Convention between the two countries, and for the purpose have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

His Majesty the Emperor of Japan, Baron Kogoro Takahira, Shosammii, Grand Cordon of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun, His Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States of America; and

The President of the United States of America, Elihu Root, Secretary of State of the United States of America;

Who, after having communicated to each other their Full Powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon and concluded, the following Articles:—

Article I.—Differences which may arise of a legal nature, or relating to the interpretation of treaties existing between the two Contracting Parties, and which it may not have been possible to settle by diplomacy, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the Convention for the 29th July, 1899, provided, nevertheless, that they do not affect the vital interests, the independence, or the honour of the two Contracting States, and do not concern the interests of third Parties.

Article II.—In each individual case the High Contracting Parties, before appealing to the Permanent Court of Arbitration, shall conclude a special Agreement defining clearly the matter in dispute, the scope of the powers of the Arbitrators, and the periods to be fixed for the formation of the Arbitral Tribunal and the several stages of the procedure. It is understood that such special agreements will be made on the part of the United States by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof.

Such agreements shall be binding only when confirmed by the two Governments by an Exchange of Notes.

Article III.—The present Convention shall remain in force for the period of five years from the date of the exchange of the ratifications.

Article IV.—The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties, and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

In Witness Whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention, and have thereunto affixed their seals.

Done at the City of Washington, in duplicate, this fifth day of the fifth month of the forty-first year of Miji, corresponding to the fifth day of May, one thousand nine hundred and eight.

PSYCHICAL RESEARCH.

[CONTRIBUTED.]

In Harper's Monthly Magazine for August of this year, there is an interesting article by Sir Oliver Lodge, D.Sc., F.R.S., LL.D., Principal of the University of Birmingham, on the subject of Psychical Research. Appearing in such a widely read magazine, and being written by so well-known a man, the article will no doubt cause considerable comment. The following are a few extracts.

"Puzzling and weird occurrences have been vouched for among all nations and in every age. It is possible to relegate a good many asserted occurrences to the domain of superstition, but it is not possible to eliminate all. Nor is it likely that in the present stage of natural knowledge we are acquainted with all the workings of the human spirit and have reduced them to such commonplace that everything capable of happening in the mental and psychical region is of a nature readily and familiarly to be understood by all. Yet there are many who seem practically to live in this improbability, and although they are constrained from time to time to accept novel and surprising discoveries in biology, in chemistry, and in physical science generally, they seem tacitly to assume that these are the only parts of the universe in which discovery is possible, all the rest being already too well known.

"It is always a pity to unsettle minds thus fortified against the intrusion of unwelcome facts, for their strong faith is probably a salutary safeguard against that unbalanced and comparatively dangerous condition called 'open-mindedness,' which is ready to learn and investigate anything not manifestly self-contradictory and absurd. Without people of the solid, assured, self-satisfied order, the practical work of the world would not so efficiently be done."

Dr. Lodge then goes on to give the reasons for the formation of the Psychical Research Society, and deals with the cautious and critical methods employed in the investigation of phenomena and also with the impatience shown by believers in psychic phenomena at the caution shown by the methods of the society. Owing to the exacting demands for proof "It has been called a society for the suppression of facts, for the wholesale imputation of imposture, for the discouragement of the sensitive, and for repudiation of every kind of revelation which was said to be pressing itself upon humanity from the regions of light and knowledge." And yet in spite of the rigorous tests employed the Society has accepted as proven and established things which may be somewhat surprising to one who is unacquainted with the twenty five odd volumes of the Society's reports.

"The first fact established by the Society's labour" continues Dr. Lodge "was the reality of telepathy—that is to say, of the apparently direct action of one mind on another by means unknown to Science. That a thought or image or impression or emotion in the mind of one person can arouse a similar impression in the mind of another person sufficiently sympathetic and sufficiently at leisure to attend and record the impression is now proved. But the mechanism whereby it is done, or even if there is anything that can be likened to physical mechanism at all, is still unknown. The appearance is as if it were a direct action of mind on mind, or of brain on brain, irrespective of the usual nerves and muscles and organs of sense."

Dr. Lodge does not deal with what are called "physical phenomena in this article though he says "There is, in truth, a vast amount of evidence for physical phenomena of this technically supernormal kind; but they have not yet made good their claim to clear and positive acceptance in the way that telepathy has done."

"I propose rather to indicate the class of facts most immediately interesting to Society, and likely in my judgment to be the next to be accepted with moderate unanimity among its members—that is to say, with all the unanimity that we desire or expect. The phenomenon I refer to is that exhibited in several forms and known under various names, of which the simplest perhaps is automatic writing—that is writing executed independently of the full knowledge and consciousness of the operation—the hand acting in obedience either to some unconscious portion of the operator's mind, or else responding to some other psychical influence more or less distinct from both his normal and hypernormal personality. Sometimes it takes the form not of writing but of unconscious speech; and occasionally the person whose hand or voice is being used is himself completely entranced and unconscious for one or two hours together. There is evidently a great deal to be learned about this phenomenon, and many surmises are legitimate respecting it, but it is useless and merely ignorant to deny its occurrence. It is often quite clear that parts of the writings or speech so obtained do not represent the normal knowledge of the automatist; but whence the information is derived is uncertain, and probably in different cases the source is different. The simplest assumption, and one that covers perhaps a majority of the facts, is that the writers' unconscious intelligence or subliminal self—his dream or genius stratum—is at work."

These are significant words: "subliminal self" and "genius stratum." For to get at this stratum has constituted the real mystic quest in all ages. Whether it be the strata of consciousness known as "Samadhi," or the Nirvana Stage of Ancient Buddhism; the mystic union of the Neo Platonists; or the attainment of Bushin 佛心 by the Japanese Zen ascetics (probably not accomplished by any Zen priest now living)—there can be no doubt that the object in all cases has been to reach the state of consciousness that comes from the greater self within. Putting aside all weird and out-of-the-way phenomena, whether proved or unproved, as of relatively small importance, and taking into consideration the action of this "subliminal self" which as Lodge says "covers the majority of the facts," what limitless vistas for investigation this alone suggests. If "the proper study of mankind is man" it is surely no less the inner than the outer man. This indeed is in the true sense of the word: psychology; and in this line of investigation we shall find a few surprises as the years go by, and perhaps get a little better acquainted with ourselves, and other selves.

THE LAW COURTS.

CLAIM FOR DAMAGE.

The hearing of a case in which Messrs Albert Haim and Co. claim yen 792.83 with interest at the rate of 6 cent per annum from May 2nd 1908 to the execution of judgment, from M. Shitata, Bente-dori, began on Sept. 16th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miyake.

Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. Ideura, and defendant by Mr. Kato.

Plaintiff's Counsel started that on July 26th last year, Messrs Haim and Co. made a contract with the Japanese for selling shirtings to him, and at the end of December, the same year, five cases containing 210 pieces of shirting valued at yen 3,205.44 in all, arrived at Yokohama from France, being consigned to the plaintiff firm. On Jan. 16th, this year, Plaintiffs delivered the material to Defendant on the condition that payment for the goods should be made not later than Feb. 13th, and that if Defendant should fail to accomplish payment, Plaintiffs would take back the goods from the former and sell them by auction. As the Japanese did not pay at the specified time, Plaintiffs sold the shirtings by auction on Feb. 27th and obtained a net sum of yen 2,412.60. Subsequently, they informed the Defendant of the result of the auction and at the same time asked him to pay yen 792.83 the difference of the sum specified in the contract.

Defendant's Counsel held that his client never made a contract such as alleged by Plaintiffs' Counsel. However, business was transacted between the parties with shirtings. Counsel was desirous to ascertain the exact nature of the goods in question.

Plaintiff's Counsel produced a letter which was regarded as the contract. He said that "design C.C." therein mentioned, was the quality of the shirting, the sample of which had been given to the Japanese, and he made the contract on the quality. Counsel asked the Judge for leave to examine two Japanese named Yamane and Mitoya as witnesses.

Defendant's Counsel contended that as a satisfactory explanation was not given by Plaintiffs' Counsel as to the exact quality of the goods there was no necessity to summon witnesses.

In reply to the Judge, Plaintiff's Counsel stated that the contract was made between the parties at the office of the Ohio Co., of which firm, Defendant was proprietor. Yamazaki, an employee of the Japanese, signed the contract on behalf of Defendant.

Defendant's Counsel said that Yamagata was not authorized to sign the document.

At this stage, the case was adjourned till Sept. 25th at the request of Plaintiff's Counsel.

FIRE INSURANCE CASE.

A case filed by Messrs. Vidal Baus and Co., No. 246, Yamashita-cho, against L'Union Fire Insurance Co., claiming yen 9,546.79, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. from Sept. 21st last year till the execution of judgment, came up on Sept. 16th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miyake.

Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. Inouye and defendants by Mr. Nakamura.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that plaintiffs have insured with Defendants merchandise stored in the warehouse at No. 141-c, Yamashita-cho. The policies were made out on the following dates, namely on July 22th, 1907 of yen 4,000 for one year; on Sept. 10th, of yen 5,000 for three months; on May 10th, of yen 4,000 for one year; and May 24th, of yen 2,000, for one year. Plaintiffs paid premiums accordingly, and on Sept. 20th, fire broke out in the warehouse, severely damaging the goods. Subsequently they intimated the event to Defendants and asked for payment of the amounts insured. After negotiation between the parties, the debris was transferred by Defendants to Plaintiffs, leaving a balance of yen 9,546.79 due to the latter. The fire insurance company, however, left the balance unpaid, though Plaintiffs asked repeatedly for payment.

Defendant's Counsel contended that there was no insurance contract between the insurance company and Messrs. Vidal Baus and Co. Plaintiffs issued the policies to Messrs. N. Marti and P. Arenas. The firm of Messrs. Vidal Baus and Co. was established on Jan. 15th 1907 and was registered on June 12th in the Yokohama Local Court. Consequently the policies, excepting the one issued on Sept. 20th, could not be regarded as a contract with Messrs Vidal Baus and Co. As to the policies issued before the day when the Spanish firm was registered, Counsel stated that Messrs Marti and Arenas instigated a third person to set fire to the warehouse for a certain purpose. Therefore the insurance firm has no obligation to pay for the damage thus wilfully caused.

Plaintiffs' Counsel said that Messrs. Marti and Arenas made the insurance contract on behalf of Messrs Vidal Baus and Co. The Spanish firm was established a long time ago, and Messrs. Marti and Arenas are the Yokohama representatives of that firm. The Spanish gentlemen did not participate in the incendiarism. Otaki Hanumasa and his son, employees of the Spanish firm, committed the deed with a view to obtaining money for the goods stored in the warehouse, and insured them with the same French insurance company. Messrs. Marti and Arenas, who were examined at the criminal section in the District Court, on suspicion of having taken part in the crime, were acquitted on the ground that there was no evidence. Even supposing that the Spanish gentlemen actually instigated the Japanese employees to create the fire, the insurance firm could not escape from their obligations to pay the sums insured for Messrs. Vidal Baus and Co., who are registered as a juridical person. The juridical firm was different from the individuals, Messrs. Marti and Arenas, though they were on the staff of the association. Counsel produced some documents and gave a brief explanation, after which the proceedings were adjourned till Sept. 25th.

A NEW CHRONO-PHONOGRAPHIC APPARATUS

A PUBLIC SPIRITED ENTERPRISE.

Yokohama residents in general, as well as those who own allegiance to La Republique Française, have good reason to view with pride the enterprise and public spirit of the genial local Agent of the Messageries Maritimes. Most people are deeply interested in the most recent developments of the artistic representation of scenes from life rendered possible by the combination of the moving picture machine, or cinematograph, with the sound reproducing phonograph. At considerable expense—the apparatus alone requiring an outlay of yen 3,000—a complete installation of the chrono-phonograph has been procured, with admirable relays of films. Some of these, being coloured, give a greatly enhanced and beautiful effect.

An idea of the elaboration required in the mechanism capable of reproducing these vivid and life-like scenes may be gathered from the fact that the longer of the scenes require films 200 to 300 yards in length, each separate picture averaging  $2\frac{1}{2}$  c.m., and these pictures are flashed before the lens and the powerful electric arc-light at the rate of 1,200 per minute. Thus, in any of the longer scenes, the spectators are in reality looking at a series of from six to seven thousand pictures.

We may add that the phonographic portion of the apparatus is remarkably perfect. What is reproduced by many of the so-called "talking machines" at present in vogue is in reality but a caricature of the human voice. The machine now secured raises this part of the performance as nearly as possible to the level of perfection. The rendering of songs and in particular of four-part choruses was little short of the results achieved by living voices. It may be added that a most important feature, the synchronization of the two machines, left nothing to be desired. There is an excellent mechanical device to check any aberration in this respect.

M. Chaix, one of those most interested in this matter, favoured a few friends on Tuesday night with a private view of the pictures and apparatus, which will later be placed at the disposal of the Far Eastern Public Hall Association, to be reproduced at the re-opening of the enlarged—one might almost say new—Public Hall, where residents may look forward to entertainments far in advance of anything hitherto seen here.

HONGO-ZA THEATRE.

The new performance at the Hongo za Theatre which commenced on Sept. 13th is now in full swing. The troupe is that of Mde. Sada Yacco. The programme consists of two dramas, viz. Mr. Kikutei Taguchi's "Japanese Love," a romantic story in six acts, and Mr. Taro Masuda's "Sada San in London," a farcical comedy in three acts which was recently published in the Jiji. The main feature of the first part of the programme is that a young man gets saved by a fisherman in Adzuki-jima when drifting on to the shore after a shipping accident. Chiyono, only daughter of the proprietor of a shipping firm, visits the island, where she meets and becomes acquainted with the young man. When she returns home she obtains the consent of her parents to marry him, though some try to prevent it. The performance ends with a wedding ceremony in Tokyo. The acting of Mde. Sada Yacco (Chiyono), who has been trained on stages in Paris and other foreign countries, won the admiration of the audience. Mr. Yamamoto (the young man Uyeke), and Mr. Tsuzaka (Seibei, the father of Chiyono) were also applauded for their parts. The second part of the programme was also very well acted. The original title of "Sada San in London" is the "Travelling of a deaf and dumb man" which really means that though only able to understand his own language he is touring in foreign countries. The essential idea of this performance resembles that of the akagetto of the late Suyehiro Shigeyasu, editor of the Choya Shimbun, who composed it after a visit to America and Europe.

YACHTING.

The yachting on Saturday was something of a novelty and it is a pity that the weather was not better. Instead of racing in classes, all the boats of the Club, great and small, were handicapped together and when one thinks of that fact, it is impossible to withhold praise from the Racing Committee as well for their undertaking the most arduous task of handicapping as for the success which attended their efforts.

The conditions were as follow:

ALL COMERS RACE

Course:—Lightship, Mandarin Bluff and Tachibana. Start between two flag-boats off the Bund, through the Harbour Entrance, round the Honmoku Lightship (S.), round the buoy off Mandarin Bluff (S.), round the Tachibana Buoy (S.), again round the Honmoku Lightship (S.), round the buoy off Mandarin Bluff (S.), through the Harbour Entrance, and finish across the starting line. The above is the course but should the wind on Saturday give too much reaching and running, the course will be reversed, and a notice to that effect will be posted on the Club notice board not later than 1.30 p.m. Distance, 9.85 miles. Time limit, 6 p.m.

START.

Larks ..... 1.45 p.m.
22 Raters ..... 2.00 p.m.
Over 22 Rating ..... 2.15 p.m.

6 PRIZES PROVIDED 20 BOATS START.

1st Prize ..... Hon. Secretary's Cup.
2nd .. ..... Treasurer's Cup.
3rd .. ..... Fenella Cup.
4th, 5th and Prizes ..... Club Cups.

Conditions:—Handicap as arranged.

There was no change in the course. The breeze was northerly, moderate to fresh, with squalls and heavy rain during the afternoon, and many of the yachts were lost to view for a great part of the time. Four Larks got away first at 1.45 but No. 3 had an accident and therefore came back. The small boats behaved splendidly and as will be seen they all got a prize, Nos. 10 and 2 taking first and second. The 22-raters all started under a reef. Peke was still at her moorings when the warning gun was fired, and Edna fouled the buoy at the start. Mary and Nanika were the only big boats with Asagao, and went round the course under gaff and jibtopsails, the former, of course, walking away after passing out of the harbour. Asagao was disqualified.

As provided in the circular six prizes would have been given had 20 started. Only a dozen went away, however, and in these circumstances only three prizes were awarded. The prizes, which consist of silver champagne goblets, are to have the winners' names engraved, as follows:—

1st prize ..... Lark No. 10
2nd .. ..... Lark No. 2
3rd .. ..... Winsome

It may be added that Lark No. 2 is recorded in the scorer's book as disqualified, as also are Elsa and Asagao.

It should be noted with regard to Saturday's yachting that four prizes, not three, are given, Lark No. 11 being thus included in the list. We also learn that Elsa and Lark No. 2 are not disqualified, but that Edna and No. 3 are.

THE YOKOHAMA RAILWAY.

The trial of the Yokohama Railway—between Kanagawa and Hachioji—took place on the afternoon of Sept. 15th, in beautiful weather. The railway was promoted in 1902 with a capital of yen 2,500,000 by Mr. M. Asada, formerly a member of the House of Peers, and a number of the prominent business men of Yokohama and Tokyo. In the following year, the purchase of land and the construction of the permanent way was commenced. Later the capital was increased to yen 3,500,000 with a view to extending the line from Kanagawa Station to the reclaimed land where the trading warehouses are erected. The construction was expected to have been completed in 1907, but was delayed on account of the destructive inundation experienced last year. The railway now connects Yokohama and Hachioji, the seat of a prosperous silk industry.

On the occasion of the trial trip yesterday, a number of government officials, traders and journalists of Yokohama and Tokyo were present by invitation. The train with the guests started from the new Higashi Kanagawa station, at 1 p.m. and ran very slowly, enabling the guests to admire the beautiful scenery along the route. Low hills of tuff with narrow intervening plains are the characteristic features of the newly-opened district, while the imposing mass of the Oyama range, seen from a direction the reverse of the usual one, gives relief to the background. The seven intermediate stations along the route of 27 miles are Kozukuye, Nakayama, Nagatsuda, Haramachida, Fuchinobe, Hashimoto, Aihara, of which the fourth is the principal one. On arrival at Hachioji the guests were met by an enthusiastic crowd at the station.

The terminus joins the Kofu Railway and the Chuo Line. Hachioji has a population of 25,800 and is well known for its manufacture of the silk piece goods, Ichiraku, futsu, do-ri, hucha, ukiori, meisen, etc. The annual transactions have amounted to yen 5,000,000 on an average. The place was originally called Yokoyama. In 1597, when the people living at places surrounding the Hachioji Castle were removed thither, Yokoyama was renamed Hachioji. During the Tokugawa Dynasty, a garrison was always stationed there. The Hachioji Castle just referred to was built in 1578 by Hojo Ujiteru who was occupying the district as the Lord.

The railway will be opened to public traffic from the 23rd inst.

THE RANGE OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

The great cruiser Indomitable is fitted with what is believed to be the most perfect wireless installation on any vessel in the world. Whereas the wireless apparatus on board the Lusitania and Mauretania has a radius of from 300 to 400 miles, a message flashed from the crack British cruiser over 1,600 miles of water was safely received at Scilly—a record for ship to shore transmission. The King and the Princess of Wales were in constant communication with the Prince during his historic voyage by means of this system. In the recent naval manoeuvres, the Admiralty from its wireless station at Whitehall was in close touch with the various units of both fleets as well as with the principal naval stations on the coast.

Mr. Marconi considers that these achievements, wonderful as they are, do not mark the limit of the possibilities of his system. At Coltano in Italy a station is in course of construction which will be more powerful than the two main Atlantic termini of Clifden (Galway) and Glace Bay (Newfoundland). The transmitting radius of this station is destined to be 6,000 miles. Mr. Marconi believes that it will soon be possible for a ship to be communicated with in any part of the hemisphere, and that in the future it should not be impossible to send and receive a message in any part of the world.

ACCORDING to the Hochi, an ordinary meeting of the prefectural governors in Tokyo will be held about Oct. 20th.

AN AMERICAN ON AMERICAN WOMEN.

American women are virulently attacked by Professor Herrick, of Chicago University, in a novel he has published called "Together." He describes the women of the wealthier classes as "over fed, over-dressed, sensualized. . . their prime function of child-bearing lost. . . They are free as never women were before. The principal characteristic of American women," continues the professor, "is greed: the wives of Americans will sell themselves, body and soul, for money;" and he makes one of his characters speak of egotism as the pestilence of the day which has corrupted the women in whom should be the nation's greatest conservative element.

The uncompromising character of this attack has called forth indignant retorts from the libelled ladies. It is a fact of history that any reformer of evils does or, as some would say, must, err on the side of excess of zeal. His attack must be extraordinary, startling, to attract the necessary degree of attention, and the consequent remedy of a frowning public opinion. This is probably the case with the Chicago professor, but one may take it that he has some ground for his accusations. America, we have often been remind, is the land of liberty, as it is pre-eminently the land of the dollar. It is quite possible to conceive of an excess of liberty as being even more injurious than an insufficiency of that sometimes too highly estimated boon. The border-line between liberty and licence is easily over-stepped. Add to this equivocal state of affairs a condition of society where prevails an undue glorification of wealth and setting up of the golden calf, and the way of moral deterioration is made plain. Why do people not read the lessons of history? Has it not a score of times recorded the effects of luxurious living on the vital strength of nations, in the enervation of national life and the decay Empires? Nobody is surprised to see evil consequences in the case of an average young man who unexpectedly receives, at one and the same time, a fortune and an unwonted degree of freedom. Seven moral natures out of ten would suffer deterioration in such circumstances, and it is little wonder that the finer instincts of womanhood should succumb to them. Here doubtless lies the secret of the particular evils which Professor Herrick denounces, and the evils of American public life in general to which the attention of the world has in several instances already been called.

ROPE-BRIDGES.

Of these airy and nerve-trying structures, familiar to travellers in the Himalayan and East Asian regions, there are several varieties. The usual form, seen to advantage over the wild gorges of the Upper Indus, consist of a big rope, or ropes, for the feet, with guide ropes on either side serving the purpose of a hand-rail, and sometimes even a rough network leading up to them. While these bridges sway and swing alarmingly enough, they are comparatively safe, given the soundness of the several ropes. More sensational, if one may be allowed the word, are the single-rope bridges with which the inhabitants of the most primitive districts content themselves. Mr R. F. Johnston, F.R.G.S., who has recently accomplished a journey from Northern China via the frontiers of Tibet to Burmah, gives the following description of one, across the Yalung tributary of the Upper Yangtse:—

The first view of this primitive substitute for a bridge certainly does not inspire one with confidence. There is one rope for crossing from the left to the right bank, and another—some 30 yards off—for the reverse proceeding. The banks on either side are high and steep, and each rope-end is firmly bound round an immovable rock or boulder. . . . The native of the district, when about to cross the river, places a semi-circular piece of tough wood, with two grooves for the fingers, on the bamboo rope, clutches it with both hands and lets himself go. He is not tied to the movable cylinder or to the rope, and he has nothing to sit on. He simply holds on with his hands, his legs hanging in the air. He descends with terrific speed to the point where the rope sags, or hangs lowest; and having safely arrived there, he is only a few yards from the opposite bank, and quickly hauls himself along the remaining distance. In this manner the crossing is only a matter of a few exhilarating seconds. With us, however," continues Mr. Johnston, "the operation was a longer one. Unfortunately, the proper rope for leaving the bank was old, and had been condemned as unsafe: our party, therefore, were obliged to use the rope that was only intended for crossing in the opposite direction. . . . Instead of a rapid rush through the air across almost the whole width of the river, the weight of our bodies took us only about two thirds of the total distance, and from that point we had to proceed by throwing our legs over the rope and pulling ourselves upwards inch by inch, hand over hand. The work was exceedingly laborious. . . . In view of the fact that we were all novices at rope-climbing, each of us submitted before starting, to having a leather thong tied under the arms and made fast to the sliding cylinder, so that if loss of nerve or other cause had made us let go we should not have fallen into the river, but hung limply on the rope till rescued. I found the experience interesting and somewhat exciting. The whole village turned out to see us cross the river, and I must confess that when I was being trussed up with the leather thong my feelings were perhaps only comparable to those of a condemned criminal who is being pinioned before execution. A fall into the river would mean almost certain death. The water seethes and bubbles in innumerable whirlpools forty feet below the rope, and is nearly as cold as ice, for it largely consists of frozen snow."

DAILY MARKET REVIEW.

The review of the Tokyo Stock Market sent us by Mr. H. Maxwell, Share and Stock Broker, is to the following effect.

Tokyo, September 11.

The market baffles the attempts of the shrewdest operators to take it by the horns. In the morning, the official announcement (by Baron Goto) of the financial policy of the Government made before the Bankers' Club last night, had rather a contrary effect. It was already discounted and the market went on without any attention to the plans set forth.

All stocks went down this morning, and all stocks went up this afternoon, in just the way they have been doing for some days past without arriving at any definite end. It is difficult to say when any change for the better, or worse, will take place.

Tokyo, September 12.

Rich as is the Stock Exchange's vocabulary to denote one's feelings, many a new epithet was heard in describing the course of the market, this morning. Of course, all this came from the bulls, who erred in their judgment. Even the elated bears seemed to share the view of the bulls that the cold weather is at the bottom of the trouble; and if one can have any confidence in the weather prophet he will then have enough confidence to conduct fresh operations. As it is, the professionals are standing aside with folded arms, and carefully abstain from committing themselves either way.

Tokyo, September 14.

The market's greeting to the return of favourable weather was very cordial this morning, and a strong feeling of confidence pervaded all operations. The principal stocks showed an advance beginning with 70 sen and running as high as yen 1.70, the Spinnings heading the list. The afternoon witnessed a continuation of the approval, but in a more conservative manner, the leaders advancing from 25 to 50 sen.

For the day the rise shows up as follows: Tanko, 1.05; Fuji Spinning, 1.90; Kanegafuchi Spinning, 1.85; Sugars, 1.25; and Stock Exchanges 1.70. On the "jiki" market the new Stock Exchanges went up 70 sen.

Tokyo, September 15.

The market appeared ready to pay further homage to the weather and prices improved all around, with the exception of N.Y.K. But in the afternoon quite an irregular tone developed, the N.Y.K. again being chosen for assault. The dire difficulty in which the Shipping Companies are said to be is magnified, and political reasons are being advanced for the opinion. The Hodan Petroleum alone is going up in spite of the ups and downs of other stocks, September delivery being quoted at yen 125.—an increase of 10 points since the beginning of the month.

Spinnings have improved a few points over

Saturday's parity, though this afternoon, owing to some profit taking sales, the Kanegafuchi suffered a slight decline. Dai Nippon Sugars also declined a bit.

Tokyo, September 16.

The market is so sensitive in one respect and the reverse in others. Everybody expected with the return of the fine weather that stocks would gain in their value. So far, however, the market belied itself, inasmuch as the improvement noticed in some stocks was soon replaced by a decline in others. In the afternoon the Silver rate was known to have gone up—and the Spinnings responded to this with a little fall. Stock Exchanges also kicked against the news, dropping yen 1.40.

On the whole, the transactions were of a very limited character, and it is difficult to tell when the market will assume a more normal and healthy tone.

Tokyo, September 17.

Over night, it was expected that the little depression working its way in Central Japan (this was nothing more than a bear scare) would visit this part of the country, and the timid operators, who believed they were the recipients of the earlier information of the unwelcome visitor, began to sell out yesterday afternoon, and the forecast was very gloomy on the street after the market was over. This morning the fine weather gave the lie direct to the story, with the result that a very strong tone developed. Spinnings were, however, stumbling blocks, a somewhat weaker tone manifesting itself, only to be removed by the stiffened quotations for the Stock Exchange shares. In the afternoon, the market started very firm, demolishing the various scarecrows set up by the bears. The listed stocks, without a single exception, shot up from 25 sen to 1.25.

On the whole, the market appears to have put on a new life. We believe that Spinnings deserve to be watched carefully.

HONGKONG PROMOTERS OF JAPANESE BOYCOTT ANGRY.

According to the vernacular press in Canton and Hongkong, says the China Mail, several instances have come to light of Chinese firms in this Colony breaking the agreement made early in the year to boycott Japanese goods. It appears that these firms have been induced, among other things, to purchase ginseng, the sum of the import amounting to nearly twenty piculs. What other articles may have been purchased does not appear. This led one of the Guild to issue a strong protest, which was published in Canton and in Hongkong. It is interesting to note that, among other reasons assigned why native shopkeepers should be true to their pledge, is the fact that Foreign nations will laugh at the Chinese, if they yield, thus acknowledging that they have no more "cohesion than a plate of shifting sand." "Foreigners will laugh at and ridicule us, saying that whilst we have mouths and throats of tigers, we have only tails like serpents. As a consequence they will think that we are very changeable, and will regard us as menials and slaves, and proceed to treat us as such." We have referred to this matter not so much because of the intrinsic importance of the action, but to give our readers some idea of the feelings at present animating the minds of the better class Chinese. They seem to shrink from any situation where they feel that they have justly laid themselves open to the ridicule of foreigners. This is really a step in advance, for though the Chinese are very thin-skinned in regard to the attitude displayed towards them by their own people, and their own class, in the past they have professed to be indifferent to, and to ignore, what foreigners may think about them. They are now approaching a different attitude, and this changed feeling cannot but act beneficially. Meanwhile we would point out to the leaders of the boycott that their action is clearly a restraint of trade. China has already had to pay dearly for indulgence in that line of policy. It was restraint of trade which first brought her into armed conflict with western nations and if the present boycott continues much longer Japan will have reason to take vigorous action to remove it.

THE HAKODATE RACE CLUB.

A pari mutuel record is reported to have been made at the autumn meeting of the Hakodate Horse Race Club. On the final day, Sept. 13th, the pari mutuel paid yen 4,041 for Hatsuharu. At this race, the sale of chances was as follows:—

Mikadzuki .....	263
Hirafu .....	140
Migoto .....	68
Haukaze .....	12
Takara .....	1
Hatsuharu .....	1

It may be remembered that this Spring at the Meguro, yen 1,321, and at the Kokura, yen 1,821 were paid. The last mentioned amount was hitherto the highest noted in Japan.

A correspondent writes:—

"There must be some mistake in the figures given in your report of the Hakodate Race Club dividend of yen 4,041 on Hatsuharu. Your figures give a total of 485 tickets at yen 10=yen 4,850, less commission of 10 per cent.=yen 435, leaving nett yen 4,365, which should have been due to the backer of the one ticket on Hatsuharu." It is quite possible, of course, that there is a mistake, but 10 per cent may not have been levied by the Hakodate Club.

BASEBALL.

A Baseball match between the Waseda College and the Washington College will be played on Sept. 19th and 20th commencing at 2 p.m. in the grounds of the former institution. Later, a match between the Keio Gijuku and the Americans will take place, the date of which is not yet fixed.

The American players were entertained by Mr. K. Otani on the evening of Sept. 14th at his house in Yokohama. By the 6.30 p.m. train they returned to Tokyo and were present at the Hongo-za by invitation of Madame Sadayacco Kawakami.

H. M. S. "INDOMITABLE."

Much interest has been aroused by the recent remarkable performance of the world's most wonderful vessel, says a London contemporary. There was never any doubt in the mind of the expert that she was the most powerful and swiftest warship afloat. Exception might be taken to the expression "most powerful," for the three monster British cruisers carry only 8 12-inch guns to the Dreadnought's ten. It may be claimed however that her great speed and manœuvring power give her compensating advantages. The average rate of speed attained by her in her "royal" run across the Atlantic, was 25.13 knots; but that was a rough calculation, made on what is called a "land to land" basis, that is, the timing began at the last point of land on the Canadian side, and ended when the Fastnet came into view. The official calculation, however, based on the journey from Bell Isle to Land's End—works out a little less favourably, namely, an average of 24.8 knots per hour, owing to the reduced speed necessitated by the fog in the vicinity of Belle Isle. Speed was also reduced on nearing Land's End.

"ICE MAST HIGH."

To add to the difficulties of the fog, icebergs were encountered shortly after passing Cape Norman. Some "as big as the Rock of Gibraltar" floated majestically across the very path of the cruiser. It required little imagination to conjure up the inspiring picture of this giant warship, the embodiment of strength, speed, and destruction, gliding its way through archipelagoes of icebergs, beside the dazzling whiteness of which the sombre outlines of the vessel stood out in marked relief. But those on board were hardly in the mood for admiring the beauty of icebergs, and no one was sorry when two days after the start, the last of them was left behind. After that it was a case of "letting her go," until the amazing speed of 26.4 knots per hour was reached.

THE PRINCE AS STOKER.

All this meant hard and persistent work below decks. Of the 780 men, all told, on board, not one escaped, or wanted to escape, his share of the hot, toilsome, and dirty work. To exhibit a clean face was almost a mark of reproach where there was so much stoking to be done. The Prince of Wales went down one afternoon into the stoke-hold in a spick and span white uniform, but when he emerged half an hour later the evidence of his contact with the coal was only too evident. He had put in thirty minutes of stoker's work, first pulling out the coal and then feeding the furnace. It was not the first time the Heir Apparent had done this, for there is not a duty on shipboard with which he has not made himself acquainted during his long and happy connection with the Navy. As with the Prince, so with his staff—all underwent a spell in the stoke-hold, and it is understood, each quitted himself well. Before leaving the subject of coal, it may be mentioned that the cruiser left Quebec with 3,000 tons, and the supply is not exhausted.

SEA-GOING QUALITIES.

Nothing but the highest praise can be said of the general sea-going qualities of the vessel. On the outward passage she battled for days against a head sea, and was as firm as a rock. When steaming on the return journey at twenty-five knots an hour or more, it was difficult to realise the pace, so steady was the going. It was a marvellous experience for those accustomed to the sea. In these days of ironclads, the absence of beauty in warships is a cry often heard, but naval men grow eloquent over the graceful lines of the Indomitable.

FRENCH VIEWS ON ENGLAND.

A writer in the Fortnightly Review has collected some interesting opinions of distinguished Frenchmen on English people, weather and customs, which we reproduce below.

Voltaire:

Too few sauces and too many religions.

Rousseau: Damp and cloudy; vegetables have little taste and meat none.

Taine:

Very talkative and more than obliging. English women wear their clothes as gracefully as a coat-rack wears the coats hung on it.

Chateaubriand:

When I see the boldness and pertness of young girls in my own country I regret the shyness and modesty of English maidens.

Bourget:

The English Sunday—so ridiculed and calumniated, and so delightful.

Prosper Merimee:

The time they take over dinner in England is positively inhuman.

Max O'Rell:

England is the paradise of children.

Madame de Staël:

Civilisation is more advanced in England than in any Continental country.

Commenting on these excerpts Miss Barnicoat, the writer of the article, says that "most French writers consider us a nation deficient in subtlety, crammed with facts and lacking in ideas. 'Individuellement bêtes et en masse un peuple admirable,' was Mérimée's way of putting it. Whatever money, common sense, and patience could do, he added, the English did; but they knew no more about art than his cat. Taine had somewhat the same idea in his mind, when he said that the inside of an Englishman's head could be fairly accurately compared with one of Murray's guide-books—many faces, few ideas, quantities of useful and exact information, statistics, figures, historical details, with moral maxims as a sort of preface; but en vue d'ensemble, no literary charm.

Drawing a parallel between English women and French women, the French writers as a whole strike a balance in favour of their own countrywomen. They generally agree that Englishwomen are much less of coquettes, much more natural than Frenchwomen; but—they have less womanly charm. Their faces often struck Taine as simply babyish; wax dolls with glass eyes perfectly devoid of expression. Some, however, he admitted to be angelically beautiful, but others were extremely ugly, almost grotesque—a point of view very common among French writers. In society it was chiefly their extreme freshness and blooming complexions that struck him; but he confessed to being far more at ease with English than with French women. With the former, he had no vague fear that all the time he was being criticised, laughed at, and generally turned inside out by some trenchant feminine wit; he felt he had a right to bewail he was "just ordinary." The commonest English type, as depicted by Taine, is a much less flattering portrait than that of the most perfect type, yet who can say it is a caricature? "Four times out of five," he says, "the typical Englishwoman's characteristics are capacity to endure much, and often signs of already having endured much. The typical Englishman shows chiefly capacity for action, for sustained effort, for concentrated attention; he has drawn features, with nothing gentle or reflective about them, a set jaw, and impassive countenance."

The English Sunday often comes in for a good deal of adverse criticism, but it is eminently just withal. A wet London Sunday Taine found "horrible," he had no idea what it could be like. He evidently agreed with Etandhat as to Sabbatarianism spoiling one day out of seven and destroying one-seventh of human happiness. Merimee writes to his "Inconnue" that he had fled to Hampton Court on "le Lord's day" to avoid temptation to suicide. Bourget is the first Frenchman bold enough to put in a plea for a day "so ridiculed and calumniated, yet so delightful."

CORRESPONDENCE.

A MISSIONARY INCIDENT.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL."] SIR,—May I once more trespass on your valuable space?

Since the publication of my letter dealing with A Missionary Incident, I have reason to know that many of my missionary friends have been hurt by some of the expressions therein used, and that my championship of a certain missionary lady has been the cause of considerable unpleasantness for her.

Now these results of a hasty but sincere partisanship are deplorable and quite unforeseen by myself.

As an outsider—an interested outsider—I was disgusted with the conduct of certain persons in condemning that of which they knew nothing, and in taking up a position that was distinctly uncharitable and calculated to give pain of a peculiarly acute description to another.

My object in writing my former letter was to place facts before all those who were likely to hear a perverted and unkind version of them, and at the same time to show the authors of these "inaccuracies" and anyone else who might be interested, how their behaviour appeared to someone placed outside their professional circle.

I may have been ill-advised in so doing, but I think you and all your non-missionary readers discerned these my objects with small difficulty.

The missionary body, however, has proved more obtuse, and several of my very good friends have taken certain expressions aimed at certain persons as blows at the entire missionary body, and at Christianity itself, and therefore as directed against themselves. This is distinctly unfair, as any unprejudiced reader of my remarks would see.

As regards the accusation of besmoothing Christianity, I can only say that it never did a cause any harm to have the faults of its followers dealt severely with. The real harm is done quite otherwise—by the commission of the faults. However, having explained my motives, I would now go a step further.

If those persons who spoke so uncharitably and unwarrantably of the lady in question will tender her an apology, I shall have real pleasure in retracting, through the columns of this newspaper, if the Editor will permit me, all those expressions in my former letter which were disagreeable to missionary readers, as I now apologise most sincerely to the lady I championed for any unpleasantness of which I was inadvertently the cause, and to those of my missionary friends who have taken blows aimed elsewhere as directed against themselves as members of the same fraternity.

I admit their spirit, but can only deplore the result, and trust that my expressions of regret will eventually call forth a little kinder feeling on their part towards myself.

Yours, etc.,

"ONLOOKER."

Yokohama, September 13th, 1908.

It is reported by the Asahi that Colonel S. Kono in reserve, and three others, formerly officials of the Nanto Race Club, have prosecuted, in the Kobe District Court, two of the directors and the manager of the pari mutuel department of the Club. It is estimated that hardly less than half a million people assembled to give the American Fleet its welcome in Sydney harbour, which with its innumerable bays and coves, never looked more beautiful.

MR. DEAKIN's message of welcome was as follows: "The crimson thread of kinship, our chief bond of union with the empire, extends throughout the great republic whose sailors we are about to welcome as guests, and the honoured representatives of this mighty nation are thrice welcome as blood relatives."

ON THEIR way from Auckland to Sydney, the American warships encountered heavy winds, which threw up a stiff head sea, greatly retarding their progress. Throughout Tuesday night the high seas caused the larger of the ships to roll at least 20 degrees, while the auxiliaries suffered even more severely. There was considerable discomfort for all the men, and the intervals between the vessels were increased to 600 yards.

THE recent decision of the French Government to send 8,000 relief troops to Indo-China was treated as a normal arrangement, but the Temps draws attention to the facts that it is unusual to send troops through the Red Sea in full summer heat, and 8,000 far exceeds the usual number of reliefs.

Manahe, the manager of the Gifu branch of the Shinri Bank, on the evening of Sept. 10th in some woods near the office and stole a bunch of keys from him. On the following day, the young man asked for money at the bank, producing the keys and pretending to be a representative of the manager. He thus obtained about yen 200. On the night of Sept. 12th the murderer was arrested at a licensed house.

THE LEADER of the mob in the recent race war in Springfield which culminated in the hanging of two negroes, was a woman named Mrs. Kate Howard. She killed herself by swallowing poison while being taken to the jail, following the return of an indictment against her, charging murder. She had already been indicted for destruction of property, but was out on bail. On being arrested, she asked permission to change her clothes, and seized the opportunity for self-destruction.

"THE earthquake is a great detector of scamped work," says Professor Jordan, who is now supervising the repairs to the Leland Stanford University. "Wherever the bricks had been improperly laid or the cement carelessly mixed, there the earthquake punched out a hole. In future our buildings will be of concrete with steel, a form of structure, which when properly put together will not be injured by any earthquake such as has been experienced in California hitherto."

A STRANGE accident occurred at the Anglo-Chinese School in Penang through a slate pencil piercing the heart of a Chinese lad. Like most school children, the boy, who was about eight years old, carried a sharp pointed pencil in his coat pocket. During recreation time, he somehow fell forward, the pencil being in such a position that the pointed end entered his body. It pierced his heart to the depth of over two inches and snapped. He was taken to the General Hospital, where the doctor extracted the broken end, but, owing to the vital place of the wound, the poor lad succumbed.

EUREKA, Cal., was visited on Aug. 18 by three earthquake shocks, which knocked down more than a hundred chimneys, shattered about 40 large plate-glass windows in the business portion of the town, broke much crockery in the residential section and sent many people scurrying from bed into the streets half clad. The damage reported so far is estimated at about $2,000. The first shock caused practically all the damage. The walls of the Carnegie library building, erected five years ago at a cost of $25,000, were slightly cracked. Six miles north of Eureka the earthquake caused a fissure in the earth half a mile in length.

WHALING is carried on as far south as Sechart, a station on the west coast of Vancouver Island. Describing a recent catch a visitor says: "Nobody can have any idea what a whale is like until he sees one caught and hauled out of the water. Their bulk is stupendous. We were out for a day, and the ship caught two, one 80 and the other 85 feet long. Twenty of us could lie in one of their mouths. I don't know what you think of the Jonah story, but while a sulphur-bottom could not swallow a man because its throat is too small, a sperm whale could swallow an ox. The second whale was mortally wounded by the shot, but not killed instantaneously, and kept us on the go for a while."

A LONDON telegram of Aug. 24th said: "The wife of Major-General Luard has been found murdered on the balcony of a lonely summer-house in dense woods near Igham Knoll, Kent. The discovery was made yesterday afternoon, and the cause of death was two revolver shot wounds. All the rings were torn from the murdered lady's fingers. No clue has been found as to the murderer." A later dispatch stated:—The murder at Igham has caused an intense sensation. The Police have several important clues, and an arrest is momentarily expected. The faithful Irish terrier which guarded the body of the murdered lady ran to meet General Luard and led him to the spot where the victim, who was 64 years of age, lay."

DISCUSSING the question of conscription, a London daily says:—We are emphatically not in favour of conscription as that term is understood on the Continent. At the same time it is abundantly evident that to assure her national safety Great Britain must possess, in addition to a mighty navy and a sufficient professional army, a force of trained citizen soldiers who could render effective resistance to an invading enemy. The solution of the problem is not compulsory military service, but compulsory military training. Every young man of every class should be compelled to spend six consecutive months learning to shoot, to obey orders and to be capable of fighting if fighting has to be done. Colonel Pollock has proved that six months' training can produce a first class fighting man and this six months should be demanded of every male citizen between his seventeenth and his twenty-first year. We believe that this proposal only requires to be put emphatically before the country to secure universal acceptance.

ALFRED H. BROOKS, chief of the United States Geological Survey in Alaska, recently returned from that region, and his views on "Seward's Folly," the title bestowed on Alaska by some who doubted its value a few generations ago, are embodied in a well-drawn word picture says Bradstreets. Mr. Brooks says: "California with its billion and a quarter dollars' record from its placer fields will be outdone by Alaska. Finland, with its bleak and desolate stretch of north-land, is a barren waste compared to the agricultural future of Alaska; Michigan, Montana and Arizona will perhaps be surpassed in copper products, and coal mining in the north will become an important industry. I have been to Finland and I know it well. So, also, do I know Alaska. When the railroads reach the coal and copper deposits, enter the placer regions, and tap the various mountain ranges where are to be found the quartz ledges that so many prospectors are now seeking, Alaska will come into its own, the sea will be alive with ships bringing its commerce to the nearest port in the States, and Alaska be recognized as the richest region under the Stars and Stripes."

THE British steamer New Orleans has arrived at Singapore from Pulau Laut in tow of the Danish salvage steamer Protector. It will be remembered that the New Orleans went ashore in the Pulau Laut Straits while on a voyage from Ocean Island to Hamburg. It was feared that she was a total loss. The accident occurred while the vessel was trying to make the Pulau Laut coaling station. The Em. Z. Switzers Salvage Company of Copenhagen sent their salvage steamer Protector, from Hong-kong, to her assistance. The rocks were blasted from underneath the New Orleans and she was floated after about a thousand tons of her cargo had been taken out of her. She was patched up temporarily and towed to Singapore as stated. From resting on the reefs at each end, her decks collapsed amidships and her sides are buckled. It will be impossible to estimate the real damage until the vessel has been dry-docked, but it is believed that extensive repairs will have to be carried out. Fortunately, the salvage operation was favoured by fine weather. The floating of the New Orleans was a smart piece of work. It is understood that tenders for her repairs are to be called for in Singapore, Hongkong and Shanghai.

It is several years, says the China Mail, since Dean Butler was a commanding figure in Shanghai, but there must be many residents of the model settlement who remember him, and they will be interested to learn that Messrs Dent have published a selection of sermons preached by him, under the title, "The Sound of a Voice that is Still." Mrs. Butler prefixes a brief memoir which contains a reference to General Gordon. Mr. Butler was Dean of Shanghai when General Gordon in 1880 visited the place. "I saw him once, and once only. He had just received a telegram from the War Office. I think it urged him to return, but I am not certain. Whatever it was, it put him in a violent passion. He tore the paper across, and said he should throw up his commission in the Army. He was excited and anxious to reply to the telegram, so I took my leave. I never saw him again. He left Shanghai immediately, went for a few months to South Africa, then to Syria. Though I saw him for only half an hour, he remembered me, and wrote to me when he returned to Egypt." Dean Butler, who died in harness at Cairo, described himself as a Broad Churchman, and this was generally descriptive of his position, but he expressly advocates prayers for the dead.

COMMERCIAL NEWS.

Messrs. Tata Sons & Co.'s Yarn Market Report dated Shanghai, Monday, August 31, 1908, contains the following:—Crop accounts from India are less encouraging, there being a general cry for a break in the continued rainy weather. Any immediate prospect of a favourable change in the present situation is, in the circumstances, out of the question.

The excellent crop accounts coupled with the sluggish condition of the yarn and cloth markets all over Europe and America led to a sharp fall in American Cotton, sending the price down to 5.25d, but there has been a slight re-action at the close. The closing quotation is 5.44d.

BOMBAY YARN.—The depression advised in our foregoing report has become more pronounced during the fortnight, and a distinctly weak feeling has dominated the market. Contrary to expectations, some importers evinced unusual pressure to unload and in their anxiety to quit their holdings have forced the market down 1s. 1 to 1½ despite lower exchange. Other large holders have kept out of the market and are quietly watching the trend of events.

The business during the fortnight has been within extremely narrow bounds; and were it not for the forced sales by nervous importers first-hand business would have been well under 1,000 bales. Native holders have lost all confidence in the market and are unreservedly meeting any inquiries they receive.

The easier position of prices induced some buying and the regular customers—Szechuan and the River ports—have purchased a few medium chops of 10s. and 20s. spinings. They are now awaiting a further drop in rates. Tientsin and other Northern Ports appear to be quite stagnant.

The arrivals during the fortnight have again been pretty heavy; but as a major portion thereof represents indented goods the actual visible supply on the market is not large enough to affect the statistical position. Clearances continue remarkably good; and unsold stocks are estimated at 30,000 bales as against 78,000 bales at about the same time last year.

The Bombay market has relapsed into a state of utter stagnation; and latest quotations show a drop of Rs. 3 on previous rulings. The recent heavy fall in Cotton has made spinners impatient sellers; but the absence of inquiries from China brings business to a standstill.

The market closes decidedly weaker with a tendency in favour of lower rates. Weak Silver, cheap Cotton, high local values, scantiness of orders on the recent market—which is a natural sequence to the recent heavy influx of goods into the consuming countries—all these are factors which cannot but incline us to pessimism as regards the future of the market; and it seems to us that we ought to be prepared for a further drop in rates in the course of the next few days.

JAPANESE YARN.—The market is absolutely flat, with prices on the easy side. There is scarcely any demand and although holders seem inclined to offer concessions in rates, buyers are holding off in anticipation of a much lower basis. Unless prices come down to a safer and more reasonable level we do not expect a resumption of business. Sales during the fortnight amount to 1,000 bales including:—

Fukushima No. 16s. Tls. 94½/94¼, Hirano No. 16s. Tls. 95½/95¼, Kurashiki No. 16s. Tls. 95¼/95, Senchu 20s. Tls. 99¼, Any No. 20s. (H./Bales) 98¼. The Osaka market has declined Y2. In view of the depressed state of the market Japan spinners contemplate the reduction of the out-put of yarn a further 10 per cent.

LOCAL YARN.—The market is without any fresh business, but the feeling is decidedly uneasy, as evidenced by second hand sales which show a decline of Tls. 2 to 2½. In view of excellent cotton crop accounts, mills are offering to sell at lower rates; but buyers are scarce.

CHINESE COTTON.—There is nothing to speak of as regards old cotton. In new crop, business has begun in earnest, and over 20,000 piculs have changed hands, as under:—

8,000 piculs Hokushu at Tls. 19.00 to 18.50 Oct./Nov.; 4,000 piculs Taichang at Tls. 20.50 Oct./Nov.; 7,000 piculs Naizu at 19.50 Oct./Nov.; 400 piculs Ningpo at Tls. 18.40 Ready.

The rain fall of last week has proved of immense benefit to the growing crops, and the out-turn is expected to be 10 to 15 per cent. larger than last year's. Prices are every day giving way and a still lower level of prices seems inevitable.

COPPER.

The local market is quiet and there appears to be every prospect of it continuing so, for although three provincial mints were given permission to resume operations the Government's consent applied only to actual stocks on hand. It appears that the mints represented that they had certain quantities stored at the mints and in the hands of importers as contract cargo. These supplies had to be paid for, and banks, fearing depreciation, would not advance the full contract prices. The Central Government thereupon gave permission for supplies to be worked up. The mints will subsequently be shut down again indefinitely. During the last week from 300 to 400 tons of contract copper have been shipped from here to the Wuchang Mint. It will not take long to work up present supplies for the mints can use, on an average, 1,800 tons of copper each per month. The outlook is consequently dull, for the mints of China are practically the only local consumers. Japan especially is affected by this curtailment, for during the past three years there have been imported to China from Japan 3,076,302, 7,193,544 and 3,226,211 kin, respectively. There is a likelihood of Japanese production falling off for some time in consequence of the damage done to the rice crops by copper refining works. Last week a large number of country people gathered at the works of the Sumitomo Mines to protest against work being carried on at this time of the year. The farmers demanded that work be abandoned for six weeks because the sulphurous fumes, impregnated to some extent with arsenic, were destroying the rice over an area of many miles. The mine owners are holding out and riots have occurred. It is probable that the Government will now intervene. This mine, which is situated in the Iyo Province, is one of the three largest and oldest in Japan and its output is very large. As there is every prospect of it being shut down, supplies in Japan will probably decrease considerably. It is peculiar that the damaging effects of the fumes should only be discovered there this year, for America has had that evil to contend with for many years; and the fumes can be almost entirely caught mechanically; sometimes with payable results from the bye-products.

The European markets are showing an upward tendency in sympathy with the general state of finance. Rates, however, do not yet allow a fair margin.—N. C. Daily News.

GERMANY FEELS THE PINCH.

London, September 10.

An official statement from Berlin dwells on the urgency for reform in the imperial finances. It shows that the debt now stands at 212½ millions sterling, an increase since 1900 of a hundred millions. Bills are to be introduced providing for the gradual redemption of the debt with the aid of rigid administrative economies, but new taxation is nevertheless inevitable. An increase of the beet sugar duties is foreshadowed, with taxes on luxuries, artificial light and unearned incomes.

THE EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS.

The opening of the Eucharistic Congress, which took place at Westminster Cathedral yesterday, was of the most solemn and impressive character. Eight cardinals, fourteen archbishops and seventy bishops from all parts of the world, together with most of the leaders of English Catholicism, were present. Cardinal Vanutelli in his opening address paid a tribute to the noble hospitality of free England which after, the lapse of centuries, had reopened the door to the pontifical legate. He expressed the Pope's esteem for the British nation and recalled unforgettable memories of the Catholic faith in England. He concluded by invoking the Divine blessing on Britain.

All the police were called out but the call for regular troops was stopped.

THE EUCHARISTIC DEMONSTRATION.

Later.

Protestant organizations have telegraphed

Subsequently he motored through Alsace, receiving ovations from the inhabitants with pealing of bells and strewing of flowers.

Speaking at Colmar, His Majesty said the warmth of his reception had touched him to the heart. Alsace had undergone vicissitudes, but was now able to develop itself undisturbed, protected by the German eagle, "so that my standard of peace may be maintained."

SEVERE FIGHTING AT TABRIZ.

Prince Buelow denounced such writers as insane, and earnestly repudiated any aggressive policy. He ridiculed the assertions that Britain would soon have only slight naval superiority. No German would dream of a quarrel with Britain which would irreparably injure both.

RECOGNITION OF MULAI HAFID.

London, September 15.

TOLSTOY.

London, September 10.

St. Petersburg.—Count Tolstoy celebrates his eightieth birthday to-day amid a chorus of praise from the press and public, although the Holy Synod has forbidden any celebrations, and governors of provinces have followed the same course. One newspaper has been confiscated for attacking the Synod's attitude.

The Governor of Moscow has cancelled the decision of the City Council to found a library in Tolstoy's honour.

Tolstoy spent his birthday quietly with his family and a few friends. Telegrams and messages of congratulation poured in all day. The Count is recovering from his illness but is still weak.

THE INDIANS IN THE TRANSVAAL.

Johannesburg.—The Indians are actively resisting the Exclusion Law in the Transvaal, entering from Natal and when deported returning immediately. Those legally resident are burning their registration certificates by way of protest. The Government steadfastly refuses the demand to admit Asiatics on the same terms as Europeans. The position is exceedingly delicate, but the Imperial Government, wisely, is not interfering.

THE ST. VINCENT.

London, September 12.

An improved Dreadnought, the St Vincent, has been launched at Portsmouth. Of twelve Dreadnoughts projected, two have been laid down, eight launched and two completed. Of nine projected Germany has laid down five, launched two and has none completed.

GERMANY'S FINANCES.

London, September 14.

The condition of Germany's finances is causing anxiety to the Government. The national debt has grown from 80 million sterling in 1877 to 212 millions, the service of which costs 8 millions annually. The succession of loans has caused a dull market and a depression of bonds, and Germany is now unable to borrow unless at 4 per cent. Hence Government proposes to reform, aiming at a reduction of the debt and an increase of revenue. It will effect economies in the administration, and proposes a tax on beer and tobacco as well as gas and electricity, and to increase the death duties. Some newspapers are already demanding a reduction of the expenditure on the navy.

CONDITIONS OF THE RECOGNITION OF MULAI HAFID.

Paris, September 15.

The French and Spanish Note setting forth the conditions of the recognition of Mulai Hafid as Sultan of Morocco has been presented to the Powers. It demands that he shall assume the liabilities of his predecessor, and shall have to restore order. France and Spain will insist on the re-imbursement of the expenditure on the military operations, and will leave the other Powers free.

AMERICA AND IMMIGRANTS.

London, September 17.

The New York Government is about to take the most stringent measures to prevent the entry of Hindus via Canada, by enforcing the law excluding immigrants physically unable to work. Hindus unfitted to do heavy lumbering and railway work would otherwise fall into distress and become public charges.

GERMAN AIRSHIP.

PACIFIC FREIGHT RATES.

In consequence of the decision, arrived at by the conference held during some days past in Seattle by the shipping companies having lines on the Pacific, with reference to rates of freight on goods shipped for and from the East, the South Pacific Company has announced to the authorities concerned that from the 1st of November it will carry the decision into practice. In the case of imports, the rate is as already reported, but in the case of exports it says merely that the inland westward rates will be applied. Cotton, however, is exempted from this rule.

MR. S. NAGASAKI.

New York, September 10.

Mr. S. Nagasaki, an official of the Imperial Household, arrived in New York at 1 p.m. on Sept. 9th. He will stay in the city till Sept. 16th. Mr. Thompson, President of the Copper Refining Company, will hold a garden party in his honour on Sept. 15th, inviting a large number of the prominent citizens and Japanese residents. Mr. Thompson, who is indignant at the New York Herald's proposal of a Sino-American alliance and with its intentionally unfavourable attitude towards Japan, intends to strengthen further the friendly sentiment between Americans and Japanese by promoting the meeting of both, availing himself of the arrival of Mr. Nagasaki on his way to Europe.

MR. HUGHES.

There is now no doubt that Mr. Hughes, the present governor of New York State, will be nominated as candidate for the governorship. The Republican Party held a meeting on Sept. 8th, when Mr. Hughes was welcomed with much popularity. His success in the forthcoming election will be regarded as beneficial to Mr. Taft in the Presidential Election.

JAPANESE IMMIGRANTS.

San Francisco, September 10.

According to the annual immigration returns issued by the United States Government, during the year ended June 30th 9,600 Japanese arrived in that country. This is less than the one-third part of the number landed in the previous year. The decrease is attributed to the negotiations between the American and Japanese governments. The Washington authorities show much satisfaction at the diminution.

MR. TAFT AND MR. BRYAN.

New York, September 11.

The Chicago Trading Union will give a dinner on Oct. 7th to Messrs. Taft and Bryan. Much attention has been attracted among the public on the proposed meeting of the two presidential candidates. It is said that at a time so near the election it has very rarely happened that candidates of the Republican and Democratic Parties have met.

SAGHALIEN.

St. Petersburg, September 11.

The Saghalien Delimitation Treaty will be published on Sept. 12th.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

New York, September 14.

In its issue of Sept. 13th, the New York Herald publishes an estimate of ballots to be won by Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan. The estimate shows the past and present influences of the Republican and Democratic parties throughout the States. The New York journal states that the ballots hitherto won by the Republicans and Democrats were 162 and 114 respectively. The total throughout the States this year is 483, and one half the number of the whole being 242, the Republicans must win 80 over their usual number, and the Democrats 128. According to investigations made Mr. Taft will easily have 206 ballots while Mr. Bryan will obtain 161. Thus the shortages for Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan are respectively 36 and 81, to obtain one half of the estimated amount. The competition between the parties will be to make up the respective deficiencies. Mr. Bryan's shortage—45 less than that of Mr. Taft—is equivalent to 1,300,000 votes in an average election. It is therefore needless to say that Mr. Bryan will have to fight hard for the presidency.

There are still neutral divisions viz., 36 in New York; 15 in Indiana; 13 in Wisconsin; 11 in Minnesota; 8 in West Virginia; 8 in Nebraska; 3 in Utah; 5 in Colorado; and 4 in South Dakota; making a total of 116 in all. It is at present anticipated that Mr. Taft will have 55 of these, with the result that his number is 19 over the half of the whole ballot throughout the States. The Democrats have prepared for a desperate struggle in the southern States, where they are strongest.

GOVERNORSHIP OF NEW YORK.

The question of the election of a governor for New York is not yet settled. On Sept. 14th, various representatives held a conference. General Woodhall, a leader of the supporters of Mr. Hughes, and Mr. Woodruff, a leader of the opposition, delivered vehement speeches. Mr. Root, Secretary of State, who presided, gave an address in which he proposed the re-election of Mr. Hughes, and also commented on the platform of the Democrats. On the same day, President Roosevelt issued a declaration in support of Mr. Hughes. On Sept. 15th, another meeting will be held to nominate the candidates. The Independents under Mr. Hearst condemn Mr. Bryan, but are not supporting Mr. Hughes.

NEWS FROM RUSSIA.

St. Petersburg, September 15.

Martial law now in force in various districts will be maintained for two years more. This is attributed to the re-establishing of the influence of the reactionaries.

A new convention will be concluded between Russia and France as the result of the recent visit of Mr. Iswolsky, Russian Minister, to Paris.

A Serbian Prince has arrived in St. Petersburg to attend the Preparatory Military College.

GOVERNORSHIP OF NEW YORK.

New York, September 15.

Mr. Hughes, the present governor, has been re-elected by a large majority. His success is attributed to the efforts of President Roosevelt on his behalf. Prior to the nomination meeting, the President summoned the leaders of the opposition and reminded them that the election for the governorship has a close bearing on the presidential election.

TWO JAPANESE FISHING BOATS SEIZED.

San Francisco, September 15.

It is reported from Washington that an American guard ship has seized two Japanese fishing boats with crews of 40 in all, within three nautical miles of St. Paul Island on Sept. 15th. The poachers will be taken to Alaska and thence to Valdez (?) where they will undergo examination. One of the fishing vessels contained several hundred raw hides, and some boats carried by them were stained with blood, which facts were taken as sufficient evidence that the Japanese were fishing within the prohibited zone.

On the 22nd inst., at No. 157, Bluff, to Mr. and Mrs. WILLIAM KING, a Son.

SUMMARY OF NEWS.

THE volcano Asama is active. Ashes fell heavily in the district of Komoro.

MR. Y. YAMAZA, the new councillor to the Embassy in London, arrived there on Sept. 21st.

SEPT. 23rd was a Japanese holiday, the shukikworei-sai or autumn festival for the worship of the Imperial Ancestors.

THE Aki-no-higan or autumnal equinox passed on Sept. 20th. Buddhist festivals will take place for seven days.

PROCEEDINGS are about to be begun at Shanghai in an action for alleged libel against Mr. Henry O'Shea, editor of the China Gazette.

It is reported by the Dampo that Captain C. Stewart, who has been appointed to command the Toyo Kisen Kaisha's new American liner

Chiyo Maru (sister-ship to the Tenyo Maru), arrived at Nagasaki on Nov. 22nd.

A TROOPER of the French Municipal Police in Shanghai was bitten by a dog on Sept. 11th and died on the 13th from hydrophobia.

THE Hon. Mr. Wei Yuk was invested at Hongkong on Sept. 9th with the insignia of a C. M. G. by Sir Frederick Lugard, the Governor.

ACCORDING to Japanese papers, Mr. Robert Clive, third secretary of the British Embassy, has been promoted to the rank of second secretary.

A GERMAN Consulate was opened on Sept. 17th at Shimonoseki. The jurisdiction includes Hiroshima, Yamaguchi, Fukuoka and Oita prefectures.

THE Osaka Hotel, which was established by the Osaka City Office a few years ago, was purchased on Sept. 23rd by Mr. Otsuka, who was hitherto acting as Manager.

A MAN was found on the evening of Sept. 17th crushed to death on the railway near Fujisawa. The police believe that he was run over by a train while attempting to cross the line.

ON the night of Sept. 21st two freight trains collided at Kameido station, on the Kofu Railway. The locomotive and three wagons of one of the trains were severely damaged.

THE American squadron, consisting of the Concord, Chattanooga, Galveston and the transport Rainbow, under Rear-Admiral Harvard, arrived at Nagasaki on Sept. 22nd from Chefoo.

A COOLIE employed on the North China liner Mori Maru now at Yokohama fell to the bottom of the third hold on Sept. 18th while trying to remove its hatch. Death was instantaneous.

THE Nichi Nichi says that Mr. Cockburn, British Consul-General in Seoul, and his family, arrived at Tsuruga on Sept. 18th. They left there on the following day for Vladivostok on their way home.

VICE-ADMIRAL TRUPPEL, Governor of Kiaochow, arrived in Tokyo on Sept. 20th, where he put up at the German Embassy. It is reported by a Tokyo paper that he will stay in Tokyo for about two weeks.

ON Sept. 22nd, several persons were arrested at Hiroshima on a charge of having counterfeited a number of 5-yen notes. A telegram to the Hochi says that some prominent persons in the city are connected with the crime.

ON the morning of Sept. 20th, a passenger train collided with a wagon containing five workmen, in the second tunnel on the Kyoto Railway. The wagon was overturned, two of the workmen were killed, and three were severely injured.

It is understood that the honorary secretary of the Foreign Merchants Silk Piece Goods Association of Yokohama, Mr. Percy C. Colman, has received intimation that the Government has decided to recognize the association as a juridical person.

AN explosive substance was thrown into a car of a train about 8.10 a.m. on Sept. 17th while running between Maiko and Shiyoa on the Sanyo Railway. Three of the passengers were severely injured. Two coolies were arrested in connexion with the crime.

ACCORDING to Japanese papers, the Government intends to deal strictly with betting at various race clubs after Oct. 1st, when the new Penal Code is to come into force. Under this law the punishment for gambling is heavier than under the present Criminal Code. The papers add that the special control over the betting will include the prohibition of pari mutuel business, and consequently the prohibition of races.

THE project to lay an electric railway along the Bund, Yokohama, in connexion with the reception to the American Fleet, has been abandoned in deference to the wishes of foreign residents. The construction of the temporary piers, however, is being proceeded with.

ALL former residents as well as those now living here will be interested to know that the Honmoku Lightship, for so long warning steamers off the neighbouring shoals, and commonly called the Red Lightship, was removed on Saturday. She is replaced by a lighted cage buoy.

AN ALARM OF FIRE was raised this morning from the premises of Messrs. M. Raspe & Co., No. 199 Yamashita-cho. On the arrival of the firemen with a hose and an escape, it was found that the outbreak, which but for its timely discovery might have been serious, had been extinguished.

WE understand that Capt. C. T. S. Filmer of the Hongkong Maru, who arrived in Yokohama the other day, has resigned from the Toyo Kisen Kaisha's service. He leaves on the 22nd by the America Maru for San Francisco, where he has very promising business prospects in partnership with his brother-in-law. Capt. Filmer will be greatly missed in Yokohama.

IN connexion with the recent lock-out of the spinning factories in Lancashire, the Osaka correspondent of the Hochi says that it will not affect the cotton spinning industry in Japan, as the quality of the Japanese and British cotton piece goods, to be exported to China and Korea, is different. If the lock-out continues for a long time a fall will be noted in raw cotton.

The manoeuvres will be held about the beginning of November, in Settsu Kawachi and Idzumi provinces, the centre of which zone is Osaka. The Emperor will be present until the conclusion. Later he will remove to Kyoto where he will reside until Nov. 19th. The naval review will be held at Kobe on the following day.

IN connexion with the application made by several capitalists of Yokohama for permission to make a reclamation—about 120,000 tsubo—along the breakwater off Kanagawa, and for building warehouses and sheds thereon, the Yokohama Naval office recently informed the Kanagawa prefectural office that the proposed reclamation would interfere with defensive measures which the naval authorities had still under consideration.

AN instance of Chinese patriotism is reported in Tokyo. On Sept. 20th, a Chinese student named Chang attempted to destroy a board inscribed Haifun-kun-so (naval office), by Li Hungchang, which was taken at Port Arthur as a prize during the Japan-China war and later was kept in the Tokyo military museum. The Chinese student was disheartened by seeing this board exhibited at the museum. The Kanda police promptly arrested him. After a petition by his colleagues, he was released with a warning.

KOREA.

Friday, September 18.

The Asahi Shimbun's Seoul correspondent sends to that journal a rather curious article on the subject of the Kapsan mine. He sets out by saying that the Americans who have concessions for the electric trams, the electric lighting and the water works in Seoul, command but a small stock of capital and have of late become embarrassed in the presence of keen Japanese competition. They have therefore been carrying on a strong campaign through the agency of their country's missionaries in Korea, the Korean colony in San Francisco, and such organs as the Dai Han Mai-N Shunpo for the purpose of discrediting the Japanese and bringing them into disfavour. To put an end to this campaign the Residency General gave to Messrs. Colbran, Bostwick and Co. the concession of the Kapsan mine in spite of the fact that some influential Japanese capitalists had applied for it. The mine is valued at 2 million yen, and according to this correspondent, people in Korea are asking whether such a large sop was necessary to placate the American Cerberus. We (Japan Mail) have no doubt that in the above matter the Residency General acted in accordance with the principles of strict justice.

Professor Kochibe, who has just returned from a tour of inspection in Korea, reports that mining prospects are better in the north of the country than in the south. He mentions that there are four or five black-lead mines now being worked. Some of them are Japanese, but the latter have small command of capital and are consequently unable to make the enterprise profitable. Deposits of smokeless coal crop out at various places in the vicinity of Pyong-yang through a region 50 miles long by 7 or 8 in width. This is a highly valuable deposit. For the rest nearly all the most promising mines are in the hands of foreigners. Thus the Americans have a gold mine at Unsan; the Germans one at Chihunchon; the French one at Changan; the English one at Hwison; the Italians a copper mine at a place which we can not decipher; Messrs. Colbran Bostwick & Co. a gold mine at Suwon; Dr. Harris a gold mine at Chosan; Mr. Gessler a gold mine at Ungchhon, and lately Messrs. Colbran, Bostwick and Co. obtained the very valuable concession of the Kapsan copper mine. On the other hand, on the Japanese side there are only the gold mines worked by Baron Shibusawa and Mr. Okura and one small copper mine in the hands of another Japanese. This is an interesting list. Everyone who has followed the course of affairs in the Far East knows what an outcry was raised at one time, especially by the Korea Daily News and the Korean Review, in the sense that all the mining industry of Korea was being monopolised by Japanese, and when the new mining law was promulgated in 1906, these critics denounced it as a weapon intended to exclude all foreigners from participation in this kind of enterprise. Yet now when the facts come to be investigated, it appears that practically the whole mining enterprise of Korea is in the hands of Europeans and Americans. Professor Kochibe says that in his opinion it would pay far better to develop the mining resources of the Peninsula than to engage in agriculture. If that be so, it follows that the material development of the country is in Occidental hands.

It is the custom with a Korean Monarch to make the tour of the three Imperial Shrines in order to announce his succession to the Throne. The present sovereign should have taken this step last year, but he was prevented by illness. It is expected that he will shortly set out and perform the necessary ceremony at Suwon, though his visit to the more distant shrines may be deferred.

The Hochi Shimbun now denies that Vice-count Sone is to have the portfolio of Finance.

Saturday, September 19.

The sentence of death recently passed upon the insurgent leader, Ho Ui, has been confirmed by the Court of Appeal in Seoul, but will perhaps be carried to the Court of Cassation. This man was originally a secretary of the Privy Council, and he belongs to a noble family. He is said to have objected strongly to being tried by a tribunal having Japanese judges on the bench.

It is stated that the Patents Bureau in the Residency-General in Seoul has decided not to register at the instance of Japanese applicants any foreign trade-marks already in use. This matter seems to have caused much concern to British and German merchants in Korea, inasmuch as the operation of the new Trade-marks Convention between Japan and the United States seemed likely to cause considerable disadvantage to Powers which had not yet negotiated similar protection for their own trade-marks. The decision now attributed to the Patents Bureau will correct the situation.

On the alleged authority of an informant who is said to be fully versed in the affairs of the Il Ching-hoi, the Asahi Shimbun publishes a statement of the reasons which induced the present visit of that Party's leader to Japan. The account given by this informant is that when Prince Ito first went to Korea he looked askance at the Il Ching-hoi, but on close examination of their programme, and after conference with their leaders, he entirely changed his view, and recognised them as friends of civilised progress. Viscount Sone's attitude towards them, however, is at best apathetic, and the Il Ching-hoi are consequently much perturbed at the thought that the Residency General may soon fall under the complete control of the Viscount. Regarded by the insurgents as essentially the pro-Japanese party in Korea, the Il Ching-hoi have suffered and are still suffering very heavily from the insurrection, and it would be at least fair to recognise that their advocacy of progress and of Japan's guidance is responsible for many of the evils which have overtaken them.

Sunday, September 20.

It is stated that the Korean Government is about to legislate for the control of printed matter of an incendiary character entering the country from abroad.

Ho, the insurgent leader who was condemned to death on the 18th inst., has announced his resolve not to appeal against the sentence. He declares that he has always been prepared to die for his country, and that he has no desire to postpone the sacrifice. The remaining three insurgents who were recently tried will be sentenced on the 22nd instant.

The Fiji Shunpo's Seoul correspondent wires that, although the strength of the insurgents has been practically broken, and although the period of grace allowed for their repentance expires at the close of this month, numerous small bands mustering from 10 to 30 are operating here and there throughout the provinces, and are giving considerable trouble.

A Japanese policeman and his wife, who were on their way from Pyongyang to the constable's new post, were set upon by insurgents. The man was seriously injured, and the woman brutally murdered. It is characteristic that the foreign publicists who find so many attractive epithets to apply to the insurgents in Korea carefully avoid all mention of the fact that in the eyes of these patriots women and children are as fair game as armed men.

The Fiji has a wire from Seoul saying that the water-works which are in the hands of an English Syndicate have nearly been carried to completion, but owing to the high rates charged, there have been very few applications from private persons.

Monday, September 21.

For some time past rumours have been circulated to the effect that political intrigues to oust the present Cabinet are prevalent in Seoul. These sort of rumours have become habitual whenever the Resident General is absent in Japan, and the fact may be taken as proving what a tranquillizing influence Prince Ito's presence has upon the Koreans. Before Japan took the country under her tutelage, intriguing for power used apparently to be the regular occupation of all leading men inside or outside the ranks of officialdom, and it was this that made the situation so perilous, inasmuch as the different political parties were willing to join hands with any outside Power which might serve as a foot-stool for hoisting them into office.

The Nagasaki Press states that at a meeting of foreign merchants held in Chemulpo on Sept. 15th the following letter was agreed upon and sent the following day to the Director of the Patent Bureau of the Residency General at Seoul:—

We, the undersigned, have the honour to inform you that it having been brought to our notice that applications have been lodged by Japanese subjects for the registration of trade marks belonging to and used for many years by British, German, and other Foreign Firms doing business in Korea, take leave to enquire whether it is the intention of your Bureau to grant such registration?

As it is a subject of the very greatest importance to us, we shall thank you to kindly favour us with a reply to this question by return of mail.

Tuesday, September 22.

Recent appearances indicated that the question of appointing mayors of Japanese municipalities in Korea had been satisfactorily settled, the Japanese residents having recognised the advisability of the official nomination system. It would seem, however, that this conclusion was premature. A meeting of residents was held in Seoul on the 20th inst., and it was decided that all the municipalities should combine for the purpose of promoting the elective system.

With regard to the insurrection in Korea, we read in the Chuo Shimbun that, owing to the exertions of the eight regiments of Japanese infantry, the gendarmarie, the police and the assistant gendarmes now operating in Korea, the insurrection has been brought virtually to a conclusion. Considerable difficulty has been experienced, however, in dealing with the Tumen leader, Yi Ponyun, and the band of men under his command. Their method of crossing the river for raiding purposes, and taking refuge in Russian territory so soon as any Japanese troops came in sight, made it impossible for the latter to strike a decisive blow. Application was accordingly made to the Russian Government to prevent such an abuse of its hospitality, and Russia having taken the necessary steps, Yi and his followers have been obliged to find a hiding place among the forests of the Long White Mountain. It can not yet, however, be confidently hoped that the withdrawal of the troops would not be followed by a recrudescence of the trouble, and it has therefore been decided—we still quote the Chuo—to keep the time-expired men in the field until their reliefs become conversant with the ground and the conditions. In ordinary circumstances October would be the month for withdrawing the time-expired men and replacing them by recruits. But it is evident that very special value attaches to experiences garnered in the discharge of duties such as those that fall to the lot of troops engaged in this sort of work. Therefore we can well understand a slight postponement of the exchange.

Wednesday, September 23.

It is stated that the nefarious device of employing explosives for killing fish is gaining vogue in Korean waters, and threatens to have most injurious effects. The attempts of the water-police to check this abuse having proved ineffective, the Japanese Government has entrusted the duty to the naval authorities, with instructions to arrest anybody found so engaged.

A Japanese resident of Gensan, Mr. Yoshida Hidejiro, is said to have received from the Korean Government a subsidy of 17,000 yen annually for three years on condition that he establishes a line of steamers between that port and Unkw Bay, at the mouth of the Tumen River. The steamers are to be not less than 1,800 tons burden, and are to make three trips monthly.

The Kokumin Shinbun says that between October, 1907, and August, 1908, the casualties on the side of the Japanese engaged in dealing with the insurgents were 83 killed and 187 wounded. Among the killed 8 were gendarmes and among the wounded, 15.

Mr. Yi Yongkyu was entertained by the members of the Kojinsha—the oldest club in Tokyo, established by the late Mr. Fukuzawa—on the evening of the 22nd instant. In his speech he said that this is his 9th visit to Japan, and after thanking his hosts for the honour they had done him, he went on to remark that the Korean nation is profoundly grateful to Prince Ito and the officials of the Residency-General for leading the Government along the right path, and for giving to the Korean people security of life and property. The Il Ching-hoi are universally recognised as friends of progress, and therefore as animated by the best feelings towards Japan. They stand in the position of vigilant observers of the Administration's methods. On the other hand, it cannot be denied that the Korean Cabinet is under the control of the Residency-General, and that the latter must be associated with the former's procedure. Therefore for any mistakes made by the Cabinet, the Residency-General has to bear more or less responsibility. Unfortunately, however, the Japanese who stand in the position of advisors are not as a rule acquainted with the Korean language, and it is difficult in these circumstances to avoid misunderstandings. Just, therefore, as the Il Ching-hoi perform an observant function towards the Korean Government, so it is to be hoped that the Japanese people will observe and assist the doings of the Residency-General.

It will be seen that if Mr. Yi is rightly reported, there is a certain note of discontent in his utterances, the gist only of which is given above. But it is not at all improbable that the reports of his speech are more or less misleading.

Thursday, September 24.

Another insurgent leader, Yi Konyong, has been condemned to death in Seoul. This man, who is described as about 50 years of age, seems to have acted a very important part in the insurrection. His authority was recognised by the rebels in three provinces, and he moved about from place to place directing the operations. It is said that when sentence was pronounced, he protested vehemently against it, on the ground that he had loyally performed his duty to his country and had been one of those instrumental in organising the patriotic band known as the Wi Pyong. There is unquestionably something very sad in the story of these Korean insurgents. They honestly believe that they are fighting for their country's cause and we cannot wonder that many good people sympathise with them. They have often disgraced themselves by the cruel murder of women and children, but then they are not supposed to be acquainted with, still less to obey, all the canons of modern civilization, seeing that they have lived so long in seclusion from the rest of the world. But what is to be done? The car of progress has to advance, and is doomed to crush those that refuse to move with it.

We observe that the Japan Chronicle continues to publish its Seoul correspondent's comments on the Yang case, which is sub judice. The latest of these comments is as follows:—

The Yang Kitak case still drags its weary length along. Yesterday morning there was a long examination of Mr. Bethell, which only resulted in showing clearly that Mr. Yang was innocent and should never have been arrested and kept in prison for two months. Mr. Marnham, who was acting as advocate for Mr. Yang, swooned just before Mr. Bethell had completed his evidence. He struck his head badly as he fell and was unconscious for half-an-hour, but is now on the way to recovery. The conditions of the Court are most trying; with the room full of spectators the atmosphere soon becomes vitiated, and with the windows all closed, as they were yesterday, even the strongest constitution must suffer. It was under these conditions that Mr. Bethell was kept standing for four solid hours during his examination. There were several passages at arms between the witness and the procurator, as, although the Court had acknowledged that Mr. Bethell came voluntarily as a witness, and was under no compulsion, the Procurator persisted in treating him as hostile, and even went so far as to describe one of his replies as "suspicious." Neither Mr. Mackenzie of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank nor Mr. Collbran attended, although the Court had asked their respective Consuls to arrange for their attendance. In my opinion their refusal was justified—more especially in the case of Mr. Collbran, whose large banking business with Korean clients would be seriously injured should the impression obtain that his books were liable to public examination at the bidding of a Japanese Court. (I say "Japanese Court" advisedly.)

Thus Mr. Yang, who is actually undergoing trial, is not only declared "innocent," but also it is said that "he never ought to have been arrested," and finally the court is held up to contempt as "Japanese." Yet there are publicists who have the extreme effrontery to blame Mr. Preston for saying that several of the foreign journals published in Japan are anti-Japanese.

SAGHALIEN.

The Governor of Saghalien, Mr. Hiraoka, has organised a committee for the purpose of investigating the resources of Saghalien. It appears that these consist of four things, namely, coal, timber, marine products and land. As to coal there is said to be a vein extending to a distance of about 60 miles from a region some 13 miles inland from Pustak to Tokorioroff, and large deposits have also been found near Notoro and on the banks of the Siska River. It is said that two million tons a year can be taken out without difficulty, and that the supply is practically inexhaustible. With regard to timber, the forests cover an area of 5½ million acres, and when all allowances are made for conservation purposes, three million cubic feet can be felled annually on the basis of a hundred year programme, which if pursued, would keep the supply constantly renewed. Marine products are not spoken of in such optimistic terms. It seems to be thought that unless measures of preservation are carefully followed, the supply of fish may become exhausted. With regard to colonization, the lands actually available for agricultural purposes measure about 250,000 acres, but additional areas could undoubtedly be reclaimed. Nevertheless, taking all things into consideration and making ample allowances of land for colonists, it is calculated that the above four sources of wealth will not suffice for a population of much more than 200,000 persons. This is on the supposition that each household of colonists farms 15 or 16 acres of land. It need hardly be added that a large amount of capital is needed to develop the resources of the island. Mr. Hiraoka, who furnishes the above information, says that if any small capitalists go to Saghalien with the idea of making money quickly, they will be much disappointed, but if men with really large command of money take the matter in hand, success is certain. He speaks of a sum of 20 million yen being needed, and his language suggests that there is a fine opportunity for the organisation of a company on the lines of Marquis Katsura's Takushoku Kaisha.

AN APPRECIATION OF GERMANY.

Mr. Heki, Counsellor of the Japanese Embassy in Germany, speaking at a meeting of the Japanese Economic Society on the 19th inst., condemned in strong terms the tendency that prevails among his countrymen to form a false estimate of Germany's mood towards Japan. The fact that after the War with China Germany joined the Triple Alliance which expelled Japan from Liaotung could but rankle in the minds of the Japanese people. But that is a thirteen-year-old story, and may well be forgotten in the presence of Germany's demeanour ever since. Unfortunately for Germany nearly all the telegraphic news supplied to the world is in the English language, and its great collector is Reuter's Agency which—so Mr. Heki says—has always shown itself hostile to Germany. As for the Japanese, they have not much opportunity of forming a judgment about Germany at first hand because red tape prevails so much in that country that travel is distinctly difficult. But it is only necessary to look at Germany's achievements during the past 30 years to conceive a profound respect for her, and anyone who has lived in Germany long enough to form a judgment must recognise her people as probably the most industrious and most frugal in the world. Mr. Heki spoke with admiration of the navy which Germany is building up, adduced statistics in proof of her remarkable material progress, and explained the process of taxation by which she is enabled to defray the immense outlays demanded by her very efficient policy of self-protection.

In all this Mr. Heki echoes what had been said with equal earnestness and ability by Mr. Inouye, on his return from the Embassy in Berlin.

FURTHER cases of cholera were reported on Sept. 17th at Moji.

CHINA.

Friday, September 18.

The news is confirmed of the death of his Excellency General Ma, Viceroy of Pehchihli. General Baron Fukushima recalls the part played by the deceased in the war of 1894-5 when he commanded the Chinese Army at Asan, Pyongyang and Kiulienching. He also commanded the troops which opposed the three Powers at Tientsin in the Boxer troubles, and on that occasion his men fought so stoutly that they killed 80 out of one company of Japanese and the company found itself entirely without officers. Ma was essentially a soldier. He had comparatively little book learning, but he undoubtedly possessed considerable strategic ability. His Excellency is said to have died of cholera.

The outbreak of plague at Tongsan (near Tientsin) seems to be developing serious dimensions. From the commencement of the trouble up to the 16th instant there were 60 cases, out of which 80 per cent. proved fatal, and it is believed that many instances of concealment are probably taking place. Strenuous measures of sanitation have been adopted to check the spread of the malady, but they are not expected to prove effectual.

The citizens of Peking have decided to hold a grand meeting on the 19th instant to celebrate the granting of a constitution.

Steps are now about to be taken for valuing the plant set up by the Japanese on the banks of the Yalu for purposes of timber-felling. Mr. Hashiguchi, head of the Forestry Bureau in the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, has left Tokyo to superintend the work of valuation. It is expected that the sum involved will amount to 700,000 or 800,000 yen. This is to stand to the credit of the Japanese Government in the capital account.

Mr. Sakai, who is to officiate as Japanese consul at Tsitsihar, has just returned from a visit to that place. He is reported as saying that there are about 140 Japanese residing there, among whom are many druggists, the rest being restaurant keepers. Japanese credit does not stand very high in the place. A German syndicate is engaged in constructing a light railway from the station on the trans-Asian line to the town, a distance of some 13 miles.

Saturday, September 19.

News comes from the Province of Fukien that owing to the long drought which has prevailed in that province there is very acute distress among the lower orders. A riot has taken place in the north of the province, and the town of Kienyang seems to have been partially looted by the rioters. Some of the local officials are said to have been killed.

It is stated that on the 23rd inst. an examination will be held in Peking to determine the qualifications of about 100 students who have just returned from completing their studies in Europe and America.

Tokyo newspapers publish a telegram from Peking saying that the British Government has instructed its Representative in China to investigate the possibility of following the example of the United States in restoring to China a part of the Boxer indemnity. This is difficult to believe. While fully admiring America's upright conduct in this matter, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that her original estimate of expenses incurred in connexion with the Boxer trouble must have been greatly in excess of her actual outlays, whereas the agreement among the Powers at the time was that in making out their bills of cost the basis should be money veritably out of pocket. When the demands of each of the Powers were made public, very flagrant discrepancies were observed, and it became palpable either that there had been considerable overcharging on the part of some of the claimants, or that there was a very great difference between the competence of the various Powers to conduct military operations on an economical scale. Great Britain's demand was conspicuously moderate, considering the large part she had taken in the campaign, and it is not at all likely that any surplus remained to her after defraying her outlays. Moreover, seven years have passed since the amounts of the indemnities were fixed, and the methods of English financiers in general warrant us in thinking that, had there been any margin worth mentioning in the account, the fact would have been discovered ere now. Finally, it is not in Peking that these investigations would be made, but at the War Office and the Admiralty in London.

Sunday, September 20.

It is alleged that the Peking Government has decided to increase the amount of aid granted to the Hupoh Hospital by 200,000 taels, but that there will be a grand sifting of the arsenal officials and employees.

On the 19th inst. the ceremony of closing the Forestry Bureau of the Japanese Government in the Yalu valley was performed with much éclat. About 300 persons were present.

Monday, September 21.

It is officially reported that the crops in the three provinces of Shantung, Pehchihli, and Honan will be below the average this year. The Government Inspector states that in 52 districts the crops are plentiful, in 22 fair, and in 36 bad. Tsining in Shantung seems to be specially unfortunate. The rice crop was attacked by a parasite whose ravages the people worked hard to check, actually burning the crop in some places to kill the pest, but without success. In Honan there was a drought in the spring followed by inundations in the summer, and these things being supplemented by marked depreciation of copper cash, have produced so much distress that the Inspector reports unquiet conditions. In Pehchihli the Viceroy is attempting to lower the price of cereals officially, and troops have been sent to the districts where signs of disturbance are visible. All this, it is feared, will have an injurious effect upon trade with North China.

The pest seems to have established itself strongly at Tangshan. It is reported to be specially virulent among the workmen in the coal mines and at the cement factory, and as these men come for the most part from Canton, the supposition is that the disease has been imported thence. Over 80 per cent. of the cases prove fatal, and as cremation is unknown in China, effective preventive measures are very difficult to adopt. The Consuls of the various Powers have issued warnings to their nationals recommending precautions.

Tuesday, September 22.

Mr. Tang Shaoi, the Special Envoy who is proceeding to the United States to return China's thanks for America's action with regard to the Boxer indemnity, is to set out from Peking on the 23rd inst., and will leave Shanghai for Japan on the 1st of October, according to the present programme.

Dr. Takagi, the head of the Medical School in Formosa, is to be the Japanese delegate to the Conference which will be held in Shanghai at the beginning of next year with reference to the best method of dealing with the opium problem. The Conference takes place at the instance of the United States Government, and the three Powers represented will be America, England and Japan. Dr. Takagi, quoted by Japanese newspapers, declares himself unequivocally in favour of the gradual system of suppression hitherto successfully pursued in Formosa, as against the instantaneous system adopted by the United States in the Philippines. He points out that a most thoroughly efficient police force is necessary to carry out anything like heroic measures in such a case, and he also makes a remark which we have not heard from any other quarter, namely, that one of China's great difficulties in putting an end to the opium habit is the want of competent medical practitioners throughout the Empire. Dr. Takagi says that opium-smoking prevails greatly in more or less out-of-the-way places where, medical assistance not being available, the people use the drug as a means of curing or alleviating disease. If opium is to be forbidden to these people, humanity requires that medical aid should be brought within their reach. He lays a good deal of stress too on the cultivation of the poppy. The British Government in the face of great financial inconvenience may agree to veto the export of the drug from India, but that step must prove abortive so long as Persia and Turkey are free to send supplies to China. Dr. Takagi justly insists that the opium problem is not one of humane sentiment only, but it also involves economic considerations. From what he says we conclude that Japan's voice will be emphatically raised at the Conference in favour of the gradual system of suppression employed by herself in Formosa.

The present so-called University of Peking is understood to be merely a preparatory institution, and the Chinese authorities are now said to be about to organise four colleges constituting the nucleus of the University itself, namely, the colleges of Natural Philosophy, Literature, Law and Political Economy. Accounts vary as to the money which has been appropriated for the purpose, some putting it at 670,000 yen, and some at 800,000. It is stated that the President of the University and two other members of the Hanlin College are about to visit Japan and make a three months' sojourn here for the purpose of investigating the organization of the Tokyo and Kyoto Universities. They will be accompanied by Mr. Hsia, a graduate of the Imperial University of Tokyo, and it is expected that they will be largely guided by the information they collect here in organizing the Peking Institution.

Wednesday, September 23.

Recently optimistic views were published with reference to the anti-Japanese boycott in South China, but these views are not confirmed by the Asahi Shimbun's latest news. That journal says that a lot of ginseng—5000 catties—was recently purchased by Chinese merchants in Yokohama and sent to Hongkong, but on arrival there, a number of boycotters assembled, and opposed the landing of the consignment. The Chinese merchants to whom the ginseng was consigned attempted to engage an English barrister with the object of obtaining an injunction from the court to prevent such opposition, but the barrister declined to take the brief, and the ginseng had to be sent back to Yokohama, thus inflicting heavy loss on its original purchasers.

A telegram to the Asahi Shimbun from Shanghai says that the Chinese Government has decided to borrow English capital for the purpose of paying off the debt to the Belgian Syndicate which is now operating the Lu Han Railway. This can hardly be called news, except in so far as the nationality of the proposed loan is concerned. The money originally lent by the Belgian Syndicate was on the security of the line, with the further condition that the operating of the road should be in the hands of the Syndicate, the latter receiving 20 per cent. of the net profits after the interest on the loan had been paid. This arrangement is valid until the year 1908, after which the Chinese Government is entitled to pay off the debt and take the operation of the line into its own hands. Naturally there are many capitalists who would be willing to lend the money on better terms, and naturally also the Chinese Government is anxious to make a better bargain for itself. Therefore we believe that the determination to seek capital for paying off the debt on the line was taken some time ago.

Mr. Tang Shaoi is expected to arrive in Yokohama on the 9th of October. He will spend a month in Tokyo and will resume his journey westward on the 11th of November.

It is stated that the income of the South Manchuria Railway for the six months ended August last showed an increase of 30 per cent. on the side of goods and a decrease of 40 per cent. on the side of passengers. This diminution is attributed to the fact that through connexion via Mukden and Hsinmintun was only recently established.

It will be remembered that some time ago 105 Chinese students were expelled from the Shimbu Gakko, which is under the Presidency of General Baron Fukushima. We read in Japanese papers that his Excellency Mr. Hu, the new Chinese Minister, used his good offices to procure re-admission for these students to the Shimbu Gakko, with the exception of the ringleaders of the demonstration which led to their expulsion. The authorities of the school, however, being well informed as to the dissolute life led by many of the students, refused to admit them to the School, and the students have endeavoured to retaliate by circulating a manifesto which alleges that, in view of the great deterioration of Japanese military men since the war with Russia, there is nothing to be gained by seeking instruction in Japan, and therefore they have determined to return to their own country and to establish there a military school where instructors of Western nationality will be employed. This essentially sour-grapes procedure is said to be strongly condemned by the authorities of the Chinese Legation, and it finally settles the question of these students' re-admission to a Japanese school.

Thursday, September 24.

The telegraph says that several banks in Mukden have closed their doors owing to the bad times.

The correspondent of the New York Herald in the Far East is said to have reached Mukden in the course of his pilgrimage to the shrine of the Sino-American Alliance. We frankly admire the perseverance of this gentleman and his employers. There is no reason whatever to object to a Sino-American Alliance in itself. It would be an excellent thing, conducing very much to China's benefit and helping the solution of many questions not unlikely to arise in the future. The objectionable feature is that the Alliance is openly directed against Japan. America is openly invited by the Herald agitators to join hands with China against Japan's hypothetical aggressions. America will never do that. In the first place, she will not antagonise her old friend Japan for the sake of placating China, and in the second place, she knows that China is already protected against foreign aggression by the Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

The pest continues its ravages at the Tangshan mine. It is said that there are 15 deaths daily. The mine has been closed and the workers are reported to be flying from the scene.

Amid all the conflicting rumours that have reached Tokyo during the last few months about the movements of the Dalai Lama, the latest appears to be the most trustworthy, namely, that he was to leave Wutaishan on the 23rd inst. and be received in Peking on the 27th. It has been stated that the visit of the Pontiff to the Chinese capital is at the instance of the Peking Government, which desires by this step to emphasise the fact of China's suzerainty. But there is another, and to our mind, a more credible explanation: the Dalai Lama himself probably hopes that the nature of his reception in Peking will re-habilitate him in the eyes of the Buddhist world. He needs rehabilitation. His flight from Thibet at the sound of a foreign invasion and his wanderings for years in what may be called the deserts of Central Asia are proceedings decidedly detrimental to his dignity as the great hierarch of Buddhism. The evil traces of this period of humiliation would be largely effaced were he accorded by the Chinese Emperor a reception such as that given to his predecessor in the 18th Century. The Chinese Sovereign then went out of the City to greet the Dalai Lama. It is not likely that His Majesty Kwansu will follow that precedent, but nevertheless he may invest the welcome with features which will go a long way towards regilding the tarnished tiara of the Buddhist Pontiff.

There is intelligence from Mongolia, which though not of any special importance in itself, may probably be regarded as the straw that indicates the direction of the current. The telegraph says that Russian peripatetic merchants, alias pedlars, are unable to ply their trade in Mongolia securely, owing to the attacks of bandits, and that Russia has sent soldiers to deal with the nuisance. China is said to have protested against this latter step as ultra vires. Very likely China has protested, though one imagines that by this time she ought to have learned the futility of expecting to have her sovereignty recognised in regions where her occupation is ineffective. There are two truths irrevocably established by history. They are that every nation must either expand or shrink, and that its expansion follows the line of least resistance. Nobody can suppose that Russia has reached the stage of shrinkage. On the contrary she is in the stage of vigorous expansion. Some years ago, she found, or imagined that she had found, her line of least resistance in the direction of Manchuria. But that has been changed, and as far as Central Asia is concerned, the line now unquestionably lies in the direction of Mongolia. This question of the travelling merchants and the troops to protect them is a very ordinary historical episode, but it ought to have considerable significance for China. As for Russia, it is foolish to charge her with deliberately aggressive designs. We do not believe that she is any more aggressive than England herself. But neither Power can defy the law of nature.

THE Toyo Kisen Kaisha's new steamer, Chiyo Maru, will run her trials on Oct. 10th off Nagasaki.

HONESTY.

The whirlwind of abuse periodically levied at the head of the Japan Mail by its amiable local contemporaries is always amusing but sometimes its extreme dishonesty becomes shocking. There does not seem to be the smallest respect for truth in the moral make-up of our kindly critics, and one cannot choose but be solicitous lest their extraordinary unscrupulousness should extend to matters with which the criminal code undertakes to deal. We should be sorry to witness a catastrophe of that kind, and therefore we are moved to say a word. In its issue of the 22nd instant the Japan Herald quotes:—

After the way it has recently backed up the "Canadian Trade Commissioner," Mr. W. T. R. Preston, in his depreciation of foreign merchants and the foreign Press of Japan (including the Mail itself), we are not surprised that it should lend itself to depreciate the valuable services rendered to Japan by foreigners in other departments.

This paragraph contains three of the most transparent falsehoods we have ever seen in print. When the editor of the Japan Herald alleges that this journal "backed up the Canadian Trade Commissioner in his depreciation of foreign merchants" it deliberately violates the first principles of veracity. The Japan Mail has never made the remotest allusion to the Canadian Trade Commissioner's "depreciation of foreign merchants." It has never written one word on the subject. The Japan Herald's allegation is a pure invention, an invention of the most despicable description.

The second falsehood is that the Canadian Commissioner included the Japan Mail in his depreciation of the foreign press of Japan. He did nothing of the kind. He expressly used the qualifier "some." His words were:—"This is specially noticeable as regards newspapers published in foreign languages, some of which are controlled or edited by notoriously anti-Japanese influences." The italics are our own. Mr. Preston was careful to avoid an universally applicable charge. Therefore to say that he either included or excluded this paper or that is plainly incorrect, and to employ such a misrepresentation for the purpose of attacking the Japan Mail is as weak as it is disingenuous.

The third falsehood relates to an American Professor in the Imperial University. A banquet was recently given in his honour, and this journal—following Tokyo vernacular newspapers—represented him as replying to the toast of his health in remarkably modest tones; tones so modest that they did him much credit. It appears, however, that he was not correctly reported. What he did actually say has not been published, but it was not what he was quoted as saying. Then, because we put these highly creditable words into his mouth, the Japan Herald ventures to charge us with "lending ourselves to depreciate the valuable services rendered to Japan by foreigners." We represent a man as depreciating himself, which is not an uncommon procedure on the part of persons who have truly earned distinction, and we are at once charged with lending ourselves to depreciate the man! Truly we are perplexed to determine whether such an accusation should be classed as silly or as unscrupulous. The three falsehoods, ranged one after the other in a single paragraph, constitute a curious example of journalistic methods. They are not English methods, certainly, and though they are used by a German organ we can not consent to think that they are German methods.

THE HAGUE CONFERENCE.

Some commotion has been caused in official circles owing to the publication of an article in the Japanese Revue Diplomatique (Gaiko Jiho), which article vehemently attacks the Japanese delegates, and says that so far from making a great success, as their trumpet-blowers assert, their record is precisely the opposite. The first subject taken up by the writer of the article, Professor Arima, is the celebrated question about the period for which a warship of a belligerent Power may remain in the port of a neutral State. The British rule says 24 hours, but the rule of continental Europe allows much greater latitude, as Japan discovered to her cost when the Baltic Squadron was on its way to the fighting ground in the Far East via French ports. At the Conference Japan proposed to make the English rule universal. This was rejected. So was a proposal of Russia in the opposite sense. Then the Italian delegates introduced a project which, though nominally a compromise, was in reality a replica of the Russian proposal, since, while adopting the 24 hour rule, it made the operation of the rule depend upon the law of the country concerned. The second point taken by Dr. Arima has reference to the amount of coal which a warship of a belligerent power may obtain in a neutral port. The English rule is that the quantity should be only sufficient to carry the vessel to the nearest port of her own country, but when this came up for discussion, Russia and Germany put forward a proposal which practically amounted to removing all limits as to the quantity of provisions and coal which might be received in the circumstances. The Japanese delegates should have done everything in their power to prevent the adoption of such a proposal, but they allowed it to pass unchallenged.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun quotes Count Hayashi's views about the above. The Count severely condemns the tendency too often displayed by the Japanese, namely, the tendency to run to extremes in arguing and to take an extravagant view of a proposition. Such a proclivity is to be specially deprecated in connexion with international affairs. One would suppose from Professor Arima's criticisms that the conduct of the Russo-Japanese War was on trial by the Hague Tribunal, but as a matter of fact the Tribunal's business was to deal with defects and omissions in the general code of international law without any direct reference whatever to Russia and Japan in particular. One would also suppose from the learned juriconsult's criticisms that Japan has to reckon upon being always the objective point for the attack of foreign squadrons, and thus every facility of approach accorded by international law is held to be to Japan's disadvantage. But suppose the case reversed. Suppose that some outside Power were the objective point of a Japanese attack. In that event facilities of approach would be to Japan's advantage, not to her disadvantage, and any juriconsult who loses sight of this fact must be said to display a very meagre measure of faith in his country's potentialities.

Professor Ariga's attack upon the conduct of the Japanese Delegates at the Hague is fully met by Mr. Yamakawa, Japan's naval delegate on that occasion. He points out that it is extravagant to blame the Japanese delegates for not succeeding in getting their points carried in a tribunal where over 40 Powers were represented, and where everything was decided by a majority vote. It would be just as reasonable to bring a charge of incompetence against the delegates of every Power which failed to have its views adopted by the Conference. With regard to the particular issues raised by Professor Ariga, the Japanese Delegates did everything in their power to obtain currency for their views, but they were solidly opposed by the Continental States, which naturally objected to systems suited mainly to insular countries. Professor Ariga, we may remark, has generally figured as a very severe critic, and in this instance it is difficult to endorse his views. One point which must not be lost sight of is that the decisions of the Hague Tribunal are not binding upon any Power until it has officially adhered to them.

MANCHURIA.

It has been decided to arm with swords and rifles the officials entrusted with the duty of carrying the mails by rail on the South Manchuria line. This of course is a protection against the Hungtuhs.

It is stated that the loss in working the railway between Antung and Mukden during the past year was 600,000 yen. This line is a genuine white elephant, but of course in its present condition it could not be expected to attract many passengers or much goods.

What must always have been anticipated seems now to be about to become an accomplished fact, namely, keen competition between the South Manchuria Railway and the so-called East China Railway. The Russians are about to reorganize their connexions and services, so that a passenger from Moscow via Vladivostok, Tsuruga and Nagasaki will be able to reach Shanghai in 14 days. This is no doubt an answer to the establishment of the South Manchuria Railway's steamship service between Dairen and Shanghai, by means of which it was announced that the journey from Shanghai to Moscow could be accomplished in 16 days. The new arrangements, however, give an advantage of two days to the Russian line, and two days would be quite a determining factor in a journey of little more than a fortnight. It is stated that this prospect has inspired the directors of the South Manchuria Railway with considerable uneasiness. They have determined to shorten the railway journey from Changchun to Dairen from 25 hours to 21, and to put on luxurious sleeping and dining cars. But an acceleration of merely four hours will evidently not meet the situation. There always remains, however, to the Japanese route the advantage of the very much shorter sea voyage. Passengers bound for Japan will probably choose the Vladivostok route, but those whose direct bourn is China will be likely to go via Dairen.

His Excellency Mr. Hsu appears to have addressed to the Throne a most optimistic report of his observations during his recent tour through Southern Manchuria. He says that at Dairen and Port Arthur he received a very warm welcome from the Japanese authorities and people, while at Newchwang he had an opportunity of meeting the foreign and native merchants and acquiring much information about the state of trade. He observed with satisfaction that very smooth relations existed between his countrymen and foreigners at Newchwang. The report goes on to say that there was plenty of water in the Liao River, that the passage of junks to and fro was very active, that the harvest seemed plentiful, and that everything appeared peaceful and contented.

JAPAN'S FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The Mainichi Dempo quotes an anonymous official of the Tokyo Foreign Office who expresses some interesting views about the country's foreign policy. His opinion seems to be that for some time past there has been a regular crusade carried on by a party of publicists hostile to Japan, whose aim has been to impair her friendship with Western Powers and convert her into a sort of Ishmael. These intriguers commenced with Manchuria. They endeavoured to prove that Japan was monopolising for herself all the opportunities in that region, and that the open door as interpreted by her meant open for her own people alone. Defeated by facts in that essay, the agitators next attempted to set Japan and America by the ears. They magnified the petty question of labour immigration into an international problem of vital dimensions, and by assiduously declaring that the Far Eastern Empire was spoiling for a fight with the United States, they endeavoured to fix upon Japan the reproach of being a menace to the peace of the world. There again they failed signally, but they were not disconcerted. Their next move was to agitate for a Sino-American Alliance with the avowed object of checking Japan's unscrupulous aggressions. These aggressions being wholly imaginary, this third resource of the intriguers failed as signally as the two first. Their fourth effort is now being made. They are taking the Katsura Cabinet as material for constructing a report that, Japan being now under the control of the Ministry which suffered political effacement three years ago on account of the Portsmouth Treaty, and which is essentially composed of military men, an attempt will be made to force Russia again into war for the purpose of wiping out the reproach of that Treaty. The conspirators on this last occasion appear to be making Germany their headquarters and the Vossische Zeitung their mouth-piece. But the Governments in Tokyo and St. Petersburg are not to be moved by such shallow devices. On the contrary, these things will have the effect of cementing more firmly the friendship between Russia and Japan.

FORMOSA.

It is stated that the guardship Senkai Maru went round to the east coast of Formosa on the 23rd of August and bombarded the villages of the Taroko insurgents, who have hitherto shown themselves the most obdurate of all the aborigines. The effect of the bombardment was to destroy the residence of the insurgent chief as well as several farm-houses, but there were no casualties among the people as they all took refuge in the hills. We presume that the object of these operations is not so much to cause loss of life as to furnish an object lesson to the aborigines in the sense that they will not be allowed to choose their own places of residence unless they become orderly and peaceful citizens. We are not so very far from the days when the bombardment of villages by gunboats used to be a duly recognised form of punitive procedure. But happily such methods have come to be condemned by public opinion, and it is painful to read that even the head-hunters of Formosa have to suffer these things. But how otherwise are they to be dealt with? Any Power approaching the task must be prepared to take its gloves off occasionally.

THE TOKYO MUNICIPALITY.

Up to this moment (Saturday morning) the result of the election for Mayor of Tokyo, which is to be held on the 21st., is still in doubt. The Kokumin Shimbun thinks that if the election be held under present conditions, Baron Senge is likely to be returned by a majority of one or two. The Nippon says that the result of this election will affect the prospects of the Tokyo Railway Company, for, if Mr. Ozaki again becomes Mayor, the Municipality will agree to a reasonable revision of the schedule of fares. Our contemporary does not say, however, that Baron Senge would oppose such a revision, nor do we see any reason to think he would, considering that in his capacity of Governor of Tokyo he approved the scheme for the municipalization of the Railway.

We may mention here that Mr. Okura Kihachiro, who is a large shareholder in the Tokyo Railway, has been interviewed by the Jiji Shimpō. He says that it is quite out of the question that the Company should continue to work on the present footing, as it only succeeds in paying a small dividend by neglecting to form proper reserves for purposes of repair and renewal. The principal shareholders have been promised by the directors that an exhaustive statement of the Company's affairs will soon be submitted. If things are in anything like the condition alleged by the Jiji Shimpō, steps must be taken to correct them before raising the fares, but if after such steps have been taken the authorities and the public refuse to sanction the revision of the schedule, there will be nothing for the Company except to cease operations. It is not to be supposed that shareholders will sacrifice their rights merely on the ground that the Railway is a public convenience.

Meanwhile the Jiji Shimpō renews its attacks upon the directors. It says that three of them have borrowed a sum of over a million yen from the Imperial Bank of Commerce on the security of a large block of the Company's shares, which are registered in the name of a broker. This would be legitimate enough were there not another factor in the case, namely, that over a million yen of the Company's money is lodged with this Bank, and that, in spite of the unsettled state of the Bank's affairs, the Company does not withdraw the deposit, since if that step were taken the Bank would probably be obliged to foreclose upon the shares. This is an old story. A great deal was said about it when the débâcle commenced on the Tokyo market last year, but it has more than once been emphatically denied that the Company's deposit account is influenced by such considerations. It would certainly be well, however, that the matter should be cleared up. We have here a definite charge very different from the inchoate accusations hitherto preferred by our contemporary against the Company.

On Tuesday the election for Mayor takes place in Tokyo. The electors are the members of the City Assembly, which will meet for the purpose. The Japanese newspapers publish various forecasts. Those that are anti-Ozaki allege that a compromise has been effected on conditions which are somewhat humiliating for Mr. Ozaki, and that consequently the conditions will be kept secret. Others affirm simply that Mr. Ozaki's election has been decided on. As to the former rumour it seems to us that it probably has its origin in a statement attributed to

Mr. Ozaki, namely, that if the citizens desire to re-elect him, he is willing to serve for two or three years longer, but the full term of six years is not likely to be convenient to him. If he has supplemented his consent with this reservation, one can easily understand that his enemies would misrepresent it as a condition imposed by the Senge section of the electors. One thing which may be taken for granted is that Mr. Ozaki has not agreed to any conditions of a secret nature. There is no possibility of secrecy in such matters.

Tokyo newspapers agree in stating that Mr. Ozaki has consented to serve again as Mayor, but he reserves to himself discretionary power to resign at any time within the period of six years to which the Mayor's tenure of office extends. This is interpreted as signifying a compromise in the sense that the office of Mayor will be transferred to Baron Senge's hands a year or two hence.

The election for Mayor took place on the 22nd inst. That is to say, the City Assembly voted for three candidates whose names will be presented to the Minister of State for Home Affairs, and from among them he will nominate the Mayor. Out of the 50 members voting in the three ballots the following was the result:—Mr. Ozaki 43, Mr. Nakazawa 29, Mr. Nakajima 26. Mr. Ozaki, while not claiming by any means that his discharge of the duties of the office during the past five years had been free from error, expressed himself willing to undertake the duty again, but hinted very plainly that he might be obliged to vacate the post before the expiration of its full term, namely 6 years. The assistant officials (joyaku) have still to be elected, and their choice is likely to involve some friction.

We are glad to learn from the Jiji Shimpō that it is not radically opposed to a revision of the schedule of the Tokyo Railway fares, provided only that the Company's affairs be in the first place regulated and placed on a really economical footing. Would that were all! But alas, how are the mighty fallen! The Jiji Shimpō descends from the honourable position it has occupied for so many years and adopts the methods of a "three-penny lawyer." It says that the arguments of the Japan Mail may be set aside because the Editor is a shareholder in the Railway. This is a case of the old story that when all arguments fail, the only course left for an unscrupulous advocate is to attack his adversary's motives. If to be a shareholder disqualifies a man for discussing a subject, then it follows that the whole body of shareholders in any company are debarred from expressing their views and asserting their rights. It may surprise the Jiji Shimpō to learn that many foreigners are shareholders in the Tokyo Railway Company, and it will certainly astound these foreigners to find that the Jiji Shimpō substitutes an attack on motives for an answer to arguments. That course constitutes a reference to the lowest order of intelligence, and since the Jiji Shimpō appeals to that forum, neither the Japan Mail nor the foreigners who hold shares in the Company, will care to follow it. We speak with much regret. For many a year we have looked upon the Jiji Shimpō as a centre of light and leading in Tokyo journalism, but its writing in connexion with the Portsmouth Treaty three years ago and its present crusade against the Tokyo Railway Company certainly do not constitute jewels in its journalistic crown.

The Nippon has a long paragraph on the subject of the Railway. It says that Mr. Ozaki, having been now re-elected Mayor, the Municipality is practically unanimous as to the necessity of revising the Tokyo Railway's schedule, and the question will soon enter the stage of practical politics. That may be true, for it must naturally seem unreasonable to the Tokyo aldermen that the streets should be used by a Company which contributes nothing to the Municipal treasury. Our readers doubtless remember that the Company does not begin to make any payment to the Municipality until the net profits of the Railway exceed 7 per cent. of the paid up capital. Therefore so long as the Company pays only 7 per cent. the City gets nothing.

PROFESSOR I. SAKURAI'S JUBILEE.

Professor I. Sakurai reached his fiftieth year and at the same time completed 25 years of his professorate in 1907. His friends and former pupils made this event an occasion of public celebration, marking it in two ways, namely, first, by the special contribution and publication of papers embodying scientific work recently done by some of his former pupils, and, secondly, by raising a considerable sum to be used as a fund, in association with his name, for the encouragement of chemical research. Professor Sakurai worked for some time in the laboratory with Dr. Divers F.R.S., and, if we remember rightly, contributed valuable papers to the proceedings of the College of Science in cooperation with that distinguished chemist. He has done much excellent work in the field of original research, and in 1879 he was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society of London. This was at the early age of 21, and on his return to Japan in 1881 he received the appointment of Lecturer in Chemistry at the Tokyo University, becoming a Professor the next year at the remarkably early age of twenty-four. He had studied in England for 6 years, chiefly at University College, and at the end of his first year he carried off the gold medal in chemistry, together with prizes in physics and mineralogy, while in his second year he won the Clothworkers' Scholarship of £50 a year for two years. Two papers of his on the preparation of remarkable metallic compounds containing bivalent hydrocarbon radicals were published, while he was still a student, in the Journal of the Chemical Society of London, and abstracts of them were given at the meetings of the British Association held in Swansea in 1882. He is now Director of the College of Science in the Imperial University of Tokyo, and he certainly must be classed high among the most distinguished scholars of the era. The volume added to the Journal of the College of Science to commemorate his jubilee contains 18 papers, 2 of which are in German, the rest in English. They all deal with very abstruse themes, and as a whole they well illustrate the developments which the science of chemistry has undergone in Japanese hands.

A TELEGRAM from Pretoria states that General Botha, speaking in the Legislative Council, declared that Lord Milner's administration was the most unfortunate thing that ever happened to the Transvaal. The distribution of the grant of three millions was the ugliest incident in the country's history.

PROFESSOR TERRY.

On the 19th inst. the Professors and teachers in the Imperial University gave a banquet at the Shokubutsuen in Tokyo to celebrate the 60th anniversary of Professor Terry's birthday, and to express their gratitude and admiration for the services he has rendered during the past 20 years as teacher of American and English law. There were present at the banquet his Excellency Mr. Komatsubara, Minister of Education, Dr. Hamao, President of the Imperial University, Mr. Kato, Ambassador to London, and about 140 men of repute in the world of science and letters. It appears that Professor Terry came to Japan in 1877, returned to America in 1884 and came back to Tokyo in 1894. The Minister of Education proposed Professor Terry's health in a brief speech, eulogising the value of the services he had rendered to Japan during his long connexion with the Imperial University. Mr. Terry, in replying, expressed profound gratitude for the honour done to him that evening, but he declared that he was altogether unworthy of such a distinction, and that he felt ashamed rather than gratified when he looked back to his comparatively useless career. He said that having now reached his 60th year, he was legally entitled to retire. But he had no intention of doing so. He hoped, on the contrary, by his labours in the future to atone in some degree for his defects in the past. His Excellency, Mr. Kato, who explained that he had benefited by Professor Terry's instruction in the Law College, called for three cheers for the guest of the evening; Dr. Hamao invited those present to pay a similar compliment to the Yale University, and Mr. Jay, Secretary of the United States Embassy, called for a lusty banzai for the Imperial University of Japan. Professor Terry was afterwards presented with a pair of gold screens and an oil painting of himself.

We owe Professor Terry an apology for having trusted a Japanese journal's report of what he said at the banquet given in his honour a few days ago. The banquet was, of course, not open to the public, and therefore the reports of his speech were necessarily hearsay. But as the words attributed to Professor Terry did him much credit, we had no hesitation in reproducing them.

A GERMAN AND A RUSSIAN NEWSPAPER.

The Fiji Shimpō translates an article from the Novoe Vremya based on a statement contained in the Vossische Zeitung. The Tokyo correspondent of the latter paper claims to have been informed by Marquis Katsura direct that, in effect, the foreign policy of the new Japanese Cabinet will be guided by the principle of deeds before words. Instead of wasting endless time in discussion, Japan will adopt more convincing methods. This applies especially to the countries adjoining her territories, namely, the United States, China and Russia. Such is the gist of the German newspaper - correspondent's story. The Russian journal in quoting it, declares complete incredulity, and asks whether any responsible statesmen would be likely to make such a declaration, but nevertheless the Novoe Vremya takes some trouble to expose the impracticability of a foreign policy which took for motto simply "I will it so." Such a Policy could not expect anything except the rejoinder

"I do not will it so." It must be obvious to the shallowest intelligence that the correspondent of the Vossische Zeitung was never entrusted with any such confidence by Marquis Katsura, nor with anything even remotely resembling it. A Prime Minister of a great Power who made the declaration put into Marquis Katsura's mouth by the Vossische Zeitung would be within measurable distance of a straight waistcoat. The sooner the Berlin journal changes its Tokyo correspondent the less liable will it be to look foolish in the eyes of the world. The most surprising part of the whole affair is that a paper of the standing of the Vossische Zeitung should have been induced to publish such silliness.

THE NEW PENAL CODE.

The new penal code goes into operation from the 1st of next month, and the Asahi quotes Mr. Matsumuro, Procurator-General of the Court of Cassation, as saying that while undoubtedly the new body of law is better than the old, its application will present some difficulty. He lays special stress upon the provision that in passing sentence a judge is to be guided by the prisoner's general conduct. The Procurator-General remarks that a man's general conduct is a very difficult thing to ascertain; that in order to inquire into it sufficiently a considerable increase of the police staff will be necessary, and that trials are likely to be sensibly protracted. Mr. Matsumuro dwells further upon the new provision with regard to several offences charged against the same prisoner. Under the old code he was punished for the worst of these offences, but under the new his punishment will be cumulative, and there will of course be a corresponding latitude of sentence.

It appears to us that this jurist is somewhat meticulous in his ideas. The law does not require that tribunals of justice shall attempt the impossible. It does not call upon a judge to undertake an exact inquisition into the previous career of every prisoner. All that is necessary is to ascertain the general character assigned to him by popular report. That is invariably done in England, and it does not involve any of the inconveniences foreseen by Mr. Matsumuro.

THE EASTERN DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

The Establishment Committee of this Company met on the 21st inst. at the official residence of the Minister of Finance. Marquis Katsura attended, and delivered a short address in which he urged the necessity of keeping always in view the fact that co-operation between Japanese and Koreans was the prime purpose of the Association—not co-operation merely between individuals but also co-operation between the two countries. The Committee then proceeded to business. Two bills were passed relating to details of procedure, and certain other bills were entrusted to a special committee. Of these latter bills the most important related to the capital of the Company. It provided that the Korean Government should put up 13,950 acres of upland and the same quantity of wet fields, and that this total of 27,900 acres should be valued at 3 million yen, thus representing 60,000 of the Company's 50 yen shares. The remaining 140,000 shares—the Company's total capital is fixed at 10 million yen—are to be offered for public subscription, with the exception of 200 shares the destination of which we can not clearly trace. Shareholders must be either Korean or Japanese subjects, and the shares are to be offered for subscription from the 17th to the 27th of October. The President of the Company is to have a salary of 6,000 yen, the Vice-President 4,000 and the directors from 3,500 to 2,500.

THE AMERICAN ELECTIONS.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun has a long telegram from New York under date of the 21st inst., alleging that distinct proof has been obtained of a pecuniary connexion existing for several years back between Senator Foraker and the Standard Oil Company. This revelation comes from the side of Mr. Hearst, and is of course being largely utilised to the detriment of the Republican candidate for the Presidency. The telegram says that an attempt was made to stigmatise as forgeries the documents produced to incriminate the Senator, and that for a moment his accusers found themselves treading in the footsteps of the notorious Piggot in the Parnell trial. But subsequent evidence completely rehabilitated the documents, and Senator Foraker has been obliged to admit their authenticity. It is not yet known what remedial step will be taken by Mr. Taft, who has for some time been on intimate terms with Senator Foraker, but although the Democrats will make the utmost out of the incident, the general impression seems to be that no serious injury will be done to the Republican cause. The methods of electioneering campaigners in the United States are proverbially so full of curious resource that we hesitate to place full credence in the above story, but we translate it from the Nichi Nichi's columns because our contemporary's correspondent says that it has produced in New York the effect of a clap of thunder in a clear sky.

THE INTERNATIONAL PRIZE COURT.

Vice-Admiral Sakamoto has been appointed to represent Japan on the Committee, which is about to meet in London to enact regulations for the establishment of an international prize court. The fact that such a tribunal should be established was voted at the recent Hague Conference, but as the details required much consideration, it was resolved that the nine principal naval Powers of the world should send representatives to form a committee for the purpose of drawing up rules. Admiral Sakamoto remarks as an interesting fact that, whereas England in her interpretation of international law used to follow the policy most convenient for an insular power, namely, the policy of recognising that extensive rights belong to the navy, she has of late years modified that policy, and now shows herself willing to restrict naval rights in the interest of neutrals. On the other hand Germany, which used to take the Continental view of the question, has now adopted the insular view, and is disposed to claim maximum powers for her navy. Japan is entirely without prejudice, but her inclination is in the same direction as England's, and that may be said of the United States too. Thus the Conference is likely to elicit diverse views, which it will take some time to reconcile.

YESTERDAY, Sept. 18th, an Australian Subscription Mare of Autumn 1908 put up for auction by the Nippon Race Club with Messrs. Eyton & Pratt, was sold for yen 260.

"THE KOKKA."

No. 291 of The Kokka has some beautiful reproductions of ukiyo ye pictures by Mononobu Hishikawa, taken from two screens in the possession of Mr. T. Hara of Yokohama, who is to be congratulated on the possession of such gems. The most interesting feature of the number, however, is a short sketch of the career of Shiba Kōkan, the pioneer of oil painting in Japan after the European school. Oil painting, if we use the term in its literal significance, dates back as far as the Suiko period, a very grey antiquity, as is proved by the decoration of the door-leaves and pedestal of the Tamamushi Shrine. But it was a special kind of oil painting, and the method seems to have been lost. At any rate, such work was not produced at any later date. Of course, when the Jesuits, the Franciscans and the Hollanders arrived in the 16th century, they brought their art with them, and that some of the Fathers were able artists is proved by a shockingly realistic picture, still preserved in Spain, showing the crucifixion on Martyrs' Mount, Nagasaki, in 1587. Considering that the Jesuits were in Japan with a virtually free hand from 1549 to 1612, and that during that interval of 63 years they visited and established churches and schools at nearly all the principal places in the Kwantō, the Kinai and Kyūshū, it may well be believed that they imparted the art of oil painting to the Japanese. Yet the name of only one artist is well remembered as having been associated with such work in that epoch, and as even of his works very few survive, it would appear that the ban under which everything foreign fell during the 200 years from the days of Hidetada to those of Yoshimune, extended to oil paintings, and that they went to the stake as did so many martyrs. But no sooner was the sentence of ostracism relaxed than Japanese painters turned in this direction once more, and pioneers of oil painting came upon the stage in the persons of Hiraga Kyūkei and Shiba-Kōkan (died 1818). The latter bequeathed to posterity some pictures of considerable merit, two of which are reproduced in the number of The Kokka now before us. They are essentially in the European style, and, in fact, they would be mistaken at the first glance for Dutch work. Even more interesting than his paintings, however, are his appreciations of Western art. "It is indeed ridiculous," he says in the Kokan Kokai ki, "that most of our people are disposed to regard Western paintings as a kind of Uki-ye (pictures in relief). As I have repeatedly remarked, a painting which is not a faithful copy of nature neither has beauty nor is worthy of the name. What I mean to say is this: be the subject what it may, a landscape, a bird, a bullock, a tree, a stone or an insect, it should be treated in a way so life-like that it is instinct with life and motion. Now this is beyond the possibility of any art save that of the West. Judged from this point of view, Japanese and Chinese paintings look very puerile, hardly deserving the name of art. Because people have been accustomed to such daub-like productions, whenever they see a master-painting of the West, they pass it by as a mere curiosity, or dub it an uki-ye, a misconception which betrays sheer ignorance." Again in the Shunparō-hikki he writes:—"The style of copying nature is exemplified in Dutch pictures. Unlike your native paintings, no unnecessary ado is made about strokes, their manner, their motives, or their force. In Occidental art objects are copied direct from nature; hence, before a landscape is treated one feels as if one were placed in the midst of it." He then goes on to speak of "a wonderful apparatus called 'photograph' which gives a facsimile of the object, whatever it is," and he explains that "the five colours are never dissolved in glue or water, but in a special material made of tallow oil." It is somewhat crude talk, but considering that it came from the lips of a Japanese more than a hundred years ago, it shows alike remarkable courage and great insight. No wonder that he wrote somewhat vaguely about the photograph, considering that Wedgwood's paper in the Journal of the Royal Institution was only 19 years old when Shiba Kōkan died.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

The National Review is nothing if not vigorous. It has attracted particular attention of late, in this part of the world, since it opened its columns to the Canadian Commissioner of Trade. In fact we may say it has shocked some people. But that is the way of the National Review, as those who read it often are aware. Possibly, therefore, on this ground the British public, while admiring the fearless and outspoken character of its criticisms, take them more calmly than a certain section of the Far Eastern world. Here is its editorial description of Mr. Winston Churchill—"The cynical adventurer at the Board of Trade who 'ratted' from the Unionist Party in the belief that he would better himself on the other side." Mr. Lloyd George is referred to as "the Welsh marauder at the Exchequer from whom better things were expected." Sir John Fisher is accused of devoting more of his zeal and talent "to the manipulating of the Press" than to the administration of the Navy. If he had reversed the process, remarks the critic, "we might sleep quietly in our beds. Unfortunately, he prostitutes his genius to the base business of destroying the objects of his personal animosity, chief of whom is Lord Charles Beresford," of whom, declares the writer, the First Sea Lord is "insanely jealous." All this is pretty severe, but we do not hear that any of these people have flown into tantrums over the matter.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Saturday, September 19.

The extreme sensitiveness of the Tokyo Stock Exchange to climatic influences was illustrated on Friday, when the forenoon session was rendered quite dull by rumours of a centre of depression off the east coast of China, which is a very far cry. In the afternoon session news that the Osaka Market was firm produced a wholesome effect, and prices were generally maintained with occasional appreciations. Such is the almost invariable rule, at present—a brisk day is followed by a dull, and then ensues a débâcle, which latter will probably be seen on the 19th. In the case of the Tokyo Railway, rumours of a rise of fare were circulated and the quotation rose one point.

Monday, September 21.

We ventured to predict in our report for the 18th inst. that the market on the 19th would follow the sequence which has of late become habitual, namely, a brisk day, a dull day and a day of débâcle. The 19th inst. was of the latter character, though on a small scale. Investors and speculators are so timid that a shower of rain alarms them. The 20th inst. was the continuation of the higan season, and the fact that it seemed likely to be ushered in by a storm of wind and rain depressed nearly all quotations. There does not seem to have been any other reason.

Tuesday, September 22.

Fine weather and news that the balance of trade had been favourable during the ten days ended the 20th instant, produced a buoyant feeling in the stock market on the 21st instant, and all shares, with the exception of those of the Tankō Kaisha and the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, appreciated fractionally. The Keihin Railway shares made a conspicuous leap of 390 points owing to a rumour that the Company had effected a foreign loan.

Wednesday, September 23.

There is nothing special to say about the market on Tuesday. A buoyant feeling seems to prevail, but every upward movement is checked by profit-taking sales. No reason for depression can be adduced, and it appears to be thought that a period of activity will set in to-morrow (to-day is a holiday). Our readers will perceive, however, that the market seems to be clinging to its habitual groove, a day of appreciation, a day of dulness and a day of depreciation.

Friday, September 25.

The Tokyo Stock Exchange clung to its habitual groove on Thursday. It moves now with clock-work regularity in a good day, a medium day and a bad day. Nearly everything fell on the 24th, especially the Kei-Hin Railway, which had taken an extraordinary leap upwards because of the discovery of a cave likely to attract worshippers, and which jumped down with equal alacrity when news came that the cave was to be closed by order of the Kanagawa Authorities. The wet weather and dullness in Osaka are said to have been contributory causes, but the prospect of a political surprise in America, and the news of the fall of copper in New York and London doubtless had greater effect. Many people had predicted that Thursday would witness the beginning of a revival. They were at least premature. Appended are the quotations for November delivery:—

SHIPPING ACCIDENT.

The Hokuyo Steamship Co's steamer Chiga Maru, while on her course in the neighbourhood of Sado island on Sept. 15th, broke the shaft of her propeller. She drifted into the entrance of Tsugaru Strait where a British steamer, which was passing, brought the Japanese ship to Hakodate on Sept. 18th.

Torpedo-boat No. 57 collided with a lighter laden with coal on the night of Sept. 20th in the neighbourhood of Hebi isle in Tokuyama harbour. The lighter was sunk and the torpedo-boat damaged slightly. The commanding officer and six bluejackets were thrown overboard by the impact, but all were saved. The torpedo-boat was on her way to Peppu in company with seven others.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, September 18.

The forecasts of the rice crop all through the country with the exception of Hokkaido are decidedly good. It was feared that the recent cold snap had injured the crop in the Kwanto region, but this apprehension is not verified by official reports. The amount of rice produced in Hokkaido is comparatively small. Still the fact that the yield there is expected to be 30 per cent below the average modifies in some degree the fairness of the general prospect. The Asahi Shimbun, however, quotes an anonymous authority, whom it calls an agricultural expert, as saying that the Government's estimate of a crop 20 per cent. above the average is probably exaggerated, and that 50 million koku will most likely prove to be nearer the real figure than 53 millions.

There is talk of forming a lead-pencil manufacturing company. The demand for this useful article has greatly developed, as is shown by the following figures of the last ten years' consumption:—

YEAR MEIJI.	Yen.
31 .....	132,056
32 .....	99,344
33 .....	242,274
34 .....	457,600
35 .....	405,000
36 .....	598,000
37 .....	699,000
38 .....	783,650
39 .....	760,390
40 .....	920,000

Nearly the whole of this demand is supplied from abroad, the pencils produced in Japan not representing more than some 80,000 yen yearly.

The conference of tramp steamer owners, held in Tokyo on the 16th inst., did not result in any agreement. The Tokyo representatives introduced a proposal for taking the charter value of the ships as a pooling basis, but the Osaka owners frankly advocated union for the purpose of raising freights. Both proposals had to be withdrawn, but the feeling of the meeting seemed to be in favour of the latter.

The Jiji Shimpō quotes Mr. Fukuhara, one of the largest shareholders of the Tokyo Railway Company, in the sense that he and others have always appreciated the fact that abuses exist in the management of the Company's affairs, but on the other hand they believe that the task of adjustment can be best achieved by the present directorate if sufficient time be allowed them for the purpose. The shareholders do not look for any exorbitant profit but can not possibly be content with the present state of affairs, and they consider that a reasonable increase of charges is inevitable. Mr. Fukuhara, however, does not seem to have much confidence in the ability of the present directors to effect a satisfactory reform. So far as we (Japan Mail) can judge, the trouble is simply one of sentiment. It is against the personnel of the directorate rather than against their methods that attacks are directed. Even critics like the Nichi Nichi Shimbun admit the necessity of raising the fare but insist that it cannot be satisfactorily effected without a change of directors.

The Nippon Shosen Kaisha had a meeting on the 17th inst. in Tokyo and it proved a somewhat turbulent scene. The point to be determined was the manner of accounting for a sum of about 80,000 yen, which appears to have taken wings, but the meeting broke up without arriving at any conclusion.

Saturday, September 19.

Tokyo papers say that the prospect of an agreement between Mr. Ozaki Yukio and Baron Sengen has disappeared and that they will be active competitors for the office of Mayor.

Kobe, it appears, is to be the scene of no less than four reclamations. There is first that connected with the Government Harbour Works; secondly, a foreshore reclamation of 40,000 tsubo at Takahama by the Mitsui Bishi Warehouse Company; thirdly, one of 60,000 tsubo at Nagahama by the Mitsui, and fourthly, one at Hiogo by the Sumitomo family. Thus it will be seen that three of the greatest capitalists of Japan are competing in this work of reclamation.

The cotton spinners appear to have abandoned their idea of levying a fixed sum upon each bale of yarn sold at home in order to cheapen the yarns for export by 5 yen a bale. The accounts of their procedure are somewhat confusing, but we gather that they intend to continue their system of reduced production and to revert to premium-bearing sales. Statistics are adduced to prove that this latter device was eminently successful while it lasted.

Tokyo papers say that the habutaye market has at last recovered activity. Large orders have arrived from the United States, and although prices have not reached their old level, the outlook is now very hopeful.

The Jiji Shimpō's latest assault upon the Tokyo Railway is a double-leaded accusation that the directors have spent 750,000 yen of the Company's funds in entertainments and bribes connected, first, with the municipalization question and, secondly, with the problem of raising fares. The Jiji guards itself by giving this as a report, but the accusation is couched in the plainest and most explicit terms, and embodies an emphatic assertion that, if the accounts of the Company are examined, the fraud will be at once detected. Considering the status of the Jiji Shimpō in the newspaper world of Japan, we do not see how these reiterated charges can be passed over in silence. Either the Railway Company is one of the most iniquitous and incompetent concerns that ever existed, or the Jiji Shimpō has been betrayed into almost unparalleled injustice. We think that the wisest course in the circumstances would be to appoint an investigation committee composed of the most trusted business men in Tokyo. It altogether passes our comprehension that such an enormous sum could be falsely entered in the accounts, but the Jiji Shimpō evidently has no difficulty in believing it.

Monday, September 21.

The Nagoya Electric Light Company, which has long been in the market seeking a foreign loan for obtaining hydro-electric power from the Nagara River, is said to be on the verge of completing the transaction through the agency of Mr. Finch. The sum involved to 1½ or 2 million yen, and the money is to be obtained in London, the interest being 6 per cent., and the Company receiving 90 yen per bond. The British capitalists offered 80 yen and the Nagoya folk stood out for 91, but a compromise is said to have been effected at 90. Perhaps the conclusion of this transaction will teach people in England that such a place as Nagoya exists. One or two years ago they were blandly ignorant on that subject.

On the 20th inst. there was opened in the town of Nagano a competitive exhibition for products of Tokyo and the ten prefectures forming the Kwanto. Nagano is in Shinshu, one of the great silk-producing provinces. It is stated that 63 classes of products and manufactures are exhibited and that the exhibits number 68,000. The period of the Exhibition is not stated by Tokyo newspapers, but the expenses are put at 800,000 yen.

Mr. Wakao, one of the principal shareholders of the Tokyo Railway Company, has been interviewed by the Jiji Shimpō, and he expresses total disagreement with the statements made by that paper. The only possibility of effecting economies in the working of the Company is by diminishing the number of Directors or cutting down the salaries, and that would be about as effective as a drop of water on a burning rock. In the meeting held at the Hoshigaoka Restaurant some months ago, the leading shareholders urged upon the Directors the vital necessity of thoroughly adjusting the affairs of the Company before taking any further steps. The Directors replied that every possible adjustment had been already made. They were exceeding the Company's strength when they declared a dividend of 7 per cent., for in doing so no provision was made for the extensive renewals and replacements which were already becoming necessary. Mr. Wakao added that when he became a shareholder he reckoned on receiving a large dividend, but owing to Mr. Amenomiya's romantic and impractical idea of a uniform fare, which was not only unjust in principle but also wholly unsuited to a city of Tokyo's great dimensions, everything had been thrown into confusion. It was extravagant to suppose that the shareholders would sacrifice their property by leaving things in their present condition. They were quite confident that if once the truth were made known to the citizens of Tokyo, the public's sense of justice would declare in their favour. A full and accurate statement of the Company's affairs should be submitted to the proper authorities and to the public at large, and it was understood that the Directors were now engaged compiling such a statement.

Japanese papers publish a statement with reference to the trade between this country and Russia. They say that, according to the published returns, there is practically no trade, but close investigation shows that large quantities of Japanese goods find their way to Russia via England, France and Germany. The following list is given:—

	Yen.
Raw silk .....	12,244,000
Silk goods .....	4,817,000
Copper .....	15,875,000
Sulphur .....	1,250,000
Camphor .....	2,508,000
Peppermint .....	376,000
Kanten (sea weed) .....	264,000
White wax .....	116,000
Fish oil .....	3,316,000
Straw braid .....	5,340,000
Japanese paper .....	397,000
Pottery and porcelain .....	5,213,000
Lacquers .....	1,170,000
Figured matting .....	4,900,000
Miscellaneous .....	3,000,000

Total ..... 60,944,000

The only direct export trade from Japan to Russia is some 2 millions worth of raw silk which is sent by the Hara Firm every year. In giving the above list our Tokyo contemporaries add that there is evidently a large margin for direct export, but they do not explain how Japan would be benefited by such a change, and we fail for our own part to see what advantage would be derived by transferring from French, German and English hands to Japanese a commerce which is so successful under existing conditions. After all, Japan's prime object is to find a market for her produce, through whatever channels it passes to reach that market.

The Yorodan Choko publishes the following list showing the finale of the great Hakodate fire of last year so far as the Insurance Companies are concerned:—

Name of Company.	Sum insured. yen.	Sum paid. yen.
Tokyo Kasai .....	1,014,247	952,330
Meiji Kasai .....	562,958	533,559
Nippon Kasai .....	502,291	469,748
Osaka Kasai .....	173,862	143,098
Kyodo Kasai .....	162,330	118,068
Naijai Kasai .....	156,560	147,655
Yamato Kasai .....	6,560	5,710
Yokohama Kasai .....	56,780	44,975
Nihon Ryokan .....	57,570	—
Nisshu Kasai .....	350,000	—

The above does not mean that the sums insured represent actual losses, for of course all the property insured was not destroyed. Our contemporary adds that a considerable part of the payments made by the Osaka Kasai-Kaisha never reached the hands of the insured persons, and that several of the intermediaries are now in prison. As for the Nisshu Kasai Company, it has simply gone out of existence without paying anything, yet its life insurance branch is still open.

Tuesday, September 22.

The Shogyo Shimpō has a long note about the bankruptcy of the Sugiura Firm in Vladivostok. We learn from it that the sum on account of which distraint took place was only 50,000 roubles, and that goods to that amount are in the store, while loans aggregating 250,000 roubles stand in the Firm's books against various Japanese clients scattered throughout Siberia. It is feared that the majority of these Japanese will share the fate of the Firm, and be obliged to put up their shutters. A great blow will thus be given to Japanese credit in that part of the world. The Shogyo Shimpō speaks also of a Japanese bank in Hakodate, but inasmuch as we can not clearly discover whether this institution is threatened with bankruptcy or has actually succumbed, we refrain from detailed reference.

In the Asahi Shimbun we find a long note about the Oriental Glass Company. The gist of the matter is that it has been decided to take radical measures of reform in the way of reducing staff and cutting down salaries. There is no reason whatever why the enterprise itself should not prove altogether satisfactory if its conduct be placed on a more economical basis.

The 29 American merchants who are about to visit Japan in response to an invitation from five Japanese Chambers of Commerce are expected to arrive in this country by the 13th of October.

The Jiji Shimpō devotes a column and a half to attacking the statements made to its representative by Mr. Wakao, and published in its issue of the 20th inst. It would really seem from the writings of this leading journal that it regards anything like an increase of fares as a criminal offence. It is a novel doctrine that to ask fair pay for a fair service is an iniquity. Shall we be obliged to recognise that our old and much esteemed friend the Jiji Shimpō has become the Japanese leader of an extreme form of socialism, and that its office should be removed to the Hibiya park? That would be a sad discovery.

Wednesday, September 23.

The Jiji Shimpō is apparently determined never to end its crusade against the Tokyo Railway. It now construes the statements which it elicited from one of the leading shareholders, Mr. Wakao, as an admission that the Company manages to pay a 7 per cent. dividend only by employing for that purpose a part of its construction funds. Our respected contemporary seems to have lost its arithmetical faculty altogether. If it would quietly sit down and consider what are the operating expenses per car-mile of the Tokyo Railway as compared with the corresponding figure for any other railway in the world, not omitting the railways of Japan, it would discover how little margin exists for its charges of extravagance and dishonesty. It is noticeable that not one Tokyo newspaper takes any notice of this interminable crusade of the Jiji Shimpō. The prevailing impression appears to be that the great journal's columns are being exploited by someone who desires to produce a slump in the Company's scrip. Meanwhile it is understood that the Company is busily engaged carrying out reforms and economies which were suspended more or less during the long period of waiting while the municipalization question was in abeyance. The necessity for these reforms arises chiefly from the fact that the Company is an amalgamation three of originally independent lines, and that consequently its organization as a single concern is not yet complete.

The Nippon justly notes that although disquieting views seem to be entertained in some quarters about the silk trade, the quantity actually exported this year has been in excess of the quantity exported in any previous year. The figures are:—

	Boxes.
From Jan. 1st to Aug. 31st ..1906	5,215,070
" " " " ..1907	5,514,976
" " " " ..1908	5,614,621

The only trouble has been that prices this year are lower than last year, and that consequently the silk has produced about 8 million yen less.

GENERAL MARQUIS NOZU.

We greatly regret to announce that Field-Marshal Marquis Nozu is said to be dangerously ill. He has been ailing for some time, and as he was unable to attend the Special Audience on the 18th instant, the Emperor anxiously inquired for him. The disease is said to have been diagnosed as cancer of the stomach, and a consultation of physicians will determine to-day whether an operation is advisable. The Field-Marshal is in his 68th year.

Very disquieting accounts are published about this distinguished officer's illness. Drs. Nagayo and Sato are said to be agreed that an operation would be useless, and that there is no hope of recovery.

The Kokumin Shimbun says that the Field-Marshal summoned to his side his two sons, one of whom is a lieutenant in the army and the other a student in the Military College. He handed to them the sword he had himself worn in his youth, and bade them go to the autumn manoeuvres and not return thence on any pretext whatever until the manoeuvres were concluded. Evidently the Marquis does not expect many more days of life.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The autumn manoeuvres this year are to be in the Kinai district, that is to say, in the Provinces of Setsu, Kawachi and Idzumi. We do not remember that these manoeuvres have been held on any previous occasion in the vicinity of Kyoto and Osaka. The troops engaged will be four Divisions, namely, the 4th, the 9th, the 11th and the 16th; which means that about 40,000 of all arms will take the field. In addition several special corps will take part, namely the Heavy Artillery Corps, three regiments; the Machine Gun Corps and the Telegraph and Balloon Corps. We observe, however, that a motor-car corps is not yet included. The march past at the conclusion of the manoeuvres will take place on the parade ground of the 53rd Regiment at Nara.

The actual field operations of the four Divisions and the special corps which are to take place in the Kinai district will extend from the 13th of October to the 16th. The Emperor is to leave the capital on the 11th, and will have his headquarters at Nara.

The remarks of American newspapers vis à vis the Presidential campaign are not only humorous but illuminating. Here are a few.

It is going to be a whirlwind campaign, but so far we've had more wind than whirl.—Houston Chronicle.

If all the campaign lies are to be spiked, the nail industry should be looking up.—Atlanta Journal.

We can never be fully convinced that Governor Hughes is a good man until New York repudiates him.—Charleston News.

"Can you tell the Whole Truth?" is a new article by Prof. Hugo Muensterberg. Why, Professor, this is campaign year.—Columbia State.

The Supreme Court of Peru has released the political prisoners of that country. Must be going to have an election down there.—I dianapolis News.

Capt. T. S. Baldwin, of New York, says aeronauts often make the mistake of leaving the mouth of the gas-bag open. We have noticed that many politicians make this same mistake.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

We ventured to predict some time ago that, judging from the history of Japanese commerce during the second half of the Tokugawa régime, and, considering the conditions now existing in Japan, the old tendency to form guilds and trusts was not unlikely to attain considerable dimensions. Events are proving the correctness of that conjecture. Within the past year the public has seen unions of cotton spinners, of sugar refiners, of oil producers, of shipping companies and of flour manufacturers. Now the list has to be supplemented by unions of artificial fertilizer companies and mine-owners. Neither of these two latter projects has yet become an accomplished fact, and, so far as mines are concerned, there will probably be many obstacles. But the general disposition is plain enough.

Affairs relating to Court festivals in Japan have now been brought under the purview of law and regulation, and the code is published in the Official Gazette. These festivals are national holidays. They have hitherto been 8 in number, and so far as we can gather, they will in future be 13. That means five additional national holidays. The minor Court festivals number 8, according to these new regulations, but the minor festivals are not national holidays. From the details given in the Official Gazette we gather that the tendency is to revert to ancient customs in these matters.

The Hochi Shimbun has a long article about the Oriental Glass Company which, on a moderate estimate, consists, we should imagine, of nine masses of error for every one grain of truth. One of two things is certain, namely, either that newspaper comments must be treated with absolute indifference, or that no novel enterprise can be conducted in Japan. Neither alternative is very agreeable, but we apprehend that the former is the more likely to be adopted. The Oriental Glass Company appears not to have achieved success so far, but many an enterprise which stumbles on the threshold walks firmly enough afterwards.

It will be remembered that a few days ago telegrams were received from New York and San Francisco to the effect that two Japanese schooners had been captured by an American warship of the Preventive Service in the neighbourhood of the Aleutian Islands. Their crews were said to number 40 men, and it was added that distinct proof had been found of an act of poaching within territorial waters. Tokyo journals now state, apparently on the authority of the Foreign Office, that this story is probably a richaniffé of the previous seizure of two Japanese schooners, namely, the Kinsei Maru and the Seikai Maru, which was reported some time ago. The idea is that the recent telegrams are based not on a new incident but on the results of the preliminary inquiry into the case of the above-named schooners.

The foreign trade for the ten days ended the 20th showed a favourable balance of 1,609,000 yen, namely:—

	Yen.
Exports.....	9,027,000
Imports.....	7,418,000
Excess of Exports .....	1,609,000

The figures for January 1st to Sept. 20th are:—

	Yen.	Diminution compared with same period of 1907.
Exports.....	257,998,000	—47,648,000
Imports .....	340,714,000	—22,789,000
Excess of Imports...	82,716,000
Diminution in bulk of trade.....	70,437,000

There has just been held in Tokyo a meeting of Principals of Higher Girls' Schools throughout Japan. It was addressed by Mr. Komatsubara, Minister of Education. His Excellency spoke in a regretful strain of a tendency lately observable among the rising generation of girls to fall into habits of extravagance, and even to depart somewhat from the highest moral standards. The maintenance of bushido in Japan had been largely due to the exertions of women, and nothing could be more regrettable than that they should cease to act this important part in moulding the national character. The objects of female education should be to make good wives and good mothers. Beyond that it was not necessary to look. There might be some women who wished to carry their studies to a more extended point. Due provision should be made for that, but never without full regard to the two cardinal objects mentioned above. This was of special importance in a country like Japan, where the family is the basis of the national polity.

The Vladivostok correspondent of the Shogyo Shimpō writes in a pitiful strain about the condition of his fellow countrymen, numbering 3,000, who are at present settled in that town. He says that they receive less consideration than even the Koreans do, and that the latter subject them to no small ill-treatment with impunity. Of course a great deal of this is due to the comparative poverty of the Japanese, and to the hand-to-mouth lives they lead. But our contemporary's correspondent lays the major part of the blame on the shoulders of the Japanese Consul, whom he describes as "a senile infant," a name given to him by Russian officials. The correspondent says that the Consul seems to have a constitutional dread of asserting himself in any way or exercising the powers attached to his office. Instances of incompetence are adduced, and altogether a scathing indictment is formulated against the Consul.

The Governor General of Kiaochow is now on a visit to Tokyo. Baron Goto is quoted as saying that while he was at the head of the Civil Government Department of Formosa, he often desired to pay a visit to Kiaochow, as he felt that there must be much to learn from the administrative methods pursued by German officials in that colony and its hinterland. He had been prevented, however, from carrying out this purpose, and he is much pleased at the present visit of the Governor-General to Tokyo, as it will furnish to the Japanese much valuable information. The visit has no political significance whatsoever. It is understood to be merely the result of an invitation from the German Ambassador in Tokyo.

Marquis Inouye's condition continues to improve daily. He is now considered to be out of danger, and the Tokyo newspapers have ceased to publish bulletins.

We have the greatest pleasure in announcing that Marquis Inouye has almost completely recovered. He is still suffering from some weakness, which is natural after such an illness, but the thoroughness of his recovery has exceeded all expectations.

There are three centres of depression on the adjacent continent and in the China Sea, but although they cause an unsettled state of weather in Japan, none of them seems at present likely to invade these Islands.

Mr. Carl O'Laughlin, the American correspondent of the Mainichi Dempo, writes an interesting piece of news, which, however, would be more credible were he not the sole depository of it. The news is that President Roosevelt will probably visit Japan after his shooting expedition in South Africa. The President's plans, according to this correspondent, are to leave New York on the 6th of March by one of the German Hamburg-American liners, and at Hamburg to take passage in another German steamer which will carry him to Mombasa. Thence he will start on his shooting tour, and after it is over he will respond to an invitation received from the Chamber of Commerce of Manila. This will bring him within easy reach of Japan, which country he has long wished to visit. Mr. O'Laughlin does not attempt to indicate the date of the President's arrival in Japan, but he speaks of the South African shooting excursion as lasting for two years, so that the second stage of the programme is still more or less in the clouds.

The London correspondent of the Hochi Shimbun, Mr. Philips, writes that the tide of radicalism is certainly ebbing in England and that the next session of Parliament will be a crucial time for the Cabinet. In fact this correspondent, who doubtless represents the views of those surrounding him, believes that the Asquith Ministry will soon go out of power and that it will be succeeded by a Conservative Cabinet under the leadership of Lord Lansdowne. He admits that it is somewhat hasty at this stage to speculate about the personality of the new Prime Minister, but he considers that the choice lies between Balfour and Lansdowne and that the state of the former's health will induce him to cede the power to the latter.

It is stated that after receiving the American Battleship Fleet, which is due to arrive at Yokohama on the 17th of October, the various Japanese squadrons will assemble for the purpose of naval manoeuvres. These manoeuvres will commence on the 25th of October and terminate on the 18th of November; that is to say, they will end at the very time of the march past of the troops at Nara after the military manoeuvres. There will then be an Imperial inspection of the Fleet. It is expected to take place in Kobe Bay, and it will be even a more brilliant spectacle than was the parade of warships in Tokyo Bay after the conclusion of peace.

An excellent sample of the methods pursued by the "war-makers" in the United States is furnished by the notoriety-hunter Hobson. In a speech at the Democratic Convention this swollen-headed hero declared: "In my presence a few weeks ago the President of the United States said there was the greatest probability of war with Japan." This statement was of course promptly and authoritatively denied. The sole ground for Hobson's mischievous misrepresentation appears to have been Mr. Roosevelt's Newport speech, in which the President said:—"It is very possible that we shall have to exercise a continually greater supervision, a continually greater exercise of the right of rejection among immigrants that come hither, and shall, it may be, take an attitude that will tend at first to provoke friction. * * * It is absolutely necessary that if we claim for ourselves the right to those who shall come here, we shall be in trim to uphold that right if any power challenges it, and if it cannot be upheld by words, it cannot be upheld by a coast-defence navy."

THE IMPERIAL COURT.

Lieut.-General Sir Reginald Pole-Carew of the British Army, who recently arrived in Tokyo, proceeded to the Palace in company with Sir Claude M. MacDonald, British Ambassador, where they had audience of the Emperor and Empress. At the same time, Prince Maharajah of Sikkim, India, was also received by their Majesties. The prince graduated from Oxford University this spring. He recently arrived in Japan on his way home.

Prince Chira, third son of the King of Siam has arrived in Tokyo on his way home from Europe. The Emperor will receive him in audience in the near future.

Sept. 21st being the natal anniversary of the King of Siam, the Emperor sent a congratulatory telegram to the Royal Court, and at the same time sent Mr. Niwa, a chamberlain, to the Siamese Legation.

The Emperor will on Nov. 3rd decorate Prince Teruhisa Kita Shirakawa, a student of the Etajima Naval College, with the Grand Cordon of Paulownia.

At noon on Sept. 21st, the Emperor gave a tiffin at the Chigusa Hall in the Palace, to high naval officers of the Staff Office and various Naval Stations who are now in Tokyo in connexion with the special conference. Princes Higashi-Fushimi and Takeda were present on the occasion.

The Crown Princess returned from Tonosawa on Sept. 22nd arriving at Ueyeno at 3:55 p.m.

TRADAL DEPRESSION.

A VERY interesting article in the Peking and Tientsin Times deals with a question which has of late attracted much attention and caused much anxiety, namely, the crisis in the import trade of Tientsin. We extract a portion of the article:—

To get at the true state of affairs, let us hark back to the origin of the direct import trade with Tientsin. It began roughly speaking about 12 years ago, and was pioneered by one or two German firms, who were prepared to take risks. They took them—and all went well for a time. We may assume—in fact, statistics will prove—that in the early stages the business was conducted on moderate lines, and was therefore successful, as it had every right to be. This state of things continued until the Boxer troubles, and after a temporary set-back to trade, an era of prosperity set in, which lasted until a couple of years ago.

The Boxer troubles unfortunately brought in their wake other troubles, and China had to suffer, politically and commercially, from too much attention being paid to her. Tientsin began to boom. The place trebled in size in a couple of years or so. New firms, Chinese and foreign, sprang up like mushrooms, and most of them followed the line of least resistance—viz: the import trade. This is the point where the situation might have been saved—but what happened? The new foreign firms with little or no capital did a large business with Chinese firms with less, and the comical part of it was that the former were giving the latter credit! Fortunately, or perhaps we should say now unfortunately, the country was in a prosperous state, and the Chinese met their engagements faithfully. This enabled the two months' credit system to get a firm foot-hold. The other foreign firms too of better standing, who had hitherto held aloof from the direct import trade, thought it time that they should take a hand, in what appeared to be a prosperous, if a little risky, game. In the meantime Chinese firms were scattering their orders broad-cast, and would give an order in much the same spirit as a foreigner stands a drink. Naturally those firms who had started the direct import trade did not see why they should be "out of it." Their Chinese dealers had treated them well enough up to date and they would stand by them—and they did. All this led up to the most reckless overtrading, with the inevitable result that the markets eventually became glutted with stocks and prices came down with a run. This was the beginning of the end. The so-called credit system came to mean that the Chinese could only pay their bills that were due by selling cargo of which the bills were not due, and thus keeping the ball rolling, to use almost their own expression. In most foreign countries this sort of thing goes by a very different name from "credit system."

While the foreign firms kept the native firms supplied with cargo, this system was well and good, and it is difficult to say how long it might have gone on, when a bomb, metaphorically speaking, was thrown in the mercantile camp. In other words, the Banks made their first public appearance on the scene in the shape of an ultimatum to the effect that after a certain date the conditions of Trust Receipts would be strictly enforced. This came as a surprise, no doubt, to those few firms who never had evaded the conditions of Trust Receipts, but of course they had to suffer for the overtrading of their neighbours, due to the assistance of the Banks. The natural question to ask is—what had the Banks been doing all this time? The answer is not so easy. I have referred previously to a time when the situation might have been saved. I say without hesitation that the Banks could have saved it then, if they had insisted on the conditions of their Trust Receipts being carried out at that time. Instead of that they gave credit, in the shape of cargo, to any firm, however small, and to a far greater extent than the capital (if any) of such firms warranted.

It will be seen that the above is a tolerably accurate account of what has occurred at Yokohama also, happily, however, on a smaller scale, and with the essential difference, we believe, that the great British firms have never departed from their healthy rule of not allowing goods to be taken from their godowns unless payment was made. The story has one phase which deserves comment: it furnishes an object lesson as to the disadvantages of so-called "direct trade." Every reasonable man recognises that the ambition of the Japanese to get into their own hands the conduct of their foreign trade is quite natural, and that the same ambition would be felt by any European people in the circumstances, supposing sentiment to be the dominant factor. But when the practical side of the problem is considered, we are immediately struck by the fact that the local foreign agent does the business far more favourably for the Japanese than the Japanese could do it for themselves. It is a unique advantage for Japan to have at her doors a community of experienced foreign merchants who, not only by their mutual competition insure to their Japanese clients the best possible terms, but also finance the whole trade. It is not possible to say accurately what sum of capital is needed by these foreign middlemen to finance the trade, but the total must run into tens of millions, and where the money would come from were the middleman eliminated, it is difficult to imagine. Japan's friends hope to see co-operative companies formed to develop her material resources, but, after all, a colossal co-operative union already exists in the shape of the foreign mercantile communities and their Japanese entourage. It is not, however, a union on strictly even terms, or on anything like even terms, for the foreign partner puts up all the capital, and, in the export trade at any rate, takes all the risks.

ARMAMENTS AND HYPOCRISY.

THE Japan Herald, while clearly fluttered by our drawing attention to the real purport and aim of its article on "Peace," makes no attempt to deal with facts or to rebut our conclusions,—our conclusions, not those it perversely attributes to us—but endeavours to obscure the real issue by methods which we shall presently expose.

Meanwhile, as it calls in question the logic of our conclusions, we will, stripping them of the misleading sophistries in which the Herald would have them wrapped, restate them with such simplicity that he who runs may read—

- (1) Germany is already the second naval Power (vide Herald's figures);
- (2) Germany is continuing to increase her navy (the Japan Herald says "may" claim, but means "does" claim, though reluctant to say so);
- (3) Therefore this increased navy must be intended either for protection against, or for attacking, the only superior naval Power, Great Britain.

(4) Again, since this increased navy can not be effective either for defensive or for offensive purposes unless it be at least as strong as that of Britain,

- (5) Therefore the German "claim" for an increased navy amounts to an "idea of rivalry with Great Britain."

In view of the facts underlying the present Naval situation in European waters—facts which it is the policy of our contemporary to keep from the public ken as far as possible, and whose existence it much prefers to ignore, we say categorically that to talk of Germany's as a "comparatively small" navy is rank hypocrisy. To say that Germany may claim what she is fast getting, by every means in her power, is rank hypocrisy. For a German newspaper in these circumstances to bewail with unctuous affectation of innocence the present enormous expenditure on armaments is rank hypocrisy. We would advise our contemporary, when next it essays to discourse on "Peace" and the burden of armaments, to leave Germany and the rapid growth of her navy out of its article altogether. The result may (if our contemporary at the same time attaches value to accuracy) be a little more convincing than either of its previous efforts.

To show that our conclusions, so unpalatable to the German apologist, are somewhat widely shared, we quote from one of the most staid and reliable of English organs, the Spectator:—

"The capital evil of the present (naval) situation is that we are engaged in a competition for the command of the sea, which is not only ruinous from the economic point of view, but is fraught with very great temptations and provocations to an outbreak of hostilities. While that competition lasts there is always the danger that the German Government may hold that a point has been reached where they are so nearly equal to us in maritime force in the North Sea that it is worth their while to run the risk of putting the matter to the test.....The only way to prevent war is to prevent the competition reaching the danger-point where Germany may suddenly be tempted to cry: "Now or never!"

Here also for the edification of our contemporary is something from the antipodes, as it were, of British political opinion, the Clarion. A Socialistic organ can hardly be suspected of ultra-Imperialistic or jingoistic tendencies, yet this is what Mr. ROBERT BATHFORD says:—

"I do not believe that any person can accuse Great Britain of provocative action. If there is any menace it comes wholly from Germany. All the threats are German threats. No British politician wants war with Germany. Every sane man in this kingdom knows that for us to attack Germany would be an act of criminal lunacy. Germany has nothing that we want.....If the danger exists it comes from Germany.....It is not mere words, it is acts, that have convinced us. Germany has increased, and is increasing, her fleet. Germany has made, and is still making, the fullest preparations for the embarkation of an army. These are facts. Now, against whom can these preparations be directed? The Germans are not going to invade France by sea; they are not going to invade Russia by sea. And the arrangements are of a nature only suitable to attack upon a near coast."

Speaking of this passage a leading London review remarks, "strong common-sense." We commend it to our contemporary's frank consideration.

A word as to our contemporary's methods, as displayed in the leading article in its issue of the 19th inst. They may be described briefly as a combination of misrepresentation and effrontery: We will bear out the correctness of this description by a few examples. (1) In our article of the 17th occur the words "For Germany.....such a navy (i.e. a navy of indisputable supremacy like that of Britain) would be a luxury and a needless gratification of ambition." The writer of the article in the Herald of the 19th inst. represents us as saying "a navy is to her (Germany) a luxury, etc." That is a very unjust and flagrant misrepresentation. (2) We remark—ed that "the average man would ask, 'if Great Britain was really possessed with these bloodthirsty intentions, why did she not carry them out years ago.'" The Japan Herald represents us as declaring that Great Britain has these intentions—twisting a supposition of ours which bears, in its context, a quite opposite signification, into what it falsely describes as one of our conclusions. (3) The writer of the article credits us with having "created two beautiful pictures—Great Britain waiting to spring at the throat of Germany, and Germany waiting to take similar action." Here are our words—

"England, in short, (such is the idea he—the German apologist in the Japan Herald—would have you—the reader—believe) waits only an opportunity to spring at the throat of the Fatherland."

In other words, an innuendo implied in his own first article is contorted into a statement alleged to be made by us.

(4) The writer in the Herald makes reference to the Russo-Japanese War. We declared the British Navy to be recognized as an instrument of defence, a preserver of the peace.

"What was it doing," asks our contemporary "then (at the time of the recent war) that the guarantee it gives should be broken? There were whispers that Japan would not have undertaken the war without the surety given by the Anglo-Japanese Alliance."

Though we made no mention of, or reference to, that war or that Alliance, and though our remarks dealt essentially with the naval situation in North-Western Europe, yet the writer in the Herald has the assurance to say that "the writer in the Mail has conclusively proved" the fact of British support for Japan in certain eventualities "to be incorrect."

On the contrary, we maintain that it is perfectly correct. The British Navy, as a prime factor of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, did afford Japan that surety. It did have the effect—a most important effect—of confining the war to the Far East; it did prevent the possibility of a general, an European, conflagration; it stood between Japan and such a selfish and insincere coalition as that which in 1895 robbed her of the fruits of victory. No one expects the British navy to achieve the impossible—to invade Siberia, check a raid on the North-West frontier of India, or prevent the ambuscading of German soldiers by the Hereros of South West Africa; nor does its inability to perform any one or all of these feats impugn its supremacy, or the general truth of our statement as to its peace-preserving potentialities.

To leave these misrepresentations, these petty subterfuges, with which our contemporary has made so free, and to come to the point—How is the amazing naval activity of Germany to be explained away?

The Japan Herald's mode of procedure is to belittle that activity in every way. It calls the German navy "a comparatively small one;" it says "an additional battleship" is being laid down instead of four or five; it speaks of the present rapid increase of the German navy as something which that Power may find it necessary to "claim."

Thus, ostrich-like, it hopes that the rest of the world will be put off the scent and German ambitions be realized without attracting an uncomfortable amount of attention. This method may give satisfaction to every true son of the Fatherland, but for the rest it can take in only the ignorant. It is clear that the Japan Herald has no very high opinion of the intelligence of its readers, still for their sakes we would ask it to answer one question. There are sundry small and comparatively weak States, not a great distance from the German frontier, which, in the belief of many people, stand in much the same position towards Germany as NABOTH's vineyard did towards AHAH. Will the writer in the Japan Herald undertake to say that the gigantic naval preparations of Germany are entirely unconnected with certain contingencies which may arise in connection with these States?

Finally, our contemporary sets much store by the fact that its apology for Germany's very big share in the expenditure on armaments was set—beautifully and innocently—in the midst of an article on "peace." Peace is all very well, but there are times when peace is impossible, and the grim alternative has to be considered. Mr Asquith has been talking of peace, says our contemporary. Quite so—to the Peace Congress. What is his reply to recent German naval activity (our pacific contemporary has evidently forgotten recent telegrams)? His reply is (and none will deny its efficacy) a Supplementary Vote for £50,000,000 to build Dreadnoughts and Invincibles.

THE EXPLORATION OF AN UNINHABITED ISLAND.

There is a wonderful island in the Northern Sea. Although once upon a time it was much talked about, not one of the many adventurers who had sailed for this island at the risk of their lives, with the intention of discovering its mysteries, ever succeeded in accomplishing his purpose on account of some mysterious cause.

It is said that not only are there found curious animals living on the island, one of whose skins might cost several hundred yen, but the island itself is very rich in natural products. Among the ardent adventurers that had been taking great interest in it was a certain Hakodate gentleman, who, desirous of exploring this treasure island, set out for that purpose with some kindred spirits last January. Nothing has, however, been heard of them since, which seems to indicate that the island is indeed a real "wonderland."

Prior to this, however, Mr. Rinta Midzushima of Hakodate, formerly a lawyer in Nemuro and well-known as an intrepid fisher, had learnt from a certain foreign fishing steamer that at a point 150 knots N.W. from the coast of Tamurao (belonging to Russia), there is a small uninhabited island which is not marked even in the "Boundary Maps," and whose coasts abound in seals and other valuable sea-animals. On this, his passion for enterprise became quite uncontrollable, so, equipping a sailing vessel, he invited any who might wish to try their luck to join him.

The expedition, whose members consisted of five muscular Ainos then living on Chishima; a daring fellow from the mainland, Yuzaburo Yamagata, nephew of Mr. Midzushima, and Mr. Midzushima himself, with another man, left Hakodate one cold day in August 1906 for the island, where they soon landed in safety.

In June of the following year, Mr. Midzushima, returning to Hakodate, purchased the steamer Teshio Maru and again sailed for the island to fetch the party, whose very existence was now uncertain. On approaching the island, the first thing they did was to fire guns loaded with blank cartridges as a signal, while sailing about off shore. Presently, to their joy, they heard the answering signal of a gun from the northern extremity of the island, which gave them at least the assurance that some one there was alive. On landing, however, they found that three of the Ainos had died and the rest were in a half-dead condition. Mr. Midzushima discovered then, for the first time, how imperfect their preparations and arrangements had been, but found that despite their hardships they had already collected more than sixty bear and leopard skins.

According to a man who wintered on the island, the same was surprised to find, in February last, the prints of some shoes upon the frozen snow of the island, which was known to be uninhabited. With great caution, therefore, they followed the tracks, to discover three Russians with a sledge pulled by dogs. He learnt from them that every winter they come from Russian territory over the hard, frozen pack-ice for the purpose of hunting secretly, the yield being immense.

Mr. Mizushima, who had had practical experience of what was told by those Russians, decided to return to Hakodate for a time and prepare for a second expedition to the island. It is roughly estimated that the amount of profit obtainable in a single year on the island by one person (says the Japanese contemporary from which the above is taken) would be at least 5,000 yen.

SILK GOODS FOR EXPORT.

The Department of Finance has issued a notification to the Tax Bureau and the various Customs offices regarding the control of silk woven goods for export:—

I.—Information with regard to the various transactions of habutae and other silk woven goods, which has been given to the Tax Bureau may be exempted on certain conditions specified by the tax authorities.

II.—Those obtaining permission as above must make an entry in their books describing the details of the silk goods, quality, price, where the staple was manufactured, and the place from which it was consigned. Otherwise the exemption shall be cancelled.

III.—The silk goods traders' guild must pay close attention to all their transactions in order to avoid dishonest practices and must induce dealers not to include goods to be used at home with those exempted from the tax.

IV.—The habutae business will be subject to the following regulations:—(1) Every three months the business done during that period, including the stock, quantity, and price should be reported to the Tax Bureau not later than the 10th day of the following month. (2) On silk which is not to be exported, the tax must be paid before changing hands. (3) For silk which is to be kept in stock for re-manufacture or is to be transferred to another open port for export, information must be made to the Tax Bureau whenever the case occurs. No information, however, is necessary for silk removed to another place for detail work.

V.—Silk woven goods excluding habutae are to be subject to the following provisions: (1) Transactions done during each month, stock, quality, and price must be reported to the Tax Bureau at the end of every month not later than the 5th day of the following month. (2) For goods to be exported application for exempting the tax must be lodged at the Tax Bureau not later than the 5th day of the following month; the petition must contain details as to the destination, quality, quantity, price, etc., of the goods. (3) When the silk is to be removed to another place for detail work information must be given to the bureau prior to the removal in order to obtain consent from the Tax authorities. (4) For goods received during a month from the provinces for the purpose of exporting, the details regarding the quality, quantity, price, etc., must be reported to the Tax Bureau not later than the 5th day of the following month.

THE SECRET CAUSES OF THE WAR WITH JAPAN.

(CONCLUDED FROM LAST ISSUE.)

JAPAN A DANGEROUS AND WARLIKE ENEMY.

"Even if we should defeat Japan on the mainland (in Korea and Manchuria) we could not destroy her, nor obtain decisive results, without carrying the war into her territory. That, of course, would not be impossible, but to invade a country where there is a warlike population of forty-seven millions, and where even the women participate in wars of national defence, would be a serious undertaking, even for a Power as mighty as Russia. And if we do not destroy Japan utterly—if we do not deprive her of the right and the power to maintain a navy—she will wait until we are engaged in war in the West, and will then avail herself of the opportunity to attack us, either alone, or in coöperation with our Western enemies.

"It must not be forgotten that Japan can not only put quickly into the field, in Korea or Manchuria, a well organized and well trained army of from 150,000 to 180,000 men, but can do this without drawing at all heavily upon her population. If we take the German ratio of regular troops to population, namely, one per cent, we shall see that Japan, with her forty-seven millions of people, can maintain a force of 400,000 soldiers in time of peace, and 1,000,000 in time of war. And we must bear in mind the fact that, even if we reduce this estimate by two thirds, Japan, in a comparatively short time, will be able to oppose us in Korea, and march into Manchuria, with a regular army of from 300,000 to 350,000 men. If we make it our aim to annex Manchuria, we shall be compelled to increase our military strength to such an extent that, with our Far Eastern force alone, we can withstand the Japanese attack in the annexed territory."

From the above lines it will be seen how seriously the War Department regarded such an antagonist as Japan, and how much anxiety it felt concerning possible complications with that Power on account of Korea. At the time when this report was presented, and later, in November, the negotiations that Admiral Alexieff was carrying on with Japan not only made no progress, but became more critical, the Admiral still believing that to show a yielding disposition would only make matters worse.

INSIGNIFICANCE OF RUSSIA'S EASTERN INTERESTS.

Bearing in mind the clearly expressed will of the Emperor that all necessary measures should be taken to avoid war, and not expecting favourable results from Alexieff's negotiations, I presented to His Majesty, on the 26th of November, 1903 (December 9th, N. S.) a second report on the Manchurian question, in which I proposed that we return Port Arthur and the province of Kwang-tung to China, securing, in lieu thereof, certain special rights in the northern part of Manchuria. In substance, this proposition was that we admit the untimeliness of our attempt to get an outlet on the Pacific and abandon it altogether. The sacrifice might seem a grievous one to make, but I showed the necessity for it by presenting two important considerations. In the first place, by surrendering Port Arthur (which had been taken away from the Japanese) and by giving up southern Manchuria (with the Yalu enterprise), we should escape the danger of a rupture with Japan and China. In the second place, we should avoid the possibility of internal disturbances in European Russia. A war with Japan would be extremely unpopular, and would increase the feeling of dissatisfaction with the ruling authorities. My report was, in part, as follows:

"The economic interests of Russia in the Far East are extremely insignificant. We have as yet, thank God, no over-production in manufactures, because even our domestic markets are not yet glutted. There may be some export of articles from our factories and foundries, but it is largely due to artificial encouragement, and will cease—or nearly cease—when such encouragement is withheld. Russia, therefore, has not yet grown up to the melancholy necessity of waging war in order to get markets for her products. As for our other interests in the Far East, the success or failure of a few coal or timber enterprises in Manchuria and Korea is not a matter of sufficient importance to make it worth while for Russia to run the risk of war on their account.

"The railway lines that we have built through Manchuria do not change the situation, and the hope that these lines will have world-wide importance, as avenues of international commerce, is not likely, in the near future, to be realized. Travellers, the mails, tea, and possibly some other merchandise, will go over them, but the great masses of heavy international freight which, alone, can give world-wide importance to a railway, will go by sea, simply because they cannot bear railway charges. Such is not the case, however, with local freight to supply local needs. This the roads—and especially the southern branch—will carry more and more, deriving from it most of their revenue, and, at the same time, stimulating the growth of the country, and, in southern Manchuria particularly, benefiting the Chinese population. But if we do not take special measures to direct even local freight to Dalny, that port is likely to suffer from the competition of Yinkow (New Chwang). Port Arthur has no value for Russia as the defence terminus of a railway, unless that railway is part of an international transit route. The southern branch of the Eastern Chinese road has only—or chiefly—local importance, and, from an economic point of view, Russia does not need to protect it by means so costly as the fortifications of Port Arthur, a fleet of warships, and a garrison of 30,000 soldiers.

"It thus appears that the retention of a position of an aggressive character in Kwang-tung is no more supported by economic than it is by political and military considerations. What, then, are the aims that may involve us in war with Japan and China? Are such aims important enough to justify the great sacrifices that war will demand? The Russian people are powerful, and their faith in Divine Providence, as well as their devotion to their Tsar and their country, is unshaken. We may trust, therefore, that if Russia is destined to undergo the trial of war at the beginning of the twentieth century, she will come out of it with victory and glory. But she will have to make terrible sacrifices—sacrifices that may long retard the natural growth of the Empire.

"In the wars that we waged in the early years of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, the enemy invaded our territory, and we fought for the existence of Russia—marched forth in defence of our country and died for faith, Tsar and Fatherland. If, in the early years of the twentieth century, war breaks out as the result of controverted questions arising in the Far East, the Russian people and the Russian army will execute the will of their Monarch with as much devotion and self-sacrifice as ever, and will give up their lives and their property for the sake of attaining complete victory; but they will have no intelligent comprehension of the objects for which the war is waged. For that reason there will be no such exaltation of spirit—no such outburst of patriotism—as that which accompanied the wars that we fought either in self-defence or for objects dear to the hearts of the people.

"We are now living through a critical period. Internal enemies, aiming at the destruction of the dearest and most sacred foundations of our life, are invading even the ranks of our army. Large groups of the population have become dissatisfied, or mentally unsettled, and disorders of various sorts—mostly created by a revolutionary propaganda—are increasing in frequency. Cases in which troops have to be called out to deal with such are much more common than they were even a short time ago. We must hope, however, that this evil has not yet taken deep root in Russian soil and that by strict and wise measures it may be eradicated.

"If Russia were attacked from without, the people, with patriotic fervor, would undoubtedly repudiate the false teaching of the revolutionary propaganda, and show themselves as ready to answer the call of their revered Monarch, and to defend their Tsar and country, as they were in the early years of the eighteenth and particularly in the nineteenth century. If, however, they are asked to make great sacrifices in order to carry on a war whose objects are not clearly understood by them, the leaders of the anti-Government party will take advantage of the opportunity to spread sedition. Thus there will be introduced a new factor which, if we decide on war in the Far East, we must take into account.

"The sacrifices and dangers that we have experienced, or that we anticipate, as results of the position we have taken in the Far East, ought to be a warning to us when we dream of getting an outlet on the unfreezing waters of the Indian Ocean at Chahbar. It is already evident that the English are preparing to meet us there. The building of a railroad across the whole of Persia, and the establishment of a port at Chahbar, with fortifications, a fleet, etc., will simply be a repetition of our experience with the Eastern Chinese Railway and Port Arthur. In the place of Port Arthur, we shall have Chahbar, and instead of war with Japan, we shall have a still more unnecessary and still more terrible war with Great Britain.

"In view of the considerations above set forth, the questions arise: Ought we not to avoid the present danger at Port Arthur, as well as the future danger in Persia? Ought we not to return Kwang-tung, Port Arthur, and Dalny to China, give up the southern branch of the Eastern Chinese Railway, and get from China, in place of it, certain rights in northern Manchuria and a sum of, say, 250,000,000 rubles as reimbursement for expenses incurred by us in connection with the railway and Port Arthur?"

Further on in my report I considered fully the advantages and disadvantages of such a decision, and set forth the principal advantages as follows: "(1) We shall escape the necessity of fighting Japan on account of Korea, and China on account of Mukden. (2) We shall be able to reestablish friendly relations with both Japan and China. (3)

"We shall give peace and tranquillity, not only to Russia, but to the whole world."

RUSSIA'S FATAL UNPREPAREDNESS.

Copies of this report were sent to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Minister of Finance, and Admiral Alexeieff. Unfortunately, my views were not approved, and meanwhile the negotiations with Japan dragged along and became more and more involved. The future historian, who will have access to all the documents, may be able, from study of them, to determine why the will of the Russian Monarch to avoid war with Japan was not carried into effect by his principal co-workers. At present, it is only possible to say, unconditionally, that although neither the Emperor nor Russia desired war, we did not succeed in escaping it. The reason for the failure of the negotiations is evidently to be found in our ignorance of Japan's readiness for war, and her determination to support her contentions with armed force. We ourselves were not ready to fight, and resolved that it should not come to fighting. We made demands, but we had no intention of using weapons to enforce them—and, it may be added, they were not worth going to war about. We always thought, moreover, that the question whether there should be war or peace depended upon us, and we wholly overlooked Japan's stubborn determination to enforce demands that had for her such vital importance, and also her reliance upon our military unreadiness. Thus the negotiations were carried on by the respective parties under unequal conditions.

Then, too, our position was made worse by the form that Admiral Alexeieff gave to the negotiations intrusted to him. References were made that offended Japanese pride, and the whole correspondence became strained and difficult as a result of the Admiral's unfamiliarity with diplomatic procedure and his lack of competent staff assistance. He proceeded, moreover, upon the mistaken assumption that, in such a negotiation, it was necessary to display inflexibility and tenacity. His idea was that one concession, if made, would inevitably lead to another, and that a yielding policy would be more likely, in the end, to bring about a rupture with Japan than a policy of firmness. On the 25th of January, 1904 (February 6, N. S.) diplomatic relations were broken off by the Japanese, and a few days later war began.

My opinions with regard to the relative importance of the tasks set before the War Department of Russia made me a convinced opponent of an active Asiatic policy.

1. Recognizing our military unreadiness on our western frontier, and taking into account also the urgent need of devoting our resources to the work of internal reorganization and reform, I thought that a rupture with Japan would be a national calamity, and I did everything in my power to prevent it. Throughout my long service in Asia, I was an advocate of an agreement with Great Britain there, and I was satisfied that there might also be a peaceable delimitation of spheres of influence in the Far East between Russia and Japan.

2. I regarded the building of the main line of the trans-Siberian railway through Manchuria as a mistake. The decision to adopt that route was made without my participation (I was then commander of the trans-Caspian territory); but it was contrary to the judgment of the War Department's representative in the Far East—General Dukhovski.

3. The occupation of Port Arthur took place before I became Minister of War, and I had nothing to do with it. I regard it as not only a mistake but a fatal mistake. By thus acquiring, prematurely, an extremely inconvenient outlet on the Pacific, we broke up our good understanding with China and made an enemy of Japan.

4. I was always opposed to the timber enterprise on the Yalu, because I foresaw that it might bring about a rupture with Japan. I therefore took all possible measures to have it made an exclusively commercial affair, or to have it suppressed.

5. So far as the Manchurian question is concerned, I made a sharp distinction between the comparative importance to us of northern Manchuria and southern Manchuria. At first, I was in favor of removing our troops as quickly as possible from both; but after the Boxer up-rising, in 1900, I recognized the necessity of keeping on the railway at Kharbin three or four battalions of infantry, a battery, and a hundred Cossacks, as a reserve for the boundary guard.

6. When our position in the Far East became difficult, and there seemed to be danger of a rupture with Japan, I was in favour of decisive measures, and proposed that we avert war by admitting the untimeliness of our attempt to get an outlet on the Pacific; by restoring Port Arthur and Kwang tung to China; and by selling the southern branch of the Chinese Eastern Railway.

When Adjutant General Daniloff returned from Japan, he told me that, at the farewell dinner given him there, General Terauchi, the Japanese Minister of War, said that General Kuropatkin and he had done everything in their power to avert war. And yet even now, I sometimes ask myself doubtfully, "Did I do everything that was within the bounds of possibility to prevent it?" The strong desire of the Emperor to avoid war with Japan was well known to me, as it was to his other co-workers, and yet we, who stood nearest to him, were unable to execute his will.

THE ROYAL TIMBER COMPANY.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.]—Among the first questions suggested by General Kuropatkin's narrative and the editorials, reports, and official proceedings that he quotes, are: Who was State Councillor Bezobrazoff? How did he acquire the extraordinary power that he evidently exercised in the Far East? Why was "everybody"—including the Minister of War—"afraid of him"? Why did even the Viceroy respond to his calls for troops, and why was his Korean timber company allowed to drag Russia into a war with Japan, against the opposition and resistance, apparently, of the Tsar, the Viceroy, the Minister of War, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Port Arthur council, and the diplomatic representatives of Russia in Peking, Tokyo, and Seoul?

No replies to these questions can be found in General Kuropatkin's record of the events that preceded the rupture with Japan, but convincing answers are furnished by certain confidential documents found in the archives of Port Arthur and published, just after the close of the war, in the liberal Russian review Osvobozhdenie at Stuttgart.* Whether * "Osvobozhdenie," No. 75, Stuttgart August 19, N. S., 1905. No question has ever been raised, I think, with regard to the authenticity of these letters and telegrams; but if there was any doubt of it, such doubt would be removed by a comparison of them with General Kuropatkin's history.—G. K.

General Kuropatkin was aware of the existence of these documents or not, I am unable to say; but as they throw a strong side-light on his narrative, I shall append them thereto, and tell briefly, in connection with them, the story of the Yalu timber enterprise, as it is related in St. Petersburg.

In the year 1898, a Vladivostok merchant named Briner obtained from the Korean Government, upon extremely favourable terms, a concession for a timber company that should have authority to exploit the great forest wealth of the upper Yalu River.* As Briner was a promoter and speculator, who had little means and less influence, he was unable to organize his company, and in 1902 he sold his concession to Alexander Mikhailovich Bezobrazoff, another Russian promoter and speculator, who had held the rank of State Councillor in the Tsar's civil service, and who was high in the favour of some of the Grand Dukes in St. Petersburg.

Bezobrazoff, who seems to have been a most fluent and persuasive talker, as a man of fine personal presence and bearing, soon interested his Grand Ducal friends in the fabulous wealth of the Far East generally, and in the extraordinary value of the Korean timber concession especially. They all took stock in his enterprise, and one of them, with a view to getting the strongest possible support for it, presented him to the Tsar. Bezobrazoff made upon Nicholas II. an extraordinarily favourable impression and, in the course of a few months, acquired an influence over him that nothing afterward seemed able to shake. That the Tsar became financially interested in Bezobrazoff's timber company is certain; and it is currently reported in St. Petersburg that the Emperor and the Empress Dowager, together, put into the enterprise several million rubles. This report may, or may not, be trustworthy; but the appended telegram (No. 5) sent by Rear Admiral Abaza, of the Tsar's suite, to Bezobrazoff, in November, 1903, indicates that the Emperor was interested in the Yalu enterprise to the extent, at least, of the two million rubles mentioned. Bezobrazoff's "Company," in fact, seems to have consisted of the Tsar, the Grand Dukes, certain favoured noblemen of the Court, Viceroy Alexeieff, probably, and the Empress Dowager possibly. Bezobrazoff had made them all see golden visions of wealth to be amassed, power to be attained, and glory to be won, in the Far East, for themselves and the Fatherland. It was this known influence of Bezobrazoff with the Tsar that made "everybody" in the Far East "afraid of him"; that enabled him to enlist in the service of the timber company even officers of the Russian General Staff; that caused Alexeieff to respond to his call for troops to garrison Feng-wang-cheng and Shakhedze; and that finally changed Russia's policy in the Far East and stopped the withdrawal of troops from southern Manchuria.

General Kuropatkin says that the Russian evacuation of the province of Mukden "was suddenly stopped by an order of Admiral Alexeieff, whose reasons for taking such action have not, to this day, been sufficiently cleared up." The following telegram from Lieutenant Colonel Madritoff of the Russian General Staff to Rear Admiral Abaza, the Tsar's personal representative in St. Petersburg, may throw some light on the subject.

* Asakawa, who seems to have investigated this matter carefully, says that the original contract for this concession dated as far back as August 26, 1896, when the Korean king was living in the Russian legation at Seoul as a refugee.—"The Russo-Japanese Conflict," by K. Asakawa, London, 1905, p. 289.

TO ADMIRAL ARAZI,
HOUSE NO. 50, FIFTH LINE,
VASSILI OSTROFF, ST. PETERSBURG.

Our enterprises in East meet constantly with opposition from Dzun-Dzun of Mukden and Taotai of Fengang-cheng. Russian officer-merchants have been sent East to make reconnaissance and examine places on Yalu. They are accompanied by Khunkhuzes whom I have hired. The Dzun-Dzun, feeling that he is soon to be freed from guardianship of Russians, has become awfully impudent, and has even gone so far as to order Yuan to begin hostile operations against Russian merchants and Chinese accompanying them, and to put latter under arrest. Thanks to timely measures taken by the Admiral, this order has not been carried out; but very fact shows that Chinese rulers of Manchuria are giving themselves free rein, and, of course, after we evacuate Manchuria, their impudence, and their opposition to Russian interests, will have no limit. *Admiral (Alexeieff) took it upon himself to order that Mukden and Yinkow (New Chwang) be not evacuated.** To-day it has been decided to hold Yinkow, but, unfortunately, to move the troops out of Mukden. *After evacuation of Mukden, state of affairs, so far as our enterprises are concerned, will be very, very much worse which, of course, is not desirable.** To-morrow I go to the Yalu myself.

MADRITOFF.

Shortly before Lieutenant Colonel Madritoff sent this telegram to Admiral Abaza, Bezobrazoff, who had been several months in the Far East, started for St. Petersburg, with the intention, evidently, of seeing the Tsar and persuading him to order, definitely, a suspension of the evacuation of the province of Mukden, for the reason that "it would inevitably result in the liquidation of the affairs of the timber company." From a point on the road he sent back to Madritoff the following telegram, which bears date of March 26, 1903 (April 8, N. S.)—the very day when the evacuation of the province of Mukden should have been completed, in accordance with the Russo-Chinese agreement of March 26 (April 8, N. S.), 1902:

(No. 2.)

TO MADRITOFF,
PORT ARTHUR.

There will be an understanding attitude toward the affair after I make my first report. I am only afraid of being too late, as I shall not get there until the 3rd (April 16, N. S.) and the Master (Khozain) leaves for Moscow on the 4th (April 17, N. S.). I will do all that is possible and shall insist on manifestation of energy in one form or another. Keep me advised and don't get discouraged. There will soon be an end of the misunderstanding.

(Signed)

BRZOBRAZOFF.

On April 11, 1903 (April 24, N. S.), Bezobrazoff sent Madritoff from St. Petersburg a telegram written, evidently, after he had made his first "report" to "the Master." It was as follows:

(No. 3.)

TO MADRITOFF,
PORT ARTHUR.

Everything with me is all right. I hope to get my views adopted in full as conditions imposed by existing situation and force of circumstances. I hope that if they ask the opinion of the Admiral (Alexeieff), he, I am convinced (sic), will give me his support. That will enable me to put many things into his hands.

BEZOBRAZOFF.

General Kuropatkin says that Admiral Alexeieff gave him "repeated assurances that he was wholly opposed to Bezobrazoff's schemes, and that he was holding them back with all his strength"; but the Admiral was evidently playing a double part. While pretending to be in full sympathy with Kuropatkin's hostility to the Yalu enterprise, he was supporting Bezobrazoff's efforts to promote that enterprise. Bezobrazoff rewarded him, and fulfilled his promise to "put many things into his hands" by getting him appointed Viceroy. Kuropatkin says that this appointment was a "complete surprise to him," and it naturally would be, because the Tsar acted on the advice of Bezobrazoff, von Plehve, Alexeieff, and Abaza, and not on the advice of Kuropatkin, Witte, and Lamsdorff. It will be noticed that von Plehve—the powerful Minister of the Interior—is never once mentioned by name in Kuropatkin's narrative. Everything seems to indicate that von Plehve formed an alliance with Bezobrazoff, and that, together, they brought about the dismissal of Witte, who ceased to be Minister of Finance on the 16th of August, 1903 (August 29, N. S.). Anticipating this result of his efforts, and filled with triumph at the prospect opening before him, Bezobrazoff wrote Lieutenant Colonel Madritoff, on the 12th of August, 1903 (August 25, N. S.), as follows:

(No. 4.)

The great saw-mill and the principal trade in timber will be transferred to Dainy, and this in copartnership with the Ministry of Finance. The Manchurian Steamship Line will have all our ocean freight, amounting to twenty-five million feet of timber, and the business will become international (mirovaya). From this you will understand how I selected my base and my operating line.

In view of the complete defeat of such clear-sighted statesmen and sane counsellors as Kuropatkin, Witte, and Lamsdorff, there can be no doubt that Bezobrazoff's "base and operating lines" were well "selected."

The document that shows most clearly the interest of the Tsar in the Yalu timber enterprise is a telegram sent to Bezobrazoff at Port Arthur, in November, 1903, by Rear Admiral Abaza, who was then Director of the Special Committee on Far Eastern Affairs, over which the Tsar presided, and who acted as the latter's personal representative in all dealings with Bezobrazoff and the timber company. In the original of this telegram, significant words, such as "Witte," "Emperor," "millions," "garrison," "reinforcement," etc., were in cipher; but when Bezobrazoff read it, he (or possibly his private secretary) interlined the equivalents of the cipher words, and also, in one place, a query as to the significance of "artels"—did it mean chasseurs, or artillery? The following copy was made from the interlined original:

(No. 5.)

From Petersburg, Nov. 14-27, 1903.

TO BEZOBRAZOFF,
PORT ARTHUR.

Witte has told the Emperor that you have already spent the whole of the two millions. Your telegram with regard to expenditures has made it possible for me to report on this disgusting slander and, at the same time, contradict it. Remember that the Master counts on your not touching a ruble more than the three hundred without permission in every case. Yesterday I reported again your ideas with regard to the reinforcement of the garrison and also with regard to the artels (chasseurs or artillery?) in the basin. The Emperor directed me to reply that he takes all that you say into consideration and that, in principle, he approves. In connection with this, the Emperor again confirmed his order that the Admiral telegraph directly to him. He expects a telegram soon, and immediately upon the receipt of the Admiral's statement, arrangements will be made with regard to the reinforcement of the garrison, and, at the same time, with regard to the chasseurs in the basin. In the course of the conversation the Emperor expressed the fullest confidence in you.

ABAZA.

General Kuropatkin refers, again and again to the Tsar's "clearly expressed desire that war should be avoided," and he regrets that His Imperial Majesty's "co-workers" "were unable to execute his will." It is more than likely that Nicholas II. did wish to avoid war—if he could do so without impairing the value of the family investment in the Korean timber company—but from the above telegram it appears that, as late as November 27, 1903—only seventy days before the rupture with Japan—he was still disregarding the sane and judicious advice of Kuropatkin, was still expressing "the fullest confidence" in Bezobrazoff, and was still ordering troops to the valley of the Yalu.

THE YOUNGEST BRITISH MINISTER.

Mr. Winston Churchill, whose marriage to Miss Clementine Hoizer has probably by this time taken place, occupies a very similar position of promise in the present Liberal Government to that held by the Hon. G. N. Curzon when he was snatched from English political life to be the youngest Viceroy of India. Mr. Churchill, who last March entered the Cabinet for the first time as President of the Board of Trade, is the eldest son of the brilliant Lord Randolph Churchill, and a direct descendant of the Great Duke of Marlborough, the victor of Blenheim and Malplaquet. In the brief 33 years of his life, he has seen, travelled and done much. He was a war-correspondent with the Spanish forces in Cuba, served in the Malakand and Tirah Expeditions, charged with the 21st Lancers at Omdurman, and finally fell a prisoner into the hands of the Boers while acting as the war-correspondent of the Morning Post in South Africa. His escape from the gaol at Pretoria and his subsequent adventures are doubtless still remembered, but the present Cabinet Minister and "future Premier of England" would probably not feel flattered by the official description of the escaped prisoner "wanted" by the Boers seven years ago:—

"Englishman, 25 years old, about 5ft. 8in. high, indifferent build; walks a little with a bend forward; pale appearance; red brownish hair; small moustache, hardly perceptible; talks through the nose; cannot pronounce the letter 'S' properly; and does not know one word of Dutch."

Like many another youthful and pushful publicist, he has been guilty of indiscretions, and has suffered rebuffs. The most signal of these was his sensational defeat in North-West Manchester when presenting himself for re-election on his elevation to Cabinet rank. Subsequently he found a safe seat at Dundee, and his latest venture, in the direction of matrimony, is believed to be as safe. The bride-elect is one of the most beautiful girls in London society, and (what is more) is generally admitted to be as good as she is beautiful.

THE NONCONFORMIST CONSCIENCE AT THE SEASIDE.

The thorny problem of Sunday amusements has been settled with some curious compromises at a certain sea-side resort not fifty miles from Manchester. The question of Sunday trams was put to the vote; the majority of the electors of the borough, which comprises the greater part of the town, voted against Sunday trams, while the majority of the electors of the district council, which governs the smaller part of the town, voted for them. Consequently anyone who takes a Sunday tram through the borough to the district council area gets a free ride, for the trams must pass through the borough on their way. Again, public motor cars are not allowed to ply for hire on Sundays on the Marine drive, but horse wagonettes do so on the promenade. Yachts, and rowing boats are not allowed on the marine lake, but excursion steamers and yachts do business at the end of the pier. The strangest compromise is in connection with the municipal open-air band, which now plays on Sunday nights. Some of the pieces played are sacred and some secular; the many coloured "fairy lights" which usually enliven the gardens and boulevards are conspicuously absent; no coffee, chocolates or cigarettes are sold by the attendants although the programme-boy is still trading; there is no interval, and "God Save the King" is omitted at the end of the performance. Last Sunday the "Hallelujah Chorus" was substituted, the audience standing up with uncovered heads. Finally; the town clock does not strike on Sunday nights.

We may add that a very little reflection suffices to identify the above marine watering-place as Southport, where Nonconformity is in great force.

THE BOOKSHELF.

Modern England; A Record of opinion and action from the time of the French Revolution to the Present Day. By ALFRED WILLIAM BENN, Author of "The History of English Rationalism in the Nineteenth Century." In two Volumes. London: Watts & Co. 1908. It would seem that with human nature constituted as it is, with psychological laws working as they do, the production of absolutely impartial history is an impossibility. Histories are only relatively impartial. Take the chief English historians of the nineteenth century: Hallam, Napier, Milman, Grote, Arnold, Thirlwall, Finlay, Macaulay, Kingslake, Helps, Froude, Buckle, Freeman, Goldwin Smith, Stubbs, Gardiner, Seeley, J. R. Green, Lecky, Bryce, George Trevelyan and J. A. Symonds. Can anybody pretend that any one of these authors is absolutely impartial? Are not the records in every case more or less tinged with the sentiments, the leanings and the prejudices of the composers? The same events take a different character according to the bent of the mind which is engaged in analysing them. In recording the opinions and actions of others Mr. Benn gives us more than occasional glimpses of his own prejudices. The political chapters found in his two volumes are full of one-sided statements. For Disraeli and his political opinions Mr. Benn has not a good word. He describes him as an "unscrupulous and desperate adventurer," as guilty of "impudent falsehood," as a man who sacrificed principle to his love of power. In Tory administration Mr. Benn can discern little good; in the policy of the Liberal leaders little evil. Gladstone's blunders in Egypt and in the Transvaal are represented as displaying fine statesmanship. In describing England's political development, then, Mr. Benn is not a safe guide, despite the fact that his method of tracing the steps of progress the English people have made is decidedly a good one.

Montesquieu forty years before the French Revolution began declared that liberty was the organic principle of the English Constitution, the supreme end for whose attainment every part of its complicated mechanism had been devised. Mr. Benn aims at showing how by the concurrence of a number of agencies England obtained more liberty of every kind than any other country; how vexatious trammels on individual action were one after the other removed; how the people participated more and more in the passing and the administration of laws, in the choice of rulers and in shaping the general policy of the State, and how the country came to be governed by public opinion to an extent elsewhere unknown.

Some of the headings of Mr. Benn's chapters are somewhat fantastical and seem designed to emphasize the writer's personal opinion more than is desirable in a work which claims to be historical. In Vol. I. we have such titles as "Organised Anarchy," "The Gods Arrive," "The Epic of Nations," "The Liberal Odyssey," "Prometheus Unbound," and in Vol. II. "Cosmic Economy," "A Study in Explosives," "The Enpress of India's Grand Vizier" (Disraeli, who is misrepresented sadly throughout the whole Chapter) and "The Last Paladins." The choice of apt titles is an art in itself. Mr. Benn does not excel in it by any means. Most of his titles are misleading.

Mr. Benn is most interesting and instructive when he keeps away from politics. His Chapter in Vol. I. entitled "The Churches and the World" gives an account of the struggle for supremacy between the Evangelicals, the Tractarians and the Broad Church Party. The temporary success of the Tractarian movement, which was started by Keble, is rightly traced by Mr. Benn to the subtle influence of a man who began life as an Evangelical and ended it as a Roman Catholic. John Henry Newman was beyond dispute the greatest pulpit orator of the nineteenth century, and, in the opinion of many its greatest prose writer also. "Newman considered," says Mr. Benn, "that neither Evangelicalism, nor, indeed, popular Protestantism in any form had a good logical case against infidel attacks. Heartily accepting the Bible as an infallible authority, he held that it needed the warrant of an infallible Church to be accepted, and that any argument against the Church applied equally to the Bible." Before joining the Church of Rome Newman tried to convince the English clergy that consistently with their ordination vows they might hold something very like the whole cycle of Roman doctrine as formulated before the Council of Trent. This provoked a general outcry. It opened people's eyes to the real significance of the Tractarian movement. The secession of Newman and Ward robbed the party of its greatest intellectual lights. The luminaries that remained were soon eclipsed by such men as Milman, Whateley, Hare, Thirlwall, and Maurice—all Broad Churchmen, who were soon after reinforced by Arthur Stanley, Charles Kingsley, Frederick Robertson and Benjamin Jowett. Mr. Benn in the chapter on which I am commenting and in a chapter entitled "Cosmic Economy" traces the steps by which liberal theological thought overcame prejudice and made itself popular throughout England. Thirlwall, Milman and Charles Hennel began the battle against orthodoxy and scriptural infallibility. The cause of rationalism was greatly helped by scientists like Charles Lyell, whose Principles of Geology dealt a mortal blow to the Pentateuch accounts of the Creation and the Deluge. The publication of Essays and Reviews marked an epoch in the history of theological controversy. All but two of the contributors were Oxford men and all but one, Charles Goodwin, were clerics. For 10 months this remarkable volume, which shook the old foundation of Christianity to such an extent as to threaten the very existence of the creed, was left undiscussed. It was Frederic Harrison who in Oct., 1860, pointed out in the Westminster Review the true inwardness of the rationalistic manifesto. Led by Bishop Wilberforce, the whole bench of Bishops joined in a public protest against the volume. Arthur Stanley came into the field in the Edinburgh Review and administered a number of scathing censures all round, only sparing his own personal friends Temple and Jowett. These discussions excited public interest to the highest pitch, and copies of Essays and Reviews were sold at an astonishing pace. Two of the clerical contributors were prosecuted as heretics before the Court of Arches, but were acquitted on all but a few counts of the accusation. On this occasion the Judge decided that a clergyman might, consistently with his ordination vows, deny the historical accuracy or the moral soundness of any passage in the Bible. Williams and Wilson subsequently appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the points given against them in the first trial, and obtained a reversal of the sentence passed on them in every particular. In reference to the eternity of future punishment, a doctrine that now seems to have been entirely given up by the majority of clergymen, the supreme tribunal declared by the mouth of Lord Chancellor Westbury, that the formularies of the Church were not sufficiently distinct to warrant the condemnation of a clergyman who hoped for the ultimate salvation of the sinner. Pusey and certain Evangelical allies, however, drew up a declaration of belief in Scriptural infallibility and the eternity of hell, which every clergyman was invited for the love of God!! to sign. "Less than half of those in holy orders responded to this touching appeal," Mr. Benn tells us, "and few names of much authority figured in the list." Made bold by the decision of the Court of Arches, men like Bishop Colenso published their views. Free inquiry sprang up everywhere, and so the laity and a certain section of the clergy were delivered from the thralldom of Rabbinical superstition. There was, as Carlyle puts it, a big Exodus from Houndsditch. The emancipation was greatly hastened by the writings of Huxley, Tyndall, Spencer, Lecky, Sir John Seeley (the author of Ecce Homo) and T. R. Green, the celebrated historian of the English people, who himself was once a clergyman, but who came to the conclusion that it is impossible "to conciliate the Church of Dogma with the Church of Science," and who strongly advocated disestablishment on the ground that State support to a Ritualist Church means paying money to make England papist (Letters of T. R. Green, p. 171-172, 292, 378.), a view which many people share with him to-day.

The last chapter of Mr. Benn's "Modern England" entitled "The Eclipse of Genius" is perhaps the best in the whole work. His theory is that the conditions for the production of geniuses are no longer present with us. He reviews all the various fields of inquiry and divers kinds of literature and sums up the conclusion he has reached as follows:—"As for our own age, it would be surprising to learn that any English writer now under fifty has produced a book which will be remembered as literature fifty years hence. The literary output is, indeed, enormous both in prose and poetry; and much talent is devoted to literature as a profession: never before has the average of cleverness, and even of good writing, been so high. But high averages are no substitute for exceptional genius; as Goethe says, a hundred greys do not make one white horse."

"This dearth of first class literary ability has been ascribed to the absorption of the nation's best intellect in scientific work. The explanation might hold good if science had more distinguished names to boast of than literature. Unhappily, she has not. Here also, or, rather, here especially mediocrity seems to be the order of the day since 1877, the year of Clifford's and Clerk Maxwell's deaths.* We often hear of new discoveries and new methods, but there is a remarkable unpersonality about them; they are the result of co operation among a number of inquirers rather than of individual genius." The causes that have brought about the decline of genius in England according to Mr. Benn, are "the rise of a strong Government, the reform of abuses, the growth of democracy, the accumulation of wealth, the spread of education and the dissolution of theological beliefs." Among these factors the last two are certainly the strongest. Popular education has not only repressed originality and spontaneity among the higher intellects, it has called into existence a new public of inferior taste and less critical ability. Men of letters and men of science lay themselves out to capture this new public by catering to its demands. The removal of abuses and the destruction of false dogmas that were effected in the last century undoubtedly contributed to the decay of genius. The higher intellectual energisings of the past have ever been displayed in the presence of and against cruelty, falsehood, and injustice. Byron is quoted by Shelley as saying "Most men are cradled into poetry by wrong." In accordance with this law, genius, where it still exists, is chiefly to be found among the collectionists or the anarchists to whom our whole society is hateful as an organized spoliation of the working classes. If a sense of wrong is necessary to the production or at any rate to the manifestation of genius, the illusion whose decay is such a marked characteristic of modern English life is still more so. On this subject I will quote the words with which Mr. Benn concludes his review of modern English life. "This decay of illusion must be counted among the causes to which the decline of genius is due. For illusion was the very air that it breathed—an illusive estimate of the evils to be overcome, and of the forces available for their overthrow; an illusive estimate of historical heroism, individual or collective, creating epics and dramas through all the past; illusive estimates of what the old religions had effected, leading to estimates equally illusive of what new religions or new sciences might also effect, creating Utopias in the future—these, in great measure, inspired the splendid imaginative and historical literatures, the vast philosophies, the glowing oratory, whose discontinuance we now deplore. Yet for our own clearer sense of reality we must also thank those children of light, the men of genius, less careful than the children of this world to secure the perpetuation of their race. For that very organization of experience which has dispersed the mists of ignorance is their work: nor can its lessons be more impressively conveyed than in the warning given by Matthew Arnold, as the sum of Wordsworth's teaching, neither to make man too much a God, nor God too much a man." W.D.

* There have, however, been bright exceptions to the rule, such as that of the late Lord Kelvin, for instance.

OPINIONS ON THE KATSURA CABINET.

The September Taiyō gives the opinion of three well known men on the Katsura Cabinet. The first of these is Mr. Katō Takaaki, the new Ambassador to the Court of St. James. Here in an abridged form is what Mr. Katō has to say on the new Ministry. Hitherto all we have affirmed in reference to the unsatisfactory condition of the country's finances has been disregarded. "Mere negative criticism, pessimism, needless alarm!" These are the epithets that have been applied to the warnings of coming disaster given by us. But Marquis Katsura has displayed in an unmistakable manner clear evidence that he regards the financial situation of the country as calling for heroic measures. He has set his hand to the financial plough, and is not the man to look back. What relief it is possible for him to give to the situation it is as yet impossible to determine, but we can not but admire the way in which he has personally gone to the root of the financial difficulties. His decision to fill the post of Minister of Finance himself for a while was a very wise one. Hitherto the Ministers of Finance, in order to retain their position in the Cabinet, have always quietly acquiesced in the demands for money made by the War Party in the Ministry. Whether the money required was really available or not, they have made it appear as though it was (Kore made to iu mono wa zaisei no kyoku ni ataru frock coat ren (nakama), ga jiko no chii wo tanoisu ga tame ni sabre to (military party) wa iwo mukae, sono yōkyū suru ga mama ni chōjū [kiki-shitagau] shi, itsu mo nai mono wo aru yō ni miseru kufu wo suru kara, etc.). Consequently it has happened that gigantic schemes involving big sums of money have been sanctioned by the Cabinet without opposition. The fact is that our Budgets are compiled in a way that makes it very difficult for ordinary people to find out what is the real state of our finances. Take the surplus funds as stated in our Budgets as an example of what I mean. The surplus given is often no real surplus at all. It includes a portion of loans that were sanctioned in a former Budget but which have not yet been floated. The unissued part of a sanctioned loan is called surplus revenue (Kono jōyokin naru mono ga jissai genkin ga nokotte oru no de wa nakute, zenkaiki nendo ni boshū subeki kōsai-daka no uchi de, boshū sarenakatta mono ga jōyokin to iwarete oru). The money the Government expected to borrow and did not borrow it calls a surplus, and it appears as such in the accounts. That the surplus is no real surplus is apparent to everybody who looks beneath the surface. Where Budgets are carefully compiled big surpluses are naturally of rare occurrence. Where they occur frequently they are taken to indicate that a Government is demanding more from the people than is actually required. The attempts of our Ministers of Finance to make money that does not actually exist appear as if it did in their accounts is the fruitful source of all manner of evils. The military party have up till now never understood the real financial situation. There are people who think that it shows cleverness in a financier to cook accounts in such a way that the non-existent shall seem to exist. But the majority of people prefer to be honestly told just how the nation's ledger stands and to know the full extent of their liabilities. The determination of Marquis Katsura, one of the leaders of the Military party, to look into the state of the country's finances for himself is from every point of view a subject for rejoicing. We should like to see General Terauchi succeeding Marquis Katsura as Minister of Finance. That would certainly lead to fundamental changes in the military policy of the country. It is plain to everybody that at present we are not able to borrow money. If the situation should alter sufficiently to allow of our issuing new loans, even though they be for productive purposes, I am opposed to the State's adopting this course. We have already done enough borrowing. The country must live and develop itself on its ordinary income. To revert to this policy is the only proper financial adjustment worthy of the name. (Kompon-teki uo zaisei seiri wa shakkin seisaku wo haiseki shite, saiyū sai- shutsu no heikō wo tamochi, sono tokoro ni kenko naru chiban wo tsuku ni aru). To alter our lavish ways because we are no longer able to borrow would be acting like a prodigal son who stops his wild living only because his father refuses to supply him with money. We want the Katsura Government to guarantee that they sincerely repent of the country's modern ways and that they will not go back to them even though the means of doing so be placed within their reach.

Mr. Hanai Takuzō's views on the present Cabinet are next given by the Taiyō. Here is the gist of what he has to say. There is an old Chinese saying which affirms that "the past can't be wiped out." But it seems that this does not apply to politicians. For here we have Marquis Katsura, who so signally failed in the matter of the Portsmouth Treaty, returning to power a few years after the event. It would seem that the responsibility of statesmen for their acts does not last long and that popular clamour too is short-lived and can be regarded lightly by men in office. We are to have Count Komura as Foreign Minister. So we shall see some splendid diplomatic feats! Liberal, indeed, are the terms of the release from responsibility granted to our statesmen by the nation (Kokumin no seiki-teki sekinin menjō no giryō wa tai shita mono de aru!). Why the Seiyūkai Cabinet fell to pieces nobody seems to know. The Seiyūkai members say that it was owing to a revival of clanism. I am not satisfied with this explanation, yet I must confess at the same time that there seems to me to be something unconstitutional about the change of ministry that has taken place. If it be true that the present Government is hostile to all political parties as such and is endeavouring to govern independently of all parties, then of course the Government is acting unconstitutionally. That Marquis Katsura has left the Seiyūkai out in the cold is no concern of mine. I do not belong to any political party, for the simple reason that no existing party seems to me established on a sound basis. But what I say is this: let Marquis Katsura declare his policy, and if it be of a kind to commend itself to politicians he will find supporters, that is, he will make his own party. After all said and done, in modern times parties are formed and held together by the declared policy of their leaders. Instead of boasting that he will act but not talk, let Marquis Katsura both talk and act, as Western statesmen do, and he will thus secure a following. Whether Marquis Katsura will succeed in at once straightening out our finances and improving our relations with other countries is doubtful. But his assumption of the control of the Department of Finance is a promising sign. There is one thing I regret about the new Cabinet, and that is the number of oldish men that it contains. We need new blood in our ministries. To me the Vice-Minister of the Home Department would have made a better Minister than Hirata; and Mr. Okada, the Vice-Minister of Education, would have been an improvement on Komatsubara, and as regards the Department of Justice, Tsuzuki Keiroku would have been a more suitable man than Okabe. Marquis Katsura's preference for old men is not a very good sign. In reference to Gotō, there are all sorts of opinions held. Some predict that he will play an insignificant part in the new Cabinet, maintaining that he lacks the qualities that would render him prominent; others think that he is destined to astonish the nation as head of the Department of Communications by the reforms that he will inaugurate. He is decidedly the most interesting figure in the new Cabinet. But whether he will fulfil all that is expected of him is very doubtful.

The views of Mr. Senkoku Mitsugi are also given by the Taiyō, but they are too vague to bear reproduction in these columns.

THE LAW COURTS.

CLAIM FOR OIL.

A case in which the Rising Sun Petroleum Co. claim yen 33 from Mr. J. B. Hammond came up on Sept. 18th in the Yokohama Local Court before Judge Kato.

Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. Ideura and Defendant was absent.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that Mr. Hammond purchased from the Rising Sun Petroleum Company a quantity of volatile oil valued at yen 33 in January this year, and did not pay for it. Plaintiffs had lodged a claim in the present Court in June, but Defendant had objected to it.

The Judge at once passed judgment in favour of the Plaintiffs, as Defendant was absent.

CLAIM AGAINST A SHIPPING FIRM.

The hearing of a joint case instituted by Messrs. Tsuji and Goto, hide and skin dealers, against the British India Steam Navigation Co., claiming yen 457.96 and yen 483.70 respectively, was resumed on Sept. 18th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miyake.

Defendants' Counsel produced certain documents and the Indian Law Reports, and contended that the shipping company had fulfilled their duty in every possible respect towards carrying the cargo of sheep skins in question. Neither the crew of the steamer concerned, nor the defendants, could admit the negligence charged by Plaintiffs' Counsel.

Plaintiffs' Counsel stated that the ship-owners would be exempted from damage arising from "robbery" or the "Act of God" as specified in the bill-of-lading. There was no attack in this case by robbers or pirates nor any "Act of God" during the voyage of the ship from India to Japan. Nevertheless a portion of the goods was found to have been stolen.

Defendants' counsel held that robbery was not by forcible means only. The word also included unavoidable theft, though not by robbers or pirates.

Referring to the judgment given in the Tokyo Appeal Court in the case between Messrs. Siber, Wolff and Co., the Ocean Steamship Co. and the China Mutual Steam Navigation Co., (a translation of which was published in the Japan Mail of Aug. 12th, 13th and 14th,) Plaintiffs' Counsel said that "thieves" were regarded as the same as robbers, and that the theft must be taken to have been larcenously committed. The Ship-owners were responsible for larceny. Counsel also referred to the Commercial Code, after which he stated that the skins were stolen from some bales. The bales from which they were taken were re-packed in a clumsy fashion.

Plaintiffs' Counsel said that the goods were carried from India to Hongkong, where they were transhipped to a steamer belonging to the Java-China-Japan Line and brought to Yokohama. Counsel was willing to ascertain on which ship the theft occurred.

Plaintiff's Counsel stated that, on whatever steamers the offence took place, Defendants must bear the responsibility specified in the bill-of-lading which they had issued.

The hearing being concluded, the Judge decided to give judgment on Sept. 25th.

YACHTING.

Races were arranged for Saturday afternoon but Mary started alone in the big class, and so there was no race. Ten Larks went out, however, at 2.30 p.m. with the result that No. 12 (Poole) won; No. 11 (Mason) second, and No. 2 (sailed by Eagling) third. The Russell Cup was the first prize. There was quite an exciting finish between the 4th and 5th boats. No. 3 (Clive) was leading, but made the common mistake of standing along the line long after it could have gone round and cut straight across. No. 14 (Stornebrink) was thus able to get in ahead. As the latter, however, was disqualified earlier in the race, No. 3 gains the fourth prize.

The yachts of the Mosquito Club also raced round the Widow Buoy Course with the result that Edna was easily first, Pete second and Winsome third. Following are the times:

CRICKET.

"BORN IN JAPAN" "V. "THE WORLD."

The return match of this time-honoured fixture was played on Saturday under conditions which, on the whole, favoured neither bowlers nor batsmen to any appreciable extent. The previous encounter had resulted in an easy victory for the Far Eastern eleven, but another and, it must be admitted, an unwonted destiny was in store for them on this occasion.

Play opened at 1.55. "The World," losing the toss, were sent in to bat—a wise proceeding on the part of the rival captain, as subsequent events made clear. Foster and Spencer Smith were the first of the ingoing batsmen. The start was sensational, for Mollison, bowling from the pavilion end at a pretty pace, spread Foster's wicket with his second ball before a run had been scored.

The new comer, Bousfield, opened the score with a glide to leg for 3 off the last ball of Mollison's first over, the latter thus losing that distinction dear to the heart of every bowler—Maiden and Wicket. Squire's over from the other end produced 5, but the batsmen naturally enough played with caution, and scoring was slow. Bousfield relieved matters in Squire's fifth over by cutting him prettily for 4, while Mollison's fifth and six overs were both maidens. At this juncture, the standing score at 28, Kilby relieved Squire, and with the first ball of the following over Bousfield was clean bowled by Mollison with the score at 32. The outgoing batsman by careful play at a difficult time had put together a useful 20.

Spencer Smith was now joined by Hume, and the former after a succession of singles got behind the ball to better purpose with a 4 to leg off Mollison. Hume, after some lucky strokes in the slips, where he was missed off Mollison's bowling, settled down to safer play and the two batsmen between them took the score to 77 before Smith was caught and bowled by Kilby. McClure now joined Hume, who was treating the bowling of Strome—the latter having relieved Mollison—with scant respect, putting the 1st and 3rd balls of his 4th over to the leg boundary for 4. Off the fourth ball, however, Hume was caught at the wicket, (90-4-35.)

Scott joining McClure, both batsmen played the bowling with confidence, and made the longest stand of the day. Boundaries came freely, for the most part off Hearne's bowling, who had taken the ball at the settlement end. Three consecutive overs from that bowler cost 32 runs, 24 of which were from boundaries. Mollison, with the score at 144, resumed bowling at the Pavilion end and in his second over dismissed Scott, clean bowled (158-5-43.)

McClure was now joined by Cox, but the partnership was short-lived, for the new-comer was caught at the wicket by Walker for 4. McClure, however, continued to play capital cricket, and caused some sensation by driving Hearne for 4, and then out of the ground for 6. Mollison's next turn proved fatal to his career, for the 3rd ball of the latter's 13th over—a maiden—found its way to his wicket (174-7-35.)

The score was carried by Buckle and Read to 192 when the innings was declared closed.

After a short interval "Born in Japan" started their formidable task—make nearly 200 runs in an hour and a half, or, in the event of failing to play out time, to succumb to defeat. Their opening batsmen appeared to find Cox's fast trundling little to their liking. In his second over that bowler with the score at 13 (strange to say) took three wickets for no runs. The rot was stopped by Kilby, who may be said to have saved the fortunes of his side. In partnership with Hearne (who compiled a useful 20 before being dismissed by a catch by Read off Cox) he raised the score to 42 for 4.

Mollison now joined Kilby, and some interesting play resulted. Both the bowling and fielding were such as allowed of no liberties being taken, Bousfield in particular, at slip, distinguishing himself in the latter department. Hayward was put on to bowl, but suffered severe punishment, being finely cut for four by Kilby, and driven to the leg boundary by the same player. McClure went on at the Pavilion end, but his first over produced 10 runs. At length, however, Mollison skied a ball to short leg, which was held (79-5-23.)

Kilby was now partnered by Strome, the latter playing in his usual cautious style. Foster relieved McClure, but to little purpose, and the score was carried to 102 before Strome was caught at third man for 14.

An over later, on account of the failing light, and without further addition to the score, stumps were drawn. "Born in Japan" had lost six of their best men for 102—the sixth wicket of their opponents had fallen at 163—and owe the failing light a debt of gratitude for saving them from defeat. Though the contest resulted in a draw, those who believe that cricket of all games may be played for the sake of the game itself, irrespective of results, will congratulate themselves on an interesting and well-contested match. The great weakness of the "Born in Japan" side lay in their bowling, for apart from Mollison none of their bowlers could make headway against the batsmen of "the World." On the other hand the bowlers of "the World" as a whole kept a capital length, though Cox somewhat spoilt an otherwise excellent analysis by several wild wides. "The World" also showed a distinct superiority in the often despised but nevertheless important department of fielding. Below are given the full score and analysis.

NIPPON HORSE COMPANY.

Several shareholders of the Nippon Horse Company, proprietors of the Tokyo Jockey Club, states the Nichi Nichi, have prosecuted the directors, Osada, Shibahara, Makita, Hitotsuyanagi, Ishida, Sakuma, and Irie, of the company. According to the complaint lodged in the Tokyo District Court, the Directors purchased land and raised a loan without the consent of the shareholders; they misappropriated money paid in by the shareholders before the company was inaugurated; and they received an illegal commission from a capitalist to whom the company owed a loan. In consequence of this case, Lieut.-General Hijima, in reserve, and Okuma, promoters, have been examined in the Court as witnesses. On the other hand, all the members of the committee of the Tokyo Jockey Club have resigned, excepting Mr. Y. Ozaki, and the chairman.

CUSTOM PROTESTS.

Mr. Yamazaki, Director of the Yokohama Customs gave a decision on Sept. 1st on a protest instituted by Messrs. Grosser and Co., No. 180, Yamashita-cho, Yokohama. The firm imported jute canvas on which the Customs appraisers imposed duty at the rate of yen 1.48 per 10 square yards in accordance with No. 752 of the statutory tariff. The importers contended that the material was a kind of linen duck and the duty should be at the rate of sen 4.7 per square yard under No. 35 of the Anglo-Japanese conventional tariff. The protest was dismissed on the ground that the goods were not manufactured with linen but with jute.

On the same day, another decision was passed in the Customs on a protest lodged by the American Trading Company. The appraisers ordered the firm to pay the duty of ad. val. 30 per cent. in accordance with No. 538 of the statutory tariff. The importers contended that the article was a kind of machine and should be dealt with under No. 458 of the tariff, which provides 15 per cent. The protest was admitted and the duty rate was changed as requested by the importers.

The Director of the same customs rendered a decision on Sept. 21st on a protest filed by the Kaitsu-sha. It appears that the landing agents imported a liquid on which the authorities levied duty at the rate of yen 16.50 per kin in accordance with No. 96 of the tariff. The importers stated that the material was a kind of liquid perfumery and that accordingly the duty should be at the rate of sen 92 under No. 39 of the Franco-Japanese Conventional Tariff. The protest was dismissed for the reason that the chemical was manufactured with spices and volatile liquid, and was a kind of artificial musk.

Mr. Yamazaki, Director of the Yokohama Customs, gave a decision on Sept. 22nd on a protest filed by Mr. F. A. Oldis, No. 90, Yamashita-cho. It appears that the firm imported "reglet," "furniture," quoin," and "composing sticks." The appraisers imposed, on the first and second mentioned articles, 40 per cent. ad. val. duty in accordance with No. 506 of the statutory tariff, and on the third and fourth, 30 per cent. ad. val. duty under No. 406 of the tariff. The importers contended that these were implements to be used by printers and that the duty should be ad. val. 20 per cent in accordance with No. 392 of the tariff. The Director said that the "composing sticks" were included in workmen's implements; "quoin" are regarded as wedges to fasten the type in the galleys, and "reglet" and "furniture" were materials for forming spaces between the lines of the type. Consequently the composing sticks should be dealt with under the 6th clause of No. 392 of the tariff. The Directors dismissed the protest for the other articles.

SEIZURE OF TWO RUSSIAN STEAMERS.

The Nagasaki Correspondent of the Asahi reports that the Russian Minister for Commerce and Industry has lodged a case in the Nagasaki District Court through the Russian Consul in that city against the Russian Far East Steamship Company, claiming yen 119,300 for goods sold to the defendant firm. Plaintiff's representative subsequently seized the two steamers Amur (1,292 tons) and Dnieper (1,489 tons) belonging to the shipping company, now at Nagasaki. In the Plaintiff's petition for selling the ships by auction, the Court passed judgment in their favour. Prior to the present case, the Kitagata Coal Company of Saga filed in the same Court a claim of yen 1,662 for coal supplied to the shipping firm; K. Nakamura of Hyogo prefecture for the payment of a promissory note of yen 8,693; and M. Napalokoff, the Nagasaki agent of Defendants, for yen 1,658 paid on their behalf. As the creditors had already seized the steamers, the whole debt of the steamship company amounted to yen 131,313. The price of the ships seized has been estimated at about yen 50,000 only. This sum will be paid to the creditors in accordance with the proportion of their credit.

from a tea house in Kanagawa since Aug. 1. On Sept. 22nd, they were removed to Public Procurators' Office in the Yokohama District Court.

1,292 tons) and Dunker (145 tons) being to the shipping company, now in liquidation. In the Plaintiff's petition for setting aside the auction, the Court passed judgment in favour. Prior to the present case, the Coal Company of Sogda filed an appeal against a claim of yen 2,662 for coal supplied to a shipping firm; K. Nakamura of Hiroshima for the payment of a promissory note for yen 8,693; and M. Napolakoff, the Russian representative of Defendants, for yen 1,958 paid on account. As the creditors had already secured the steamship, the whole debt of the steamship company amounted to yen 151,313. The proceeds of the seized ship were estimated at about yen 100,000 only. This sum will be paid to the creditors in accordance with the proportion of the claims.

The Tobe police have arrested ten men on a charge of stealing goods valued at yen 5,000

It is repeatedly reported by Japanese journalists that the Government will deal strictly with betting at various race clubs after Oct. 1st when the new Penal Code will come into force.
In connexion with the foregoing report, a staff of the Hochi interviewed a few of the judicial officials. At first, Mr. Kawanura, Vice-Minister of Justice, is reported to have said that betting and gambling are of course injurious to social morality. These actions were strictly dealt with under the present Criminal Code and the new laws regulating it will be still stricter. The betting at various race clubs was an offence to be treated with the provisions of the present and new code.
The Department of Justice, however, has definite views regarding the control of race clubs in general after the enforcement of the new Penal Code. Mr. K. Hiranuma, Director of the Bureau of Civil and Criminal Affairs, said that condemnation of betting at race clubs seemed to have been agreed to by the public, yet the Government had connived at this act though it was an offence to be dealt with in accordance with the Penal Code. He reported that the Government will deal strictly with betting at race clubs after the enforcement of the new code seemed to be in the sense a misrepresentation. He further went on to say that betting must be treated with the code without hesitation. If the betting and race meetings are still left uncontrolled because of the apparent fact that its prohibition would unfavourably affect horse breeding, it would seem that the destruction of social order was, on the other hand, likely to ensue. In conclusion, he remarked that betting of course must be dealt with under the Penal Code, or wise special law must be issued regarding the control of gambling at the race clubs.
The question could not be put off any longer.

About 8 p.m. on Sept. 23rd, fire broke out in house of a merchant dealing in timber and lumber in Fukagawa, Tokyo, destroying three ho-

BASEBALL.

After a fast and exciting game, the Washington University team scored its first victory on Saturday afternoon at Tokyo, defeating Waseda by 4 runs to 2.

The game started at 2 p.m. on the Waseda grounds.

The weather looked very unfavourable at first but cleared up during the progress of the game. A crowd of about 10,000 was present, including many foreigners from Yokohama. The pitchers of both teams were in excellent form, and were well backed up by the other members of the team. No runs were scored by either side until the 3rd inning, when Washington and Waseda each scored one. It looked at first as if Washington was going to pile up the runs, but they were well kept down by Waseda, until the 8th inning when Washington scored 3 to Waseda's 1. No runs were scored in the ninth.

Both teams played a good game, no errors being made by Washington and only two by Waseda.

Score by innings is as follows:—

The second game between the Washington University and Waseda, played at Tokyo on Wednesday resulted in a win for the latter by 6 runs to 3. The attendance was much greater than on the previous occasion, owing no doubt to the beautiful weather and the occurrence of a national holiday.

The Y.C. and A.C. were defeated by the Yokohama Baseball Club after a closely contested game, on Wednesday afternoon at 3.30 p.m. by 2 runs to 1.

LONG SEA-VOYAGES.

A long voyage at sea is usually attended with certain evils—discontent among the crew sometimes culminating in mutiny; difficulties of supply; sickness and, possibly, death. The master of the German sailing ship Preussen now in harbour remarked, in making his report to his Consular authorities, that he had very little to trouble them with as the voyage had been "a short one." It had as a matter of fact lasted for 112 days, but that was 35 days less than the average time on this run. Doubtless in this hustling age, many people could not be found to agree with the captain. These large ocean going sailers are often lost to sight for months together, and, for reasons readily understood, the difficulty of finding men willing and qualified to work them increases every year.

The dimensions of the Preussen, according to official figures, are: gross registered tonnage 5090, net registered 4765. Her gross capacity in cubic meters is 14, 93. She is 410 feet in length and 54 feet wide, and brings from New York a freight of 194,000 cases of oil.

DAILY MARKET REVIEW.

The review of the Tokyo Stock Market sent us by Mr. H. Maxwell, Share and Stock Broker, is to the following effect.

Friday, September 18.

The market this morning opened strong, Tankos (old) advancing 5 sen. Other stocks followed the suit as far as Kanegafuchis new, which declined 5 at 24 30. Dai Nippon Sugar, declined 40 at 71.90, while the new shares put on half a point. The Stock Exchange shares declined 75 and 40 for the old and new at 116.55 and 63 respectively. Fijis and Kanegafuchis witnessed some active support by the houses, representing bullish interests.

The afternoon market opened somewhat weaker, though Tokyo Railways gained as much as 55 sen, which is considered rare in view of the stock being completely neglected. Sugars (Dai Nippon) new, advanced 1/4 point, and Tokyo Stock Exchange shares old improved by 25 sen.

On the Jiki market things remained quiet, the range of fluctuations being 20-30 sen.

Tokyo, September 19.

The market, as if to fall in line with the autumnal weather, which is noted for its changeableness, at least, in this country, this morning started weak, all stocks dropping 5-70 sen from yesterday's level. There were no fresh undertakings by the bears, which is accountable for the decline. It was rather the bulls who out of sheer precaution, lose no opportunity to close at the least profit. Besides the weather, if any other cause could be assigned for the fall, it must be found in the slightest fall of Japanese bonds on the London market.

The afternoon market saw a little recovery, though fractionally. Competent authorities say that the present is a lull before the storm.

Tokyo, September 21.

As predicted in our Saturday's report, the market started very firm this morning, and the afternoon market also showed an upward tendency. Otaru lumber shares were bulled in a conspicuous manner, with the result that something like a furor was created and the feeling of the market underwent a complete change. Excess of exports over imports to the extent of one million and a half known in the morning, coupled with the fine weather, added another zest to the market. Apparently a bull market is in sight.

September 22nd.

The market opened very strong this morning, almost every stock being bulled. In the afternoon, the same strong feeling was maintained. On the other hand, the Osaka market did not show the same strength as the Tokyo market, as it happened that rain is visiting that part of the country. Operators believe that they are out of the wood, and being convinced of the bright prospect of the rice crop, they cannot think of anything else but bulling the market. The phenomenal rise of the Keihin electric shares—4 points—in two consecutive markets has furnished food for reflection, though the cause of rise is rather amusing. A mysterious cave was found near by the railway to which thousands of wise people make pilgrimage daily in the hope of being benefited by the unforeseen power. Hence, the prospect of better traffic receipts.

Tokyo, September 24.

Both markets, morning and afternoon, witnessed somewhat large profit-taking sales which is responsible for the decline. The rainy weather has greatly also accelerated the fall, mingled with fresh bearish operations. The Toyo Sato (oriental sugar) recently put on the market, however, attracted considerable attention on the part of the speculative classes, and the stock shot up with surprising rapidity. This formed a subject of animated discussion among the operators. Otherwise the market presents no special feature worth describing.

The Princess Imperial will return on Sept. 22nd from Tamosawa in the Nikko district, where she has been staying since the beginning of the hot season.

AIR TORPEDO.

A NEW INSTRUMENT OF WARFARE.

Messrs. Krupp, of Essen, says the Berlin correspondent of the Standard, have acquired all the patent rights in the new air torpedo invented by Colonel Unge, a Swede, subject to one reservation, that the Swedish Government shall have the right to make full use of the latest weapon in every form.

The air torpedo, which is one of the deadliest instruments of destruction yet invented, will be shortly introduced into the German Army and Navy, which will thereby possess more effective equipment than any other Army and Navy in the world. Colonel Unge's torpedo can be fired without producing any recoil, hence the torpedo tube is light, and easy to move quickly from place to place. It is conveyed on a motor car, and can be speedily unmounted and fired much more rapidly than Field Artillery can be brought into position for firing.

The air torpedo can be used in every kind of warfare. In the bombardment of fortresses the new weapon will exercise a destructive effect on the most formidable works of defence. In field operations the torpedo can be hurled against bodies of troops as well as against troops in covered position. In view of the fact that the torpedo can be fired without the least noise it will be difficult for the enemy to locate the position of the torpedo battery by which it is being attacked. In coast defence the air torpedo could be fired in such way as to drop on the decks of hostile battleships.

Colonel Unge has invented an air torpedo of greater calibre for use in naval warfare, so that henceforth warships will be liable to be torpedoed from above as well as beneath the water line. Military experts declare that the air torpedo is an epoch-making invention, which adds one more horror to modern warfare.

"GENERAL" BOOTH on Aug. 8th, set out on another lengthy tour when he left Waterloo Station for Southampton, en route to South Africa. Many of the chiefs of the various departments of the Salvation Army were on the platform and gave their general an encouraging send-off.

We are informed by the Agent of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China that he is in receipt of a telegram from his London office intimating that the Directors of the Bank have declared an interim dividend for the half year ended the 30th June last at the rate of 13 per cent. per annum, free of income tax.

An instance of the extreme competition arising out of the pursuit of baseball is reported from Hanishina in Nagano prefecture. A pupil, 14 years old, of a primary school, has committed suicide by fatally injuring himself in the breast with a sword. The day previous to the tragedy he had a dispute with several other boys, with whom he was playing baseball.

"LA LANGUE DES FEMMES," said La Bruyère, "est leur écueil; et elles ne la laissent pas rouiller." One therefore expects the fair sex to be skilled in the art of repartee, but a good example or two is nevertheless refreshing. Miss Mary Gawthorpe, the Suffragette who so completely turned the tables on an interruptor, who in a clumsy attempt at ridicule asked her, "Don't you wish you were a man?" by replying, "No, do you?" has added to her laurels. "Don't you think mothers should stay at home with their children?" asked a callow youth, eager to score off a well-known married Suffragette who had just spoken. Miss Gawthorpe reflected for a second. "Well," she said her voice taking an earnest, intimate note, "I don't know about that; but I do think children should stay at home with their mothers."

DETAILS of the fighting at Butenib show that the Moors displayed unexampled bravery, advancing under a fierce fire to within 400 metres of the French position. Thousands during the night attempted to take the French blockhouse, but the assault was stopped by wire entanglements and the infantry's hand-grenades. The fighting ended at two o'clock in the morning.

AN INTERESTING EXAMPLE of the assistance given by science in the detection of crime is afforded by the following. The clothing of a late alleged murderer at Middlesbrough, Eng., seemed to bear very faint stains. A jet of oxygen turned on to the suspicious marks gave them a ruddy hue, and several photographs by the colour process showed blood-stains very distinctly in their natural colour.

THE cost of armed peace, says Dr. Theodor Barth, a German writer of distinction, is somewhat serious. Germany's burden amounts to $325,000,000 annually. The average German family of five heads has to pay, year after year, 100 marks to enjoy this armed peace. More than half a million of men in their best years are constantly under arms. Never before has Europe seen such an enormous armed camp.

THE autumn meeting of the Matsudo Race Club will be held on Oct. 2nd, 3rd and 4th. The registry of horses closed on Sept. 15th included 34 foreign horses and 127 Japanese. Among the domestic griffins, Sawaturi, Kumakui, Hitaka and Kinsei are reported to be in excellent condition. The programme of each day includes 13 races instead of the usual eleven. The highest prize for country-bred horses will be yen 1,500.

THE HIGHEST AMBITION of the proprietors of the palatial hotels in all the Continentalspases is to place their special apartments at the disposal of Edward VII. The fact that the King of Great Britain has stayed at a hotel on the Continent gives it an invaluable "cachet," and for years after American tourists will pay any money for the privilege of sleeping in the King's bed. But, adds the writer, the privilege is a vain one, for the King always brings his own bed with him.

THERE has been trouble at Buda Pesth. A lady of that city went to a menagerie one day, and the monkeys broke loose. When she got home and took off her hat, which was of the "Merry Widow" type, she found a monkey grinning at her from among the flowers and fruit, fainted, and is now bringing an action. We should have thought, remarks a London contemporary, she would have been rather taken with the monkey as giving just a finishing touch to her appearance.

As the whole world seems to be discussing the marriage laws just now, it is interesting to notice the case, quoted by a contemporary, of a young fellow who married after having signed an agreement with the firm which employed him not to do so during a certain time. It cannot be too widely known that all these agreements not to marry are utterly void in law, and that, anyone who discharges an employee for breaking one makes himself liable for damages for wrongful dismissal.

MR. OCHIAI, the principal secretary of the Imperial Stud, said the Kobe Herald of Saturday, has arrived at Kobe to attend, as previously reported, the race meeting of the Naruo Hayashi Keiba Kai, which opens to-morrow. Mr. Ochiai is reported to have stated that he has had a conversation with Governor Hattori on the subject, and that the strictest control will be exercised over the meeting. Should such incidents take place as occurred at the previous meeting, the Club's race meetings may be suspended. Indeed the Stud is prepared to suspend race-meetings generally in this country for the time being, if the proceedings cannot be conducted in a quiet and orderly manner, as is the case in Europe. The Stud is, however, firmly convinced of the value of racing in improving the breed of horses.

PROFESSOR MILNE, the eminent geologist and "earthquake expert," who for many years was in the service of the Japanese Government and now resides at Shide, Isle of Wight, where he has set up a seismological observatory, wrote to a London paper last month:—"The storm inside our earth still goes on. Yesterday I reported that three earthquakes had been recorded at Shide. To-day we had a fourth, which commenced at 1.8 a.m. and attained its maximum twenty-six minutes later. Its origin was 3,800 miles distant.

A HONGKONG Chinawoman apparently knows how to deal with the grasping rikisha coolie. She prosecuted one for demanding more than his legal fare and also with assaulting her. Her story was that he took her from St. Francis Street to Gough Street, and when she tendered him fourteen cents he wanted more, and as she did not comply with his demand he struck her on the eye. After hearing the evidence his Worship said he was not satisfied as to who struck first. However, he would fine the coolie $2 for demanding more than his fare, and $2 for the assault.

THE Imperial Theatre, which adjoins the site of the old Royal Aquarium, is not to be demolished, says a London paper, but will be taken down in sections and re-erected on another site about a dozen miles away—on a spot which is for the present a secret. All the material in the theatre is being stacked away, and in about seven months time will be seen again exactly as at Westminster. One of the most difficult things to remove from the theatre was a mirror which occupied the whole side of Mrs. Langtry's dressing-room—the back part of the theatre had to be broken away before it could be got out.

IN CONNECTION WITH the recent intrusion of a German torpedo-boat into the Tyne during the progress of the naval manoeuvres, the following incident, recalled by Col. Hale in the Nineteenth Century, may be of interest. Only a year ago an officer, entering a railway carriage, found it occupied by British brother officers returning from a staff or regimental ride. They had only one topic of conversation, the extraordinary fact that, whilst engaged in the work, they had tumbled clean and plump into a party of German officers engaged in identically the same occupation. The scene of the ride seemed to possess equal attractions for the military officers of both countries.

THE BISHOP of Manchester walking along the sands at Blackpool one day last month, reached his central mission pulpit to find his youthful son addressing the crowd. The bishop, unseen by his son, listened attentively behind the screen at the rear of the platform, and when Mr. Knox concluded his brief address, his lordship stepped out and proudly patted the surprised young man on the shoulder. Commencing his own address, Dr. Knox said a Birmingham gardener once exclaimed of an American bishop, "Oh, if I could only get some cuttings from him!" "He (the speaker) added "You have heard my son; some cuttings from him would make a better bishop than you have got to-day."

We learn from the Nagasaki Press that the Moji Shimpo, in its issue for Tuesday, gave some further particulars of the trouble between the Captain and crew of the German steamer Maria Rickmers. Nine Chinese seamen accuse the officers of brutality and state that when they arrived at Moji they wished to leave the vessel on that account. When they requested the payment of their wages, which amounted to yen 1,715, covering a period of six months, they were refused. Through the Moji police the men communicated with the Chinese Consul at Nagasaki, and later with the German Consul at Shimonoseki, but without obtaining redress. They have no means to take legal proceedings for the recovery of their money, so it is improbable that they will obtain their wages. The ship left Moji on Sunday for Tsuruga, the nine Chinese remaining behind.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FOREIGN AND JAPANESE INTIMACY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—After reading your editorial entitled Dr. Loenhof in the Weekly Mail Sept 12th, I feel like offering a bit of testimony from my own experience. For while you take exception to his dictum that owing to difference of views, real intimacy between foreigners and Japanese is not often to be found, it seems to me you yield altogether too much in the argument from difference of domestic life.

For the last three years I have lived much of the time in the home of a Japanese friend. I feel just as much at home there as in the house of any other friend and am made as much a member of the family. The home is Japanese in all respects, nothing foreign about it. Of course I conform as nearly as possible to the manner of home life as one would in the home of a friend anywhere. No doubt there are habits on both sides a change in which would be pleasing to the other party. That would doubtless be so in the case of foreign friends, as we all have our peculiarities. This is not the only Japanese home whose hospitality I have enjoyed and of course the pleasure of entertainment in its turn has not been wanting.

I have no desire to under-estimate the influence which difference of customs has in making the formation of real intimacy difficult, but I can not believe it is so strong a factor as claimed. You say "one can not 'drop in' casually to have a friendly chat with a Japanese acquaintance" etc. Whatever may be true of the large cities of the Empire, that certainly does not represent the state of things in the interior if I may judge from my own experience, and I can hardly believe that I stand alone in this respect.

Yours truly,
Sept. 16th, 1908.

PROFESSOR TERRY.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—Will you kindly permit me to correct one error in your account in to-day's Mail of the celebration of my birthday by the Imperial University—my sixty-first, by the way, not sixtieth.

Your reporter puts it that: "Mr. Terry, in replying, * * * declared that he was altogether unworthy of such a distinction, and that he felt ashamed rather than gratified when he looked back to his comparatively useless career." I beg to assure you and my friends that I did not say anything of that kind. I hope I am reasonably modest as to my own work and merits, but such extravagant self-depreciation would have been ridiculous. I did not even go so far as to say that I was unworthy of the distinction. Whether I was or not is for others to judge; I expressed no opinion. Certainly I have neither thought nor said that I looked back upon my career at the University with shame or any feeling resembling shame, or that it was "useless," or even "comparatively useless." My remarks were not put into writing; and in such a case, unless a reporter takes down in shorthand what is said, perfect accuracy in a report can not be expected. But the report in the Mail exceeds the limits, and is a total departure from anything that I said.

Yours, etc.
HENRY T. TERRY.
Tokyo, Sept. 21, 1908.

THE "VOSSISCHE ZEITUNG" AND MARQUIS KATSURA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—In reference to a paragraph in your issue of the 21st inst. relating to an alleged interview between "the Tokyo correspondent" of the Vossische Zeitung and Marquis Katsura, I beg to inform you that the said journal to the best of my knowledge has no standing correspondent in Tokyo, and that I, its standing correspondent for Japan, have had no interview with Marquis Katsura. Some time ago, however, I was informed that a gentleman had represented himself as travelling correspondent of the Vossische Zeitung in Tokyo. Whether he had an interview with Marquis Katsura, and if so, what passed at the same, I am of course unable to say. I have not yet seen any letters from him in the V.Z. Thanking you for the courtesy of your columns, I am, Sir,

Yours very truly,
Yokohama, September 21st.

THE PUBLIC HALL.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—I shall be greatly obliged if you will kindly insert the enclosed letter on behalf of the Far Eastern Public Hall Company, Ltd.:

As the re-building of the Hall is nearing completion, the Directors consider it advisable to give the new buildings a name that will mark them, not only as a place of assembly for Dances, Bazaars, and Public Gatherings, but also as a Theatre. When it becomes known that Yokohama possesses a Theatre there will be much better chances of attracting good companies than in the past.

The name should be short, suitable, and, as far as possible, cosmopolitan, so that it will readily become familiar to all sections of our Yokohama Community.

Of several names already suggested one of the following might be suitable,—"Lyric," "Comedy," "Globe," "Gaiety."

The Directors will be glad to receive any suggestions, which should be sent to the undersigned at 183 Settlement, before September 30th, 1908.

Yours faithfully,
Yokohama, September 22nd, 1908.

RUSSIAN MAILS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—I beg to call attention through the columns of your paper to the manner in which letters from the Vladivostok or Odessa Post Office are delivered. One of my letters from Odessa, via the Vladivostok Post Office, before reaching Yokohama had a note on the back to the effect that the person to whom the letter was addressed was no longer in Yokohama, while the person (myself) had been residing here all the while. The above can be proved by an unopened letter which I have in my possession. For the sake of public welfare I hope that this letter will draw the attention of the Russian Post-master, who will put an end to the manner in which members of his staff are handling letters.

Enclosing my card, I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,
Yokohama, September 22nd.

YOKOHAMA PUBLIC HALL.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR, I see, in your journal of this date, a letter from the Chairman of the Public Hall Company—inviting suggestions for a new name to the building. "Man in his time plays many parts," and under its old and familiar cognomen, the Public Hall has been useful on many occasions and in diverse ways. It has served as temporary Pro Cathedral of the Episcopal Church: it has been by turns the Temple of Thalia, of Melpomene, of Terpsichore, and others of "the tuneful Nine": its walls have resounded with Music, Ancient and Modern, from Bach and Mozart to "San Toy": artists like de Kotski, Remenyi, Patey and Sherwin, even Negro minstrels, conjurers, skit-dancers, peripatetic troupes of every calibre have made their appearance there. It has been the grand Forum of debate when the Conscript fathers of the settlement enunciated their sublime, though futile, protest against Treaty Revision. In fact from the glorious pageant of the Queen's Jubilee to Fancy fairs and Boxing competitions: from the celebration of the Pious memory of Saint Andrew to Cinderellas and roller-skating, every form and variety of entertainment has found place. For all these purposes the original title of Public Hall (although at times irreverently shortened to "the Pub," by gay and giddy youth) has served us well. Then why change it? But, autres temps autres mœurs, and in this free and enlightened twentieth century we are urged to consider a new name for our place of general meeting or assembly.

Now of late years there has arisen a blessed comfortable, precious word of universal meaning and application called PAN—which I think will be found eminently suitable for the purpose. I believe it fills all requirements:—short, suitable, cosmopolitan, so that it will readily become familiar to all sections of our Yokohama community. Short, it undoubtedly is: suitable I claim it is in view of the eclectic uses of the ci-devant Public Hall; and, I imagine that such a word already familiar in our mouths as household bread will not easily be forgotten by any member of the Yokohama community. So far as I know the name is unique, no other such building in the world possessing the proud and convincing title of the Pan. Needless therefore to elongate it by calling it the Yokohama Public Pan; for, without a rival or namesake, the "Pan" will soon be known to every impressario or entrepreneur in the two hemispheres as that elegant Temple of the Muses, which crowns the Acropolis of Yokohama, in the up-to-date Empire of Japan.

Pedants and purists may object that the proposed name is too short and undignified. But its brevity is just the supreme advantage; this wonderful and adaptable prefix is capable de tout. It can be amplified, at the taste and fancy of the entrepreneur in charge of each entertainment, thus:—Pan-American, Pan-Anglican, Pan-Germanic, Pan-Hellenic, Pan-Presbyterian, Pan-Slavonic, Pandemonium (absit omen!). Pandora, Panopticon, Panorama, Pantheon, and so forth, according to the exigencies of the case.

Indeed the idea is capable of great extension and development. For instance, the Seal of the Public Hall Company, the official stationery and announcements, an illuminated sign on the building itself might all display the effigy of the great god "Pan"! But I refrain from further elucidation. The above will show that if our one and only "Duke" (Grand "Marshall" of the Revels) shall see fit to follow my suggestions, such a course will redound to his lasting glory and honour. Esto perpetua!

Yours truly,
Yokohama, 23 September, 1908.

PANSY.

ELEMENTARY BUDDHISM.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR.—Will you kindly notify in your paper that the Rev. A. Lloyd is expected to return to Tokyo at the end of October, and hopes to begin his lectures on elementary Buddhism in November and to continue them till April, except in January, when there will probably be only one.

They will take place at the Kyobunkwan, Ginza, at 2.30 p.m. on the first and third Saturdays of the month.

Will all those who wish to join kindly send their names to me before the end of October at my new address, 718 Gotoyama, Shinagawa.

The fee will be 5 yen for the course, which can be paid at the first lecture.

Yours faithfully,
(Miss) F. C. TRINGLE.

THE KOREAN NATIONAL DEBT REDEMPTION FUND.

THE PROCEEDINGS AGAINST YANG KITAIC.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.

The Court resumed the proceedings at a quarter to ten.

Judge: (addressing Accused). Some witnesses had been called, but before proceeding with their examination, he wanted to ask the accused about one or two points. In an advertisement printed in the Tai Han Mai-il Shinpo of May 15, it was stated that a sum of 61,042.23 was at the banking department of the Collbran-Hoswick Development Company. But it had been stated in the course of the trial that a sum of 10,560 yen had been collected by the Central Society from people in country districts. Why had no mention been made of this sum in the advertisement?

Accused: The sum of 61,042.33 was all that had been collected up to that date through the newspaper office. The accused did not know about the other sum.

Judge: Had all contributions received from country districts been included in the sum of 61,042.33? Who had received those contributions from rural districts?

Accused: Didn't know who had received them.

Judge: Not received at your office?

Accused: Didn't know whether they had been received there or not.

Judge: Ought not the accused to know whether they had been received at his office or not?

Accused: Thought he ought to know about what had been received at his office.

Judge: Then the Court wanted to know if the sum of 10,560.01 had been received at his office?

Accused: Who had mentioned this sum, the accused did not know. Possibly somebody who wanted to incriminate him had done so.

Judge: As nobody wanted to incriminate the accused, he had better not talk in that manner.

Accused: Only said so, because he did not know who had received the money in question.

Judge: Then he had better say simply that he did not know. Did the accused know that the 10,560.01 yen collected from country districts had been sent direct to the Central Society?

Accused: As this money had not been received at his newspaper office, he did not know definitely, but supposed that it had been received direct by the Central Society.

Judge: Then this sum was not included in the 61,042.33 yen?

Accused: Thought not.

Judge: Did the advertisement of May 15 only refer to the money received at the newspaper office?

Accused: Yes.

Judge: Not a single yen in it belonged to the Central Society?

Accused: A sum of a little over 30,000 had been transferred to the Central Society.

Judge: Any other sum?

Accused: Supposed 10,000 yen lent to M. Martin also formed part of the 61,042.33 yen. But he had only put in the advertisement as told by Mr. Bethell.

Judge: The money transferred to Holme, Ringer & Co. of Chemulpo was not mentioned in the advertisement. Why?

Accused: That money had come from the fund at the Central Society, and so no allusion was made to it.

Judge: From the advertisement in question, it appeared that a sum of over 30,000 yen was at the Central Society.

Accused: He knew of the affairs of the newspaper office, but had no knowledge of the affairs of the Central Society.

Judge: But was not the accused one of the Auditors of the Central Society? Why had he passed an advertisement which he ought to have known as incorrect?

Accused: He was not one of the principal officials of the Central Society, and did not possess sufficient power.

Judge: Did the accused mean to say that he was not aware of the discrepancy between the advertisement and the actual financial situation?

Accused: He was aware of the transfer of a sum to Holme, Ringer & Co., but he had not had actual charge of affairs at the Central Society.

Judge: The accused had stated at a former sitting that he had carefully examined every item advertised in his paper. Why had he not examined this particular advertisement with the same care?

Accused: He was only responsible for the money received at the newspaper office. Moreover, he had a headache, he felt confused, and had difficulty in understanding questions.

Judge: But even supposing that he had had no actual charge of the business of the Central Society, the accused had admitted his knowledge of the transfer of a sum to Holme, Ringer & Co. Why had he passed it when the advertisement had been printed?

Accused: The advertisement was correct and true. Judge: The accused was not asked as to the correctness of the advertisement. He was only asked why he had passed what he knew was not correct.

(At this point the accused was shown the advertisement wherein it was stated that 32,000 and odd yen had been transferred to the Central Society.)

Accused: The advertisement simply stated the fact that this sum had been transferred to the Central Society, and the newspaper office was not responsible for its subsequent disposal.

MR. BETHELL AS WITNESS.

Judge: (addressing the accused) Of the witnesses whose appearance had been asked for, Mr. Collbran had refused to attend, while the manager of Holme, Ringer & Co., was unable to appear, being away in the North. But Mr. Bethell and M. Martin had consented to be present. Mr. Bethell would first be examined. (Mr. Bethell was then called in, and his examination was conducted through Mr. S. Minegishi as official interpreter.)

Judge: How old was Mr. Bethell?

Mr. Bethell: Thirty-six.

Judge: His nationality and place of residence?

Mr. Bethell: He was a British subject and lived outside the West Gate.

Judge: Had the witness no connection with the accused either as a blood relative or as a dweller in the same house?

Accused: No, no such connection; certainly no blood relation. (Laughter.)

Judge: Mr. Bethell was to be examined as a witness in the case. He thought it hardly necessary for him to caution the witness that he was to make truthful statements.

Mr. Bethell:—Freely and voluntarily he would give evidence for the sake of the accused. He knew he had been mentioned in the previous proceedings of the Court as if he had been an accomplice of Yang's. He was, nevertheless, ready to give evidence.

Judge: When had he got acquainted with the accused?

Mr. Bethell: It was in about April, 1904, when he had just come to Seoul.

Judge: Under what circumstances?

Mr. Bethell: He wanted an interpreter, and Mr. Mühlensteth recommended Yang for the position.

Judge: When had the witness started the Tai Han Mai-i Sinpo?

Mr. Bethell: In July or August, 1904.

Judge: When had he employed Yang on the paper?

Mr. Bethell: From the beginning.

Judge: Under what capacity had Yang served him?

Mr. Bethell: Yang had served in a general capacity. He had done translation and also assisted him (the witness) as business manager.

Judge: Had the accused, then, charge of the general business?

Mr. Bethell: No, not necessarily. The witness had always retained the general management of the paper, but he had let Yang do a great deal of managing.

Judge: Yang had called himself a general manager of the paper. Was that right?

Mr. Bethell: No, not always.

Judge: Was the witness aware that in March, 1907, a movement had been started to collect money for the redemption of the national debt to Japan?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Judge: For what reason had the Tai Han Mai-i Sinpo joined the movement?

Mr. Bethell: Because money had been sent to the paper without any solicitation.

Judge: The Court had been led to understand that the paper had at first refused to receive subscriptions, but that it had afterward joined the movement. Was that so?

Mr. Bethell: The paper had not joined anything. Only people had sent money to it.

Judge: Was the witness aware that his paper of March 31, 1907, had printed an advertisement, saying, among other things, that the paper was prepared henceforth to receive subscriptions?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Judge: Had the witness thought that the project was practicable? What ideas had he had on this question?

Mr. Bethell: Didn't know.

Judge: No idea?

Mr. Bethell: Didn't know.

Judge: In the advertisement of May 31, it was stated that the money received would, in conjunction with a bank or a company having credit in the world, be dealt with in a suitable manner. Was that the witness's intention?

(Here some difficulty occurred in interpretation, and it was some time before the meaning of the question was correctly conveyed to the witness.)

Judge: The money had been deposited with the banking department of the Collbran-Bostwick Company. Did the witness believe that that company enjoyed a world-wide credit?

Mr. Bethell: Certainly.

Judge: The same with the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Judge: It had been stated that a man named Tsai Changhak had handled the money received at the Tai Han Mai-i Sinpo on the account of the Redemption Fund. Was that so?

Mr. Bethell: Didn't know if Tsai was the same individual as one of that name who had for some time been at his office.

Judge: Had the money received been sent to the Collbran-Bostwick Company every day or every alternate day?

Mr. Bethell: Yes. (Then opening a paper packet Mr. Bethell produced an Entry Book at the Tai Han Mai-i Sinpo office.) He said (pointing to two entries amounting together to less than 400 yen) that these sums, representing the first subscriptions received at the office had been sent to one of the associations which had at this time sprung up in Seoul for the collection of subscriptions. But discovering that this association was not very reliable, all the subsequent sums received at the office had been deposited with the Collbran-Bostwick Company.

(By the request of the Judge, Mr. Bethell handed the book to him. At the same time, the witness submitted to the Court two other books, one dealing with the subscriptions received after Yang's arrest and the other with the silver things contributed, which had to be sold and the proceeds thus realised entered as subscriptions.)

Judge: (addressing Mr. Yi Yang-sang, one of the Counsel for the accused, and pointing to a copy of the Entry Book which he had submitted to the Court at the preceding sitting.) Had that been copied from the Entry Book just submitted by the witness?

Mr. Yi: Yes.

Judge: Was there no mistake in copying?

Mr. Yi: No. There might, however, possibly be some small mistakes, as the copy had been made rather in haste.

Judge: (addressing Mr. Bethell.) Did the 61,042.33 yen represent the total received up to May 15, 1908?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Judge: Had it all been deposited at the Collbran-Bostwick Company?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Judge: As for the transfer of 32,300 yen to the Central Society, had it been effected merely on account or in cash?

Mr. Bethell: The transfer had been made by cheques. The witness then asked permission to make a remark. The permission being granted, he stated that the accused's responsibility ended when the money was handed over to the witness, Yang was in no way responsible for the subsequent disposal of the money.

Judge: What was the rate allowed at the Collbran-Bostwick Bank and in whose name was the money deposited there?

Mr. Bethell: The deposit had been made to the witness' credit. At first no interest had been allowed, because the deposit was not for a fixed period. But later, 2 per cent. was given.

Judge: Why had the deposit been made to the witness' credit?

Mr. Bethell: Because that was the only thing that could be done.

Judge: Had the witness entered into any agreement with anybody else as to the manner in which the deposit could be withdrawn.

Mr. Bethell: No. The witness had the sole power concerning the money. It had originally been sent to him, and deposited by him. Witness again repeated the statement that the accused's responsibility ceased as soon as he handed over the subscriptions received to him. He, consequently thought that the subsequent disposal of the money had no connection with the present case.

Judge: The witness might think so, but the Court thought otherwise.

Mr. Bethell: But Yang had been in his employ, and he wished to repeat again that after the money was handed to him the accused had no responsibility for it.

Judge: The Court could not agree with the witness on this point, and asked the witness once more to explain in what way the transfer of money to the Central Office (which Mr. Bethell called the Headquarters) had been effected.

Mr. Bethell: The transfer had been effected by means of a number of cheques drawn upon the Collbran-Bostwick Bank and which the trustees of the Central Office sent to that bank.

Judge: It had been stated that part of the money deposited at the Collbran-Bostwick Bank to the credit of the Central Society had been transferred to Holme, Ringer & Co. under the joint names of Yun Woong-yol, Pak Yongkeu, Yang Kitaik and the witness. It had also been stated that the witness had attended to the actual transfer?

Mr. Bethell: Those three men had given him a cheque for 30,000 yen, and the money had been deposited at the Chemulpo agency of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation in his name, as he could get a better interest there. (The witness then submitted to the Court the deposit book issued by the bank.)

Judge: Was the money still at that bank?

Mr. Bethell: The other side of the book contained the sums withdrawn.

Judge: Had these withdrawals been made with the consent of the others?

Mr. Bethell: No.

Judge: Had there not been a misunderstanding that withdrawals could only be made by the consent of those who had signed the cheque by which the money had been transferred?

Mr. Bethell: (After thinking a little while) No, no specific understanding.

Judge: As the money had been deposited to the account of four men, was not the consent of all necessary for withdrawing it?

Mr. Bethell: The money had not been deposited to the account of four men; it had been deposited in the name of the witness alone.

Judge: Yun Woong-yol and others had stated that the deposit at Holme, Ringer and Co. had been made jointly.

Mr. Bethell: That deposit book showed that the deposit had been made in the witness' name.

Judge: Did the witness happen to have with him the deposit book issued by the Collbran-Bostwick Company?

Mr. Bethell: He had no official knowledge of the Central Society's bank credit. But according to a note written by Mr. Smith, accountant of the bank, and addressed to the Central society, the latter's credit stood at 12,978 yen.

Judge: How about the deposit book for the sums received at the newspaper office?

Mr. Bethell: He had it with him. (The book was handed to the Judge.) He pointed out that, owing to a miscalculation, there was a difference of about 26 yen between the sums advertised and those entered in the book.

(The Court asked Mr. Bethell to let them keep these books for some time in order to make copies of them. Mr. Bethell readily consented to this.)

Judge: It had been stated that the witness had lent part of the Redemption Fund to M. Martin?

Mr. Bethell: Yes, he had lent him 5,000 yen.

Judge: Was not the amount 27,500 yen?

Mr. Bethell: (After a little hesitation.) He asked to offer explanations concerning two separate sums.

The Central Society (or, as Mr. Bethell called it, the Headquarters) had had in its possession a little over 42,000 yen made up of 32,300 yen transferred from the Tai Han Mai-i Sinpo office and of about 10,500 yen received at the Central Society. Out of this money, 30,000 yen had been transferred to Chemulpo. That had reduced the fund at the Central Society to a little over 12,000 yen. The other amount loaned to M. Martin had come from the revenue of the newspaper office. In other words, 22,500 yen from the witness' own account and 5,000 yen from the deposit at the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation.

Judge: The accused had stated that he had heard from the witness that a sum of 10,000 yen had been lent to M. Martin out of the Redemption Fund?

Mr. Bethell: No, he had spoken to Yang of the proposed loan several times, but the loan had not been actually made.

Judge: Had the witness mentioned to Yang the sum of the proposed loan?

Mr. Bethell: He had only spoken of the loan, but had never told the accused that it had been made.

Judge: Had not the proposed loan originated in the necessity of finding money to pay the salary (70 or 80 yen per month) of the clerks at the Central Society?

Mr. Bethell: No, he did not remember exactly. Didn't think he had said anything of the kind.

Judge: What rate of interest had been agreed upon for the loan of 5,000 yen.

Mr. Bethell: Nine per cent. per annum. But it was neither due nor had yet been paid?

Judge: But this interest hardly covered the expense required?

Mr. Bethell: As the Judge said.

Judge: Did the 5,000 yen belong to the newspaper office or the Central Society.

Mr. Bethell: To the Central Society.

Judge: Yun Woong-yol had stated that it belonged to the paper. Was it not a mistake of memory on the witness' part?

Mr. Bethell: General Yun did not know anything about the affairs of the newspaper office.

Judge: Had 25,000 yen been handed over to the Collbran-Bostwick Company for investment in mining shares?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Judge: What had induced the witness to invest the Central Society's money in mining shares?

Mr. Bethell: Several considerations had guided his action. In the first place, the money invested in the Su-an Mine circulated in Korea and encouraged Korean industry. The investment had been known to be very safe and the return very high. This investment had been made without Yang's knowledge. But Yun, the President, and Pak, the Controller of Account, knew it.

Judge: Had not a transaction of this nature required Yang's consent also?

Mr. Bethell: No.

Judge: Was the loan of 5,000 yen to M. Martin secured?

Mr. Bethell: No. It had been done on a promissory note alone.

Judge: What terms for repayment?

Mr. Bethell: He had originally left Mr. Martin free to redeem it in eighteen months. But on his return from Shanghai, the witness altered the terms, making it repayable in monthly instalments of 500 yen. Two payments had already been made.

Judge: Had any interest been received?

Mr. Bethell: No, not yet.

Judge: Had the interest accruing on the deposit at the Collbran-Bostwick Bank been received by the witness?

Mr. Bethell: No. The interest had only been entered on the book.

Judge: The accused had stated that the witness had received a note from the bank concerning interest, but that he had lost it.

Mr. Bethell: He was not sure whether it had been lost by himself or by the accused, but anyhow it had been lost.

Judge: What position had Yang had at the Central Society?

Mr. Bethell: He believed it was Auditorship or Accountantship. The witness had no official connection with the Central Society, so he only made this statement on supposition.

Judge: Had the witness, then, no connection with the Central Society?

Mr. Bethell: Yes, he had an honorary appointment, which, however, being in Korean, he had not been able to read. He did not know what it meant. He had not attended the Central Society.

Judge: The witness had declared that he had deposited and invested money belonging to the Central Society. How could he reconcile it with the statement he had just made?

Mr. Bethell: The Court again misunderstood. He only had the power of disposal over the sum of 30,000 yen, for which a cheque had been given him.

Mr. Bethell was next questioned by the Procurator.

Procurator: He thought the witness had stated a while ago that the transfer of 30,000 yen to Holme, Ringer & Co. had been made, as a better interest could be obtained there. But the money had not remained there long. What was the reason?

Mr. Bethell: He had discussed the advisability of the transfer in December last. He forgot the exact reasons, but somehow or other he could not get the three trustees to sign the cheque. Possibly it was owing to Yun's absence in the country, but he was not quite sure if Yun was really away. The advisability of investing part of the funds in mining shares was discussed in January, but the trustees said it had already been decided to deposit the money at Holme, Ringer & Co. So the witness had first to transfer the money from the Collbran-Bostwick Company to the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation and then to withdraw 25,000 yen on the same day.

Procurator: He found some difficulty in understanding why the money should have been deposited if the larger part of it was to be withdrawn no sooner than deposited.

(The interpreter having by mistake stated that the Procurator could not help suspecting the witness, the latter properly protested against it. But the mistake was never made plain to the witness. The Procurator said nothing whatever that could in any way be construed in the objectionable sense rendered by the interpreter.)

Mr. Bethell: The deposit actually made in cash at the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation was 5,000 yen, 25,000 yen having at once been sent by a cheque to the Collbran-Bostwick Company.

Procurator: He wanted to know more exactly the reason why it was necessary to withdraw the sum on the same day on which it had been deposited.

Mr. Bethell: Several consultations had taken place about the investment in mining shares. At the last of these consultations Yang was present, and he objected to the proposal. So he first made the deposit as decided and then took the money out.

Procurator: Had the signatures of the three men been required in connection with the depositing of the money?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Procurator: But the witness had stated that out of the 27,500 yen lent to M. Martin, 22,500 yen had been advanced from his own account. Would he tell him what was the nature of that sum?

Mr. Bethell: That money had been contributed by the public or, more correctly, by certain individuals.

Procurator: For the purpose of paying the national debt of Korea?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Procurator: Has this been acknowledged through the paper?

Mr. Bethell: It was part of the 61,042.33 yen.

Procurator: He thought he had heard the witness say that that 22,500 yen was separate from the Redemption Fund.

Mr. Bethell: No, he had only meant to say that it had nothing to do with the Fund at the Central Society.

Procurator: Was he then to understand that out of the money advanced to M. Martin, 5,000 yen belonged to the Central Society and 22,500 yen to the Redemption Fund account kept at the newspaper office?

Mr. Bethell: Yes.

Procurator: What had become of the balance, 5,000 yen, after 25,000 yen had been invested in mining shares?

Mr. Bethell: It had been lent to M. Martin.

Procurator: When had the 22,500 yen been lent to M. Martin?

Mr. Bethell: He could not tell exactly. But it had been advanced in various separate sums and at various times since about a year ago.

Procurator: Had any bond been received for the loan?

Mr. Bethell: The questions had nothing to do with the present case, but he might say that the bond quite satisfied him.

Procurator: Might he ask about the terms?

Mr. Bethell: Yang Kitaik knew nothing of these loans. On his return from Shanghai, the separate loans had been made into one loan repayable in monthly instalments of 500 yen.

Procurator: What was the interest?

Mr. Bethell: Nine per cent. per annum.

Procurator: Why had these loans been made to M. Martin?

Mr. Bethell: Because of the good interest.

The Judge then resumed the examination of Mr. Bethell.

Judge: What sum now stood to the credit of the newspaper office's Redemption Fund account at the Collbran-Bostwick Bank?

Mr. Bethell: 6,432.48 yen

Mr. Bethell here submitted to the Court a sheet of paper with figures showing the amount received and its disposal. The total amount received up to date on account of the Redemption Fund was 61,232.48 yen (which included sums received since May 15, when the total stood at 61,042.59 yen and not 61,042.33 yen as advertised, there being a miscalculation of 26 sen), out of which 32,300 yen was transferred to the Central Society and 22,500 yen was lent to M. Martin. The balance remaining to the credit of the Tai Han Mai-il Shinpo's Redemption Fund account at the Collbran-Bostwick Bank was 6,432.48 yen.

In reply to the question why the witness did not give in the advertisement of May 15 a clear statement as to the disposal of the money, instead of stating that it was in the bank, whereas the greater part of it was not there, Mr. Bethell at first tried to explain it away, saying that it was not customary to do so, and that he was too busy to do so, and that he understood that the advertisement simply meant that so much had been sent to the bank and not necessarily that it remained there. But on the question being reiterated, Mr. Bethell admitted that it was his fault, and that he ought to have been more careful.

The Procurator again asked permission to put a few questions to the witness.

Procurator: From statements by the accused, it appeared as if some written document had been signed by Yun Woong-yol, Yang Ki-taik and Pak Yong-kiu at the time the sum of 30,000 yen had been transferred to Holme, Ringer & Co. Was that so?

Mr. Bethell: It was just a cheque to get the money out of the Collbran-Bostwick Bank.

Procurator: What was the price of the mining shares, how many shares had been bought, and where and in whose name were these shares kept?

Mr. Bethell: The shares were kept at the Collbran-Bostwick Bank in the name of the three trustees of the Central Society. The number of shares was 125, and the value was $100 (U. S. gold) each.

Procurator: What was the present market price of shares?

Mr. Bethell: There were no market quotations, as the mining work had not yet sufficiently advanced. But he believed that they were worth more than the price at which they had been purchased.

The witness' examination concluded, the accused asked the Court to be allowed at a subsequent stage of the trial to point out mistakes in the Japanese rendering of Mr. Bethell's statements, in case he thought there were any mistakes and in case he thought such mistakes were injurious to him.

The Judge assured the accused that he would be allowed to look at the official record of the proceedings, but he was told that it was not for him to decide whether or not any rendering was mistaken.

M. Martin was then called in, but owing to the painful incident to M. Marnham, already noticed, the Court had to adjourn for a short recess. It was then a little past one.

M. MARTIN AS WITNESS.

The proceedings were resumed at 2.50 p.m. M. Martin was called in, but before proceeding with his examination, the Judge asked Mr. Ok, one of the counsel for the accused, what it was that he had wished to say while Mr. Bethell had been giving evidence. (Mr. Ok had tried to put in a word but had been requested by the Court to wait till the evidence should have been concluded.) Mr. Ok said that he had wanted to caution the Procurator not to state any opinion, as that would delay the proceedings. The Judge assured him that the Procurator had not volunteered any opinion.

Addressing the accused, the Judge told him that Mr. Bethell's evidence had not been translated for him, as he understood English. As for the evidence that was going to be given by M. Martin in French, the substance would from time to time be interpreted for him from the Court record. (When, however, the Court interpreter subsequently proceeded to render into Korean the gist of M. Martin's statements, the accused said that the process might be dispensed with, as he had already been able to gather the meaning from the Japanese interpretation.) The examination of M. Martin was then proceeded with, Mr. T. Kuroda acting as official interpreter.

Judge: Was the witness aware of the nature of the case?

M. Martin: Yes.

Judge: Since when did the witness know Mr. Bethell?

M. Martin: Since the beginning of the Russo-Japanese war in 1904.

Judge: Age?

M. Martin: Thirty-two.

Judge: Place of residence and nationality?

M. Martin: He lived outside the West Gate and he was a French citizen.

Judge: Was he on intimate terms with Mr. Bethell?

M. Martin: Mr. Bethell had stayed at witness' hotel for over two years, so he was intimate with him.

Judge: Was the friendship close enough to allow exchange of confidence in regard to financial matters?

M. Martin: They knew each other sufficiently well to have confidence in regard to any business which they might undertake jointly, but not sufficiently well to exchange confidence on all matters.

Judge: Had the witness borrowed from Mr. Bethell sums of 22,500 yen and 5,000 yen?

M. Martin: Yes.

Judge: When?

M. Martin: On several occasions between September, 1907, and March, 1908.

Judge: Did the witness remember each sum?

M. Martin: Did not remember exactly. When they had first discussed the matter, Mr. Bethell had told the witness that he might have 30,000 yen at the utmost. The term for each separate advance was eighteen months, but when Mr. Bethell returned from Shanghai, the terms were altered, so that henceforth payment might be made by monthly instalments of 500 yen each.

Judge: Interest?

M. Martin: Nine per cent.

Judge: Had any security been given?

M. Martin: Some security had been handed to Mr. Bethell.

Judge: What security?

M. Martin: He did not like to say, as it was a personal affair. He requested the Court to ask Mr. Bethell about it.

Judge: Mr. Bethell had stated that he got no security for the loan.

M. Martin: Mr. Bethell had been satisfied, so please ask him.

Judge: Was the witness quite sure that he had handed some security?

M. Martin: The first loan he had got was 5,000 yen, and then 22,500 yen in various sums. No security had been mentioned in the bonds.

Judge: When had the first loan of 5,000 yen been obtained?

M. Martin: Did not remember exactly, but in September, 1907. He also received 5,000 yen on two subsequent occasions in October, 1907 and February, 1908.

Judge: In what sums had the witness received the remainder of the loan?

M. Martin: In various sums of 2,000 yen, 4,000 yen, etc.

Judge: What had Mr. Bethell said as to the character of the money?

M. Martin: He had told him that it belonged to the Redemption Fund.

Judge: Had Mr. Bethell told him where these sums had been taken from?

M. Martin: No. Mr. Bethell had not told him where they had come from. But they were in cheques, some upon the Collbran-Bostwick Bank and others upon the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation. Mr. Bethell had told the witness that the money belonged to two separate accounts.

Judge: Had Mr. Bethell said that 5,000 yen came from Holme, Ringer and Co. and 22,500 yen from the Collbran-Bostwick Bank?

M. Martin: He could not say which were which.

Judge: Had Mr. Bethell told him whether he could advance any other sum?

M. Martin: Mr. Bethell had only said that he wanted good interest.

Judge: Did not the money lent him belong to Mr. Bethell?

M. Martin: He knew it belonged to the Redemption Fund.

Judge: Did the witness know which sums belonged to which accounts?

M. Martin: He did not know. But when Mr. Bethell returned from Shanghai, he wanted to have the whole made into one loan payable 500 yen monthly.

Judge: Why had the witness contracted the loan?

M. Martin: For several reasons, especially to extend business.

Judge: Had any debts been paid by it?

M. Martin: How the Court thought he had had debts to pay, he knew not. But he had not had any debt to redeem.

Judge: If he could specify his reasons more concretely, his statements would carry more weight.

M. Martin: He had constructed with the money thus obtained a concert room, bought a cinematograph apparatus, extended the premises, built a bathroom and an engine room for heating rooms, and bought furniture.

Judge: When had the payment of the loan begun?

M. Martin: When Mr. Bethell returned from Shanghai. Two payments had already been made.

Judge: In what months?

M. Martin: In July and August. (M. Martin showed to the Court Mr. Bethell's receipts for the two payments).

Judge: Had interest been paid?

M. Martin: While the former arrangement had been in operation, something like three or four hundred yen had been paid on account of interest. But since the new arrangement of monthly instalments had come into operation, no interest had been paid, because it was agreed that the interest should be paid after the principal had been paid off.

Judge: Same witness had stated that the loan to the accused had been made in order to get money to pay the clerks at the Central Society?

M. Martin: Now that the matter was mentioned, the witness recollected that something to that effect had been told him. He had from time to time advanced to Mr. Bethell sums of 100 or 150 yen on account of the interest on the loan.

Judge: Who had first proposed the loan?

M. Martin: Mr. Bethell had proposed, though the witness did not remember exactly.

Judge: Would the witness state definitely whether he had asked for the loan for business extension or Mr. Bethell wanted to advance for the sake of good interest?

M. Martin: He did not remember exactly. Mr. Bethell had come always to his house. Some people had said that the witness wanted the loan, but he believed it was Mr. Bethell who proposed the transaction.

Judge: The accused had said that only 10,000 yen had been lent to M. Martin, and declared he had not heard of any other loans. Could the witness throw any light upon this?

M. Martin: The witness had no connection with Yang, and so had not heard anything from Yang.

Judge: Had he not heard anything on the matter from Mr. Bethell?

M. Martin: That might possibly have arisen from the fact that Yang had only heard of the loan when it had just reached 10,000 yen.

Judge: Might it not be that there was some confidence between the witness and Mr. Bethell as to the rest of the loan, so that only 10,000 yen could be told to Yang?

M. Martin: He did not know anything of the kind.

Judge: Had not Yun Woongyol and his son come to the accused's house to discuss with Mr. Bethell matters relating to the transfer of money to Holme, Ringer & Co.?

M. Martin: It would be two years this November since Mr. Bethell had left his hotel, and as a hotel was a public house, the witness could not remember if such a consultation had taken place at his place.

The witness was next examined by the Procurator.

Procurator: How much had been paid by Mr. Bethell as interest?

M. Martin: Between three and four hundred yen altogether.

Procurator: Had receipts been obtained for such payments?

M. Martin: No.

Procurator: Had the payments been entered in books?

M. Martin: He thought they had been.

Procurator: Mr. Bethell had said that no interest had been paid. Was the witness sure?

M. Martin: No interest had been paid under the existing arrangement, but some payments, as already stated, had been made under the former arrangement.

His examination over, M. Martin retired.

Mr. Ok, one of the counsel for the accused, asked to have the substance of Mr. Bethell's evidence translated for him by the Court interpreter, as it had vital importance for the defense.

The Judge said that he had no objection to the request, but that, as the sitting had already lasted some hours and the accused might be tired, it would be better if the counsel could wait till the Court record in Korean was completed, when he would be permitted to read it.

To this Mr. Ok at once consented.

The Court rose at a little past four. The date for the next sitting was not announced.

He explored a great mountain-range 2000 miles long, to which he proposes to give the name of Trans-Himalaya. He suffered great hardships from hunger and cold, but his disguise as a Nadakan saved him from detection. He says that the Chinese are determined for ever to keep Tibet closed, and that the Tibetans are obliged to obey. He came across several gold fields during his journey, which was 4,000 miles long. There are now practically no fresh discoveries possible in the heart of Tibet, which the distinguished Swedish explorer has carefully mapped.

Thus there is a complete deadlock. The troops are outside the city of Tabriz and the Nationalists inside. Excellent order is preserved in the city. Satan Khan, the Nationalist leader, has ordered his officers to shoot at sight anyone arresting a British subject.

THE HEARST BOMBSHELL.

London, September 22.

New York.—Mr. Hearst has sprung a bombshell on the presidential campaign, which is shattering the reputations of ten members of both parties. He has produced letters alleged to have been stolen from Archbold, executive of the Standard Oil Company, to Senators Foraker and Bailey, Representative Sibley, and Governor Laskell of Oklahoma, indicating that these while in office had financial relations with the Trust. Foraker's weak reply leaves his reputation blasted. Hearst promises further disclosures, hoping to gain votes for the Independence League candidate from both parties. The revelations have caused a sensation.

President Roosevelt has issued a statement practically endorsing Hearst's charges and bitterly denouncing Foraker as an enemy to all administrative reforms. The statement also contains a private letter by Taft to a friend last year in which Taft condemned the idea of nomination to the presidency if a compromise with Foraker was implied, but the effect of this is marred by the fact that Taft was recently publicly reconciled to Foraker.

Roosevelt also endorses the charges against Laskell, who is treasurer of Mr. Bryan's campaign fund, and in consequence Bryan has replied to Roosevelt demanding proof of the charges.

MR. BRYAN.

At the request of the American Travelling Merchants' union, Mr. Bryan made a speech on Sept. 18th in New York. At the opening of the address, he condemned the policy adopted by Mr. Hughes, Governor of New York, and subsequently the action of the various trusts. In conclusion, he said that the steel and iron traders whose capital amounted to one thousand million dollars in all, were trying to support with money the Republican Party in the Presidential election.

Mr. Hearst is condemning Senator Foraker by saying that the latter has a special connexion with the Standard Oil Company. In consequence of this the Republican party will feel awkward.

M. ISWOLSKY AND COUNT WITTE.

St. Petersburg, September 19.

It is reported by the Bourse Gazette that the re-actionaries, who are dissatisfied with the constitutional attitude adopted by M. Iswolsky, Russian Minister for Foreign Affairs, are trying to remove him from office. The opposers say that he has sympathized with political affairs in Turkey and Persia. Consequently the position of M. Iswolsky is dangerous. The paper adds that Count de Witte is popular as a candidate for the office, but the Government is not willing to appoint him in the place of M. Iswolsky.

There is a rumour that Count de Witte has joined the re-actionaries and that M. Meseikoff, of the Novoe Vremya, is supporting him. In consequence of the foregoing rumour, the report that Count de Witte will be appointed to the Foreign Office replacing M. Iswolsky seems to have been given from a trustworthy source.

COUNT DE WITTE.

St. Petersburg, September 20.

The announcement that Count de Witte will be appointed to the Ministry seems to have some connexion with the new policy adopted by the Russian Government towards Germany. It is also suggested that his appointment may arise from a desire on the part of the Government to raise a loan in a foreign country. The other members of the Ministry are said, however, to oppose Count de Witte.

THE SIBERIAN RAILWAY.

St. Petersburg, September 21.

The Russian Government has appointed a committee to investigate the work of doubling the track of the Siberian Railway. The work will be commenced at Omsk and Achinsk next spring. Messrs. Iwanovsky and Budakoff will be appointed superintending engineers.

Suffered Torments with Skin Disease

In Several Hospitals but

CUTICURA REMEDIES BROUGHT HIM HEALTH

"While I was stationed at Bellary, in India, with my regiment from 1896 to 1901, I contracted 'malarial cachexia,' which brought on a complication of diseases. I suffered frequently with ague and my chest and back became covered with large sores and pimples, my face was also disfigured with these sores or ulcers. My blood became very poor. I was admitted into hospital, but the treatment I received did not seem to give me any relief, as I became very emaciated and weak. I lost my appetite, had no energy for anything, and my weakness was dreadful. Early in 1901 I was invalided to England for a change. On arrival I was sent to several hospitals, but still no signs of recovery. After some months of treatment I was finally invalided out of the service as medically unfit through my sickness.

I then thought I would try the Cuticura Remedies, chiefly on the recommendation of my wife, who had great faith in them, having used the same in India for roughness of the face, red pimples, and blackheads. After I had used four sets, which included Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent Pills, I began to see and feel a great improvement. I was less languid, my appetite improved, I felt stronger, and the sores and pimples began to disappear. I continued to use the treatment for about nine months. Finally I was quite a different man. I lost the yellow tinge my skin had, the sores and pimples quite disappeared, and I became strong again and able to go to business daily, which I have done ever since. I thoroughly recommend Cuticura Remedies for humours of the blood and affections of the skin. Thomas Reader, late Sergeant in a British Infantry Regiment, 143 Tottenham St., Tooting, S. W., Aug. 2, 1906."

Complete External and Internal Treatment for Every Humour of Infants, Children, and Adults consists of Cuticura Soap to Cleanse the Skin, Cuticura Ointment to Heal the Sores, and Cuticura Resolvent Pills (Chocolate Coated) to Purify the Blood. MR. S. OHASHI, a lawyer of Tokyo, was arrested on Sept. 30th on suspicion of fraud.

ON Sept. 29th, snow fell on Mount Hakusan, near Kanazawa, thirty days earlier than last year.

BARON SAKATANI, formerly Minister for Finance, left Changchun on Sept. 27th for Dairen on his way home from Europe.

THE sale of pari mutuel chances at the Autumn Meeting of the Naro Race Club in Osaka, amounted to yen 2,100,000.

THE new Nippon Yusen Kaisha steamer Miyazaki Maru (8,700 tons) was launched on Sept. 24th at the Kawasaki Shipbuilding Yard, Kobe.

MR. IJIN, new Minister to China, will leave Tokyo on Oct. 8th for his position. He will embark at Kobe by the Awaji Maru direct for North China.

THE Yokohama Municipality has decided to charter five large steamers from the Nippon Yusen Kaisha with a view to welcoming the American Battleship Fleet off Kannon-zaki. The steamers will be dressed and will carry a large number of leading citizens.

THE first volunteer ship Sakura Maru ran her trials on Sept. 24th off Nagasaki. As her speed was not up to contract requirements she will be tried again.

THE American business men, who have been invited by the Yokohama and other prominent Chambers of Commerce to visit Japan, are expected to arrive in Yokohama about Oct. 13th.

MARQUIS INOUE is progressing favourably. On Sept. 28th, he was able to speak for a short time with visitors. No change has been noted in the condition of Marquis Nodzu. He is still very weak.

THE Yokohama Post Office will issue illustrated post cards—one set consisting of two cards, each sen 10—in commemoration of the visit of the American Fleet. The sale of the cards will close on Oct. 7th.

ACCORDING to the Asahi Prince Ito, Resident General in Seoul, now in Tokyo, will leave about the middle of October for his post. He will return at the end of December or the beginning of the following month.

THE Kawasaki Shipbuilding Yard in Kobe, which has built one gun-boat and three torpedo-boats to the order of the Siamese Government, received recently a further order from the same Government for the construction of warships.

THE Hochi says that Viscount Okabe, Minister for Justice, has decided to prohibit betting at Race Clubs, and that the Horse Breeding Office will be abolished. In the Military Department, an office will be provided for encouraging horse improvement.

THE autumn naval manoeuvres are fixed to take place on Oct. 18th in western waters. The attacking force will be under the command of Vice-Admiral Ijima, and the defensive squadron under Vice-Admiral Dewa. Admiral Togo and some thirty high officers have been appointed as judges.

It is reported by telegram that the United States Government has issued an order to the Battleship Fleet, which is now on the way from Australia to Manila, not to allow the landing of the crews, as cholera is prevalent in Manila. No change has been made in the date for visiting Yokohama.

BARON SUFU, Governor of Kanagawa Prefecture, has been decorated with a war medal of the Russo-Japanese war. It is said that the passengers—journalistic correspondents and foreign officers—of the Manchu Maru, which visited Korean and Manchurian coasts, will be decorated with similar insignia.

THE Hochi says that a certain S. Uyesugi of Osaka has instituted a case in the Osaka District Court against M. Robert Loonen, the president of the Oriental Glass Manufacturing Company, claiming yen 11,500 for land transferred to the association, and his salary for a contract term of employment at the factory.

THE Toyo Kisen Kaisha held a general meeting on Sept. 28th at the Nihonbashi Club. The net income for the first half of this year was yen 192,611.54, to which a balance, yen 8,547.11, from the previous account was added, making a total of yen 201,158.65. Of this sum, yen 10,000 was declared as an interim dividend at the rate of 5 per cent per annum to the ordinary shareholders and 12 per cent. per annum to the preferential shareholders, and the remainder was carried forward to the next account.

IN consequence of the recent Customs scandal, Mr. Y. Noma, chief appraiser, and T. Shioya, an official, of the Yokohama Customs were examined on Sept. 28th in the Yokohama District Court.

ON Sept. 27th, the Tobe police arrested two suspicious-looking men attired like coolies on the Tenjin Hill in West Tobe-machi. On examining them the police found a number of bombs and cartridges in their possession.

THE Kiaochow Yokohama liner Hokushin Maru (1,189 tons) belonging to J. Harada of Osaka, ran on a rock, one mile off Miwa point in Wakayama prefecture, at 7.30 a.m. on Sept. 29th, owing to a storm. The passengers, 44 in all, including 11 Chinese, were safely landed. No great damage was sustained by the ship.

THE construction of the three temporary piers at the Bund between the West and East Hatobas is practically completed. Each pier is 9 feet in width, 310 feet in length, and the depth of water at the end is about 15 feet at high tide. The sides of each pier will be decorated with illuminations and the ends with one large arc-light each.

LORD Northcote, G. C. M. G., formerly Governor-General of Australia, and Lady Northcote arrived at Hongkong by the Kumano Maru on Sept. 29th. On the same evening they were present at a dinner given by the Governor of Hongkong in their honour. On the following day the distinguished visitors left by the same steamer for Yokohama.

ABOUT fifty coolies employed at a factory belonging to the Standard Oil Co. at Takashima-cho, who were discharged on Sept. 21st; tried to make trouble on Saturday by demanding wages which they alleged to be due to them. Through the efforts of the Kanagawa police, they were pacified, but it is deemed advisable not to relax the surveillance of the police.

THE BRITISH CHINA SQUADRON consisting of the King Alfred, Kent, Bedford and Monmouth has left Hakodate for Miyazu (Amanohashidate) and, later, Sakai (Hoki Province) on the Western Coast. The warships arrived at Miyazu on the 29th ult., and will remain for two days there. The city is decorated with the British and Japanese flags in honour of the visit.

A YAMAGUCHI telegram to the Asahi says that Koyama Rokunosuke (alias: Toyotaro) was released on Sept. 25th from the Yamaguchi Jail. It may be remembered that Koyama attacked Li Hungchang, the Chinese plenipotentiary, with a revolver when peace negotiations were being conducted at Shimonoseki. He was subsequently sentenced to penal servitude for life.

A HEAVY storm was experienced in Yokohama early on Wednesday morning. No special damage was sustained apart from the usual inundations at Negishi, Kitagata, West Tobe, and Ota, and some slight landslides in Kanagawa. At Hodogaya a house collapsed with the result that one of ten occupants sustained severe injuries. The rivers Shibuya, Tama, and Sagami flowed over their embankments. Some seventy houses in the districts along the Sagami river were flooded. The bridge of the Tokyo-Yokohama Electric Railway over the Tama river in Kawasaki was at one time in a very critical condition in consequence of the fact that several boats struck its pillars, shaking it severely.

KOREA.

Friday, September 25.

Major-General Muda, Chief of Staff of the 13th Division, who has just returned to Tokyo, has been interviewed by the editor of the Asahi Shimbun. He says that the work done by the troops in Korea has been very arduous. The 13th Division, for example, is composed partly of the force which garrisoned Formosa during the War, and partly of the force which engaged in the Saghalien campaign. Thus these men have been on active field service continuously since the War. Some idea of the duties that have devolved on them in Korea may be conveyed by saying that for the purpose of dealing with the insurgents one regiment had to be divided into 60 detachments, all of which were sent out in different directions into the hills and virtually uninhabited places, where they were kept living under canvas, provisioned no better than they would have been in actual warfare, and called upon to engage in harassing combats without the spur of patriotism inasmuch as they were fighting against rebels in a foreign country. These men have suffered much and done their duty splendidly, and it is high time that they should be relieved. The 13th Division would be replaced by the 6th from Kumamoto. As for the remaining troops, namely, one brigade of the Kokura Division, four squadrons of cavalry and a regiment of the Asahigawa Division, the method of relieving them is not yet determined. The 13th Division will reach Japan by the 15th of November. As to the insurgents, the Major-General confirms the statement that practically nothing remains of them now except brigands of the nature of the Hunglutsz. This does not apply, however, to the force under the command of Yi Pouyun which recently operated in the Tumen region, making its headquarters in Russian territory. Three hundred of these insurgents crossed the Tumen originally into North Korea, and were driven back with heavy loss by the Japanese. Subsequently a band of 150 followed their example and fared similarly. Then they attempted to make a lodgment in Chientao, but there also they were repulsed, and now they have buried their rifles among the mountains and retired from the field temporarily at all events. A circular recently issued by their leader gives a fair idea of the incentives employed to make them fight. It says that Japan intends to swallow up Korea and to subject its people to sufferings like passing through floods and fire. Foreign nations are rendered indignant by the spectacle and are massing their warships in Far Eastern seas so as to be able to back up with force a remonstrance which they are about to make in Korea's behalf. This therefore is the time for the Korean people themselves to show that they are determined not to submit to such tyrannical injustice. Such is the language of the circular. These Tumen insurgents have allies in Shanghai, but, as the Chinese Government as well as the Russian has agreed in a most friendly manner to assist Japan in dealing with the problem, a satisfactory solution is pretty sure to be found.

Saturday, September 26.

The Hochi's Seoul correspondent sends a strange story indicating that the present Minister of Home Affairs and Mr. Yi Yongik's heirs have been engaged in a plot to obtain ten thousand yen from the funds of the Ex-Emperor by false pretences. His Majesty is said to have complained to General Hasegawa, and the latter carried the case to the Residency General. The tale sounds very like a recrudescence of the miserable intrigues for which Seoul used to be notorious. The Minister of Home Affairs is the most prominent politician now on the Korean stage, and he must have many enemies, especially as being the some-time leader of the Il Ching-hoi.

Mr. Ariga, the Chief of the Patents Bureau in the Residency General, invited the foreign merchants of Seoul to his office on the 25th instant, and offered with regard to the working of the new Convention between Japan and the United States explanations which are said to have allayed all apprehensions.

We may mention here that the Japan Herald, discussing what it calls the probable "seizure of British and German industrial property" under the new system, declared that "the greater part of the foreign trade of Korea is in the hands of the British and the Germans." To this the Seoul Press replies very calmly that the figures for the import trade in 1907 were: Great Britain 13 and Germany 0.2, while Japan stood for 66; and those for the export trade were China 19, Japan 76 and the rest of the world (including Germany and Great Britain) 5. The Japan Herald's allegation diverges so wildly from the truth as to be quite comical.

It would seem that Korean subjects are to be allowed to put up land instead of money in payment of shares in the Oriental Development Company. But the option will not be unlimited. The restrictions are said to be that the land must not be the object of a superficies or of a pledge; that it must be at least 1250 acres in superficies, and that it must be all within an area of 5 miles square. Certainly this plan has one advantage, namely, that it will probably place large tracts of land in the hands of the Company with the obvious consent of the Korean owners themselves. But will the properties thus obtained be economically desirable? That question seems to be answered by a further proviso that the land must be such as seems likely to be profitable. Moreover, its value is to be assessed by multiplying the average net produce during the past 5 years by 17. There is thus reserved to the Company a large discretionary power, and certainly no one can say that the price at which the land is to be assessed is negligible. Will it pay the Company to take over land on such terms?

One encounter between the insurgents and the Japanese troops is reported to have taken place on the 18th inst. at Chihongju in Chihollado. The soldiers numbered 6, the insurgents over 20. The latter lost 11.

Sunday, September 27.

The story of the attempted embezzlement of 10,000 yen, the property of the ex-Emperor, seems to have had its origin in a transaction of quite a different character. It appears that when Yi Yongik died, he had a sum of 55,000 yen lodged in the First Bank. But when his son and successor attempted to withdraw this money the Household Department set up a claim to it. Commissioners have been appointed to investigate the matter. It will be observed that the name of the Minister of Home Affairs is no longer brought into this complication.

On the 25th instant the hearing of the Yang case was resumed in the Seoul Court. The Public Procurator spoke at some length (Mainichi Dempo's report.) His argument was that with regard to the Debt Redemption Fund paid into the office of the Dai Han

Mai Il Shimpō, the responsibility of taking care of the money rested solely on Mr. Bethell, according to the evidence produced before the Court, and as Mr. Yang was only an employee acting in a subordinate position and merely carrying out instructions, the charge against him must be considered not proven. Our contemporary's report adds that Mr. Yang exhibited great satisfaction while the Procurator was speaking, and we can well imagine that he felt it. The Mainichi Dempo's reporter further says that the responsibility of keeping the fund having now been clearly brought home to Mr. Bethell, proper steps will doubtless be taken by the Korean Government to induce the British Consular Authorities to take the matter up. In order to bring about that result, however, it will be necessary that some definite charge should be preferred, and we find difficulty in seeing who could prefer it. However, it would be most unfortunate if the case were left where it is. The evidence produced in open court has been very far from constituting a full exoneration of those entrusted with the money, and the matter plainly calls for further elucidation. The judgement of the Court is to be pronounced on the 29th instant.

Monday, September 28.

It is said to be expected that the ordinary expenditures of the Korean Government next year will be two millions greater than those of the present year. Rumours are prevalent in Seoul that on Prince Ito's return to Korea a new Cabinet will be formed, centred upon Mr. Kim Yunsik. Why this should be there are no indications, and we are disposed to regard it as an untrustworthy forecast.

The Shogyo Shimpō publishes an estimate of Korea's wealth. The estimate is said to be based on researches made by the Residency-General, by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, by the adviser of the Finance Department and by various Koreans and foreigners. The following are the figures:—

	Yen.
Land .....	1,767,948,731
Buildings .....	117,600,000
Furniture and Works of Art .....	26,220,000
Cattle, Horses, &c. ....	43,265,625
Mines .....	150,000,000
Marine Products .....	110,000,000
Electric, Gas and Waterworks Undertakings .....	1,000,000
Ships and Boats .....	2,705,000
Gold and Silver coins, Bullion &c. ....	7,876,000
Banks and Firms .....	2,222,500
Goods and Merchandise .....	119,115,225
Railways, Telegraphs and Telephones .....	76,800,000
Libraries and Book-stores .....	250,000
Harbours and Rivers .....	100,000,000

This total is only 27,492,300 yen more than the corresponding figure for Formosa, and it is 77,584,098 yen less than the estimated wealth of 3 prefectures in Japan, namely, Fukuoka, Hyogo and Niigata.

Mr. Oya, Chief of the Railway Superintendent Bureau of the Residency-General, has just returned to Japan and been interviewed at Shimonoseki. He says that there is a great deal to be done in Korea still in the matter of railway construction, but the old difficulty, want of funds, stands in the way. One thing, however, must be accomplished within the next three years, namely, the effective linking up of the Korean system with the Manchurian. The Mukden-Autung line will take 3 years to complete, and will involve an outlay of 30 million yen. When it is completed, there will be a large stream of goods and passengers passing through Korea, provided that the latter is properly equipped. We (Japan Mail) presume that Mr. Oya, when he speaks of Korea being properly equipped for this particular purpose, refers to a bridge across the Yalu, for the road is already open from Fusan to Wiju. Mr. Oya goes on to say that one of the plans under consideration by the Residency-General is to attract passengers from Dairen to Chemulpo, whence they would reach Japan by Seoul and Fusan. He adds that although Korea has not escaped the general depression, her railways have done very well in the past years. A deficit of 480,000 yen was expected over the whole system, but it appears that there will be, on the contrary, a surplus.

Tuesday, September 29.

The only news telegraphed about the insurgents to day is that a few days ago 42 of their number fell in two encounters with Japanese detachments.

The first call for volunteers, 419 in number, for the ranks of the auxiliary gendarmes having been fully responded to, another call is now about to be made.

Thursday, October 1.

To-day the Emperor of Korea pays a visit to the Imperial Tombs at Suwon. This is His Majesty's first contact with the outer world since he ascended the Throne. In connexion with the occasion, the Mainichi Shimpō's Seoul correspondent wires many encouraging reports about the state of affairs at Court. He alleges that the crowd of sooth-sayers, astrologers and intriguers who used to frequent the Palace have been gradually rooted out, so that now no remnant of them is to be found. Their Majesties, the Emperor and the Empress, have caused a small exhibition of natural products and a botanical garden to be formed within the precincts of the Palace, and they frequent these places for purposes of instruction and amusement. The same correspondent alleges that the ex-Emperor's doubts have been completely dispelled in the matter of Japan's object in inviting the Crown Prince to Tokyo. Reports received from time to time as to the unvaried courtesy and consideration shown to the Young Prince have led His Majesty to conclude that there are no grounds for suspicion, and he is about to write with his own hand a letter of thanks to Prince Ito.

The Dai Han Mai-Ii Shimpō has again come into collision with the authorities. An article published by it on the 30th ultimo attacking the programme of the Oriental Development Company having been deemed by the authorities to be subversive of public peace and good order, a sentence of suspension has been pronounced against the newspaper.

The Court which was engaged in the trial of Mr. Yang has pronounced him innocent of the crime laid to his charge. There could have been no other result in view of the evidence produced. Yang acted as a mere irresponsible employee and could scarcely be called to account for things which he did by order without any exercise of his own discretion. Public opinion seems to be divided as to whether the proceedings in the Debt Redemption case will end here or whether a suit will be instituted against Mr. Bethell. Certainly the matter can not be said to have been satisfactorily disposed of. According to the evidence given on oath, part of the money entrusted by the people to the office of the Dai Han Mai-Ii Shimpō was invested in mining shares and another part was lent to a hotel proprietor. If the subscribers of the money are content to regard such a manner of investment as correct, that is their affair. Certainly such a view will not be endorsed by ordinary folks.

The Fiji Shimpō makes a statement as to the allotment of shares of the Oriental Development Company. Our contemporary says that the allotment is to be in the proportion of 2 to Japanese and 1 to Korean subscribers, which is intelligible enough, but when the Fiji goes on to describe that, in addition to having 60,000 shares set aside for Korean investors, the latter are likewise to be entitled to bid for the remaining 150,000, we do not see how the ratio of 2 to 1 is to be maintained. Be that as it may, however, the interesting point is that very few Koreans are likely to subscribe. The rate of interest ruling in Korean markets precludes all idea of investment in enterprises that yield a paltry profit of only 8 or 10 per cent. Even on the security of land a borrower in Korea is now obliged to pay 15 or 20 per cent, and loans on less certain security cost from 40 to 50 per cent. It is not likely therefore that many Koreans will be found bidding for shares in the Development Company.

A resident recently returned from Korea gives interesting particulars of the good work done by Japan in that country. New and clean quarters are springing up in many parts of the country, and the people, thanks to the energizing influence and example of the Japanese, are beginning to live again—to show energy, enterprise and spirit. As a nation, Korea was as nearly as possible dead. A fatal indifference hung over the populace, the main purpose of whose existence seemed to be to grind out taxes for the upkeep of a corrupt and effete Court at Seoul. Now much of this attitude of despair is changed. The standard of life in general is rising; Korean hovels are gradually giving place, in the larger communities, to decently built abodes; men and women are beginning to go about neatly, cleanly and decently clad. A few years ago, telegraphs and railways were a thing unknown; now these essential harbingers of civilization are extending to all parts of the Peninsula. A fine and substantially built hospital has risen in Seoul, where Korean patients receive skilled treatment for a fee of  $7\frac{1}{2}$  sen a day, which is half the rate which Japanese patients have to pay. Schools have been established in the principal towns, where English as well as Japanese is being taught—a circumstance which Anglo-Saxons should welcome as another step towards the establishment of English as the universal language.

Like the Chinese, the Korean is no lover of trees. He look upon them merely as fuel. Promising shrubs are torn up by the roots, and hillsides are denuded of vegetation. Quite the reverse process is now being enforced, and afforestation of the country on scientific lines is the order of the day.

One of the wisest measures hitherto carried out is the establishment at Singin, some 20 miles from Seoul by rail, of a Model Farm. Korean rice crops for years past have suffered terribly from the ravages of a destructive parasite which works its way down the stalk to the very roots. At the Model Farm two fields are shown side by side, one with the parasite at work, the other in which it has by scientific treatment been removed. The contrast is striking indeed: in the latter case each stalk shows almost double the amount of grain. From various parts of the country Korean farmers are brought to see this (to them) astonishing result. The process of treatment is explained to them and they are sent back to their native place to tell their neighbours. In this eminently sensible way it is expected that the yield of rice for the whole of the peninsula will shortly be increased by 30 or 40 per cent. The cultivation of cotton in like manner has been taken in hand, and with every prospect of success. In short, in all the departments of life, enlightenment and practical assistance are the keynotes to Japanese methods in Korea. Under such treatment the country is visibly brightening, and the rate of progress will be increased when military rule is replaced, as it soon will be, by civil. Nobody claims for the Japanese administration that it is perfect—we all are human—but in judging of results in such cases a broad view of the matter should in fairness be taken. Is Korea, as a whole, better for the Japanese occupation? Most certainly she is, and that she is will soon be obvious to the world. Japan in Korea is, in fact, following the excellent example set by her Ally years ago in Egypt. In the early stages of the British occupation in that distracted land, England had to pass through the same ordeal of misrepresentation and abuse. Now all that is passed. The end has justified the means, and the righteousness of her work shines as the noon-day sun.

In this context our informant remarks that Mr. Bethell, the ex-Editor of the Korea Daily News of seditious propensities, is now as far as the Koreans are concerned, an absolutely discredited person. His recent attempt to rehabilitate himself though the medium of a departing British Consul will produce no effect whatever upon them, nor indeed upon anyone else save the coterie of foreigners who frequent the hotel which, in connection with the Debt Redemption Case, has earned some notoriety.

FORMOSA.

Mr. Oshima, Civil Governor of Formosa, has arrived at Shimonoseki en route for Tokyo, somewhat to the surprise of the public, for Governor-General Sakuma is also in Japan. Mr. Oshima explains that his coming is due to financial considerations. The fall in the price of camphor has created a very marked deficit in the Formosan revenues, and although it can be conveniently met by the increased yield of the sugar-consumption tax and by surpluses of revenue during recent years, such resources are limited, and at any rate it is desirable to provide a permanent remedy for the deficit. Mr. Oshima does not think that there is any hope of the price of camphor appreciating. His idea is to sell a greater quantity, and fortunately the acquisition of extensive forests owing to the advance of the Aiyu lines has made that possible. For that purpose, however, larger employment of capital is required, and it is to arrange for this that the Civil Governor has come to Japan. He takes the opportunity of denying the exaggerated reports recently circulated as to large expenditures on account of the railway-opening ceremonial on the 24th of October.

The Taroko on the 2nd inst. made an attack upon the Aiyu station at Batoran in Formosa, but were immediately repulsed. These are the aborigines against whom the operations of the Aiyu have been chiefly undertaken of late, and against whom also the cannonade of the Senkai Maru was directed. The aborigines betrayed their intention during the night of the 1st inst. by burning torches. The consequence was that the Aiyu were fully prepared for them, and they were driven back without causing any loss whatever.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

Saturday, September 26.

The Asahi Shimbun with its usual enterprise publishes a very long telegram from New York with reference to the political commotion in the United States. We learn from this wire that President Roosevelt has fairly taken the field. In answer to his accusations against Mr. Haskell on the ground of pecuniary relations with the Standard Oil Company, Mr. Bryan entered a strong protest, pointing out that there are more Haskells than one in Oklahoma, and suggesting that the President's charges had been delivered at the wrong address. Thereupon the President called a council, and after full deliberation and sifting of evidence, addressed a long communication to the Democratic candidate. In this document the President seems to have taken off the gloves completely. He affirms that the Haskell in question is the Governor of Oklahoma and no other, and he declares that this gentleman stands self-confessed by abstaining from any attempt to rebut the accusations preferred against him. No doubt, Mr. Roosevelt goes on to say, the Trusts would like to see Mr. Bryan elected, but Mr. Bryan's methods as regards the Trusts have never been submitted to the test of practice. Mr. Bryan's reply to this document has not yet been published. It is expected, however, that he will sever his connexion with Mr. Haskell. Meanwhile Mr. Hearst is making the most of this incident to discredit the Democratic Party. He began by throwing a bomb into the Republican citadel, and in his capacity of leader of the Independents he would be equally pleased to blow up the keep of the Democrats. But it appears to be fully recognised by shrewd Americans that he is merely troubling the water.

Another telegram to the same journal from San Francisco says that Senator Foraker has replied in very angry terms to Hearst's charges, and to the President's endorsement of them, and that he has circulated a document vehemently attacking the Republican Party and exposing many weak points in its armour. Mr. Haskell has proceeded to Chicago to meet Mr. Bryan. It is said that he totally denies any connexion with the Standard Oil Company, and that he has no intention of resigning his position on the Democratic Committee. The situation in America may be summed up by saying that abuse and recrimination monopolise the platform for the time being. There are even publicists wild enough to claim that Hearst's attack upon Haskell was instigated by President Roosevelt.

Monday, September 28.

Another long telegram to the Asahi Shimbun says that Mr. Haskell has resigned his position on the Committee of the Democratic Party. It is claimed that there is morally no reason for him to take this step, but he considers it wise in the interests of his Party. Meanwhile Senator Foraker is said to have published a long statement, in calm but severe language, declaring that Mr. Taft is connected with the Standard Oil Company. The Republican Party has suffered another blow in the resignation of Mr. Dupont, who was chairman of committee, and who also appears to have been connected with the much abused Standard Oil Company.

Another telegram to the same journal from New York says that Mr. Bryan has refused to be interviewed by representatives of the newspapers, and has declared his intention of not noticing the President's long indictment, for the moment at all events. People are perplexed as to how this attitude ought to be determined; that is to say, whether it should be regarded as signifying that Mr. Roosevelt's charges can not be answered, or as implying some special line of defence later on. Mr. Haskell's resignation of the presidency of the Republican Financial Committee is also causing sundry surmises, being regarded in many quarters as an admission of the truth of the President's accusations. As for the President, he is evidently bent upon weeding out everyone who has any connexion direct or indirect with the Trusts, and he has already dismissed one party official on that account, but the name is not telegraphed.

These political troubles in America may be said to engross the attention of the world. They are, in a sense, the product of a protective tariff, and it is evident that the issues at stake have interest for all countries. The most singular incident in the whole affair appears to be the attitude of Senator Foraker. He seems to have turned upon the hand that he had always hitherto carressed, and that is a procedure quite sufficient in itself to destroy his reputation in ordinary circumstances.

Tuesday, September 29.

The Asahi Shimbun, which is greatly distinguishing itself by the fulness of its American news at this crisis, has another long telegram professing to give the exact words of Mr. Bryan's answer to President Roosevelt's charges against Mr. Haskell. Mr. Bryan says, "Your abuse of the powers vested in you as President for the purpose of excusing and protecting the members of your Party has reached the extreme limit. I venture to think that such partiality as you have shown is unprecedented in its infidelity towards the Electorate. If I have the honour to be elected President I shall never descend to such partiality. As for the dishonest practices attributed to Mr. Haskell I hear of them for the first time to-day, and I do not hesitate to affirm that they have hitherto been equally unknown to you, Mr. President, and to Mr. Taft. I say this in view of the fact that while Mr. Haskell was Governor of Oklahoma neither you, Mr. President, nor Mr. Taft found any reason to address a caution to him." Mr. Bryan goes on to prefer various charges of corruption against prominent members of the Republican Party, and to declare that President Roosevelt himself accepted a very large sum from the railway magnate, Mr. Harriman, for the electioneering fund in 1904. "Are not you then a dishonest man?"

Meanwhile Senator Foraker has addressed to the President a long letter which is not of much value as it merely comprises excuses on his own account and accusations against others.

On the whole these incidents combine (we still quote the telegram) to expose a very corrupt state of affairs in the American world of politics.

The Fiji Shimpō also has a telegram which says that Hearst's revelations have produced a great sensation and that there are no signs of the commotion subsiding. Hearst's charges against Haskell having been confirmed by the President, the accused man is in very bad odour. Mr. Haskell has been obliged to tender his resignation, and it is considered inevitable that Mr. Bryan will accept it if he has the interests of his party sincerely at heart. Mr. Taft doubtless hoped that the wound given to his own party would be healed by the Haskell revelations, but as these have followed precisely the same groove as that taken by the Foraker expose, the two incidents do not efface each other.

A later telegram to the Fiji Shimpō says that Haskell's resignation has been accepted by Bryan and that he has been succeeded by the Manager of the Staats Zeitung, Mr. Herman Riddell, who distinguished himself very much in connexion with the election of Mr. Grover Cleveland and who is a very well known publicist. The same telegram says that in his answer to President Roosevelt Mr. Bryan asks what is the ethical difference between a bribe and a gift when the destination of both is identical, namely for political purposes.

The Nichi Nichi has a telegram which says that Haskell is preparing to take legal proceedings against President Roosevelt and Mr. Hearst, but many people regard this as a mere menace.

Wednesday, September 30.

The political commotion in the United States seems to have resolved itself into a duel between President Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan. The former has addressed to the latter a long reply attacking the Democratic Party in unreserved terms, and charging it with corruption. The President, according to Asahi telegrams, says: "I am not an enemy to proper trusts. On the contrary I am their friend. But I am utterly opposed to an institution like the Standard Oil Company which constitutes a grave injury to the public. Is not the Democratic Party lending its assistance to protect the Standard Oil Company?"

Mr. Foraker appears to have rounded on Mr. Taft. Moreover, as this politician has always been specially friendly with the negroes, and the latter have now thrown him off on account of the Hearst disclosures, it is feared that the black men's votes, numbering over 500,000, will go to the Democrats. This would make a serious deficit in the Republican supporters, and the latter's committee-men are said to be holding secret meetings to consider the question and devise means of preventing this defection.

Another telegram to the same paper from San Francisco alleges that the President has, in an open letter, described the attitude of the Democrats toward the trusts as insincere and ineffective. He enters at length into the charges against Mr. Haskell, and asks how it happens that such a man was appointed head of the Finance Committee of the Democratic Party. The President goes on to say that the Trusts are supporting the Democrats, and devotes much space to making clear the relations between them and the Republicans.

On the other hand, Mr. Haskell loudly declares that President Roosevelt himself is the very personification of crookedness. It is also reported that he, Mr. Haskell, is about to institute an action for libel against Mr. Hearst.

Thursday, October 1.

The Asahi Shimbun's telegrams this morning say that some newspapers are taking occasion of the present tumult to foist upon the public forged letters assailing the reputation of prominent politicians. The New York Times is specially noted. It is said to have inserted in its columns a letter which professes to have been written by the late Grover Cleveland, and which attacks Mr. Bryan in unmeasured terms. The great jurist, Mr. Jerome, has pronounced this letter to be of more than doubtful authenticity, and he suggests the propriety of instituting criminal proceedings against the newspaper.

Thus far the effect of the deluge of incriminations and recriminations seems to be a strengthening of Mr. Bryan's candidature. He is said to have a better chance of election than he had on either of the previous occasions when he competed for the Presidency.

One rumour has it that President Roosevelt has decided to stump the country in Mr. Taft's interest.

Meanwhile Mr. Taft is making powerful speeches here and there. In connexion with his project of delivering a political lecture in the city of Lincoln which is the birth-place of Mr. Bryan, the latter has telegraphed to his agents in that city to have his photographs removed if possible from the windows of the houses and the shops during Mr. Taft's sojourn. This is considered a very manly procedure on Bryan's part, as it is evidently intended to show courtesy and respect to his rival. It is noted that when Mr. Bryan went to Ohio, which is the birthplace of Mr. Taft, the latter did not think of taking any such step. Meanwhile we have the emphatic telegram in the Asahi Shimbun that the betting in New York is strongly favourable to Mr. Taft.

THE ORIENTAL DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

Friday, September 25.

On the 24th inst. the Establishment Committee of the Oriental Development Company met in Tokyo. A question was raised by Mr. Ogawa as to the expediency of allowing the Korean Government to subscribe its portion of the capital in land instead of in coin. He thought it would be much better that the Company should collect all its capital in money and should then buy such land as seemed suitable. The Korean members of the Committee, however, made explanations which seemed to have proved satisfactory, but which are not given in the reports of the Committee. With regard to the number of shares offered for public subscription, our readers may remember that 200 were reserved for a purpose which was not openly stated. The natural inference was that these shares had been taken by the Directors, but since each Director is required to hold 50 shares as a qualification for office, 200 would obviously be insufficient to go round. This point was cleared up by a motion made by Mr. Iwashita, Director of the Kitahama Bank. He proposed, and the meeting agreed, that 1,000 shares should be set aside for the directors, the number thus offered for general subscription being 139,000.

In the evening Marquis Katsura entertained the Committee at dinner in the official residence of the Minister of State for Finance. Prince Ito was present and is said to have made a speech lasting for nearly an hour, but only a very skeleton report of it is given by the Tokyo press. His Highness said that Japan's object is to make Korea prosperous and independent. He invited the Korean people to consider frankly and intelligently whether Japan was endeavouring to lead their country into the path of ruin or into the road of progress. There were still many Koreans who imagined that this Empire was sending to the Peninsula only soldiers and tax-collectors for the purpose of holding the country with the strong arm while its riches were all seized and transferred to Japanese pockets. Very likely even among the Korean Members of Committee sitting there that evening there were some who still entertained this view. If so, they would be acting disloyally towards their country and neglecting the duty entrusted to them as Members of Committee, if they failed to take advantage of their presence in Japan to discuss the matter fully and to learn the true sentiments of the Japanese people. Japan's frank desire is to see Korea happy and prosperous. She wants to walk hand in hand with her neighbour, not to drive her by force, and this Development Company is a practical illustration of that policy since it had for purpose co-operation between Koreans and Japanese to develop the material resources of Korea.

Saturday, September 26.

Prince Ito's appreciation of the mood of the Korean Committee-men was verified at the general meeting of the Establishment Committee on the 25th instant. The Statutes of the Company, as prepared by the special committee, came up for discussion and were on the point of being approved when the Korean members raised an objection. They said that the term tochi keiyi (working of land) was plainly open to the construction that the Company would have the right of working all the land in Korea, which would mean wholesale aggression; and that the term tochi kwanri (control of land) would be of equally wide application. In vain was it explained that the Company's competence could not possibly be extended so as to embrace lands other than those in its actual possession. The Koreans would not be persuaded. If that were so, they said, why not insert a limiting clause? But the insertion of a limiting clause would have rendered the Statutes ridiculous since it would have implied a necessity for a totally superfluous limitation. Finally it was agreed that the Minister of State for Finance should hand to the Korean members of Committee a note setting forth fully the limitations of the Company's powers.

This incident is very instructive. The Korean members of Committee must be supposed to be men of property and standing; in other words, they represent the best intelligence of Korea. Yet we find such persons imbued with quite extraordinary suspicions about the integrity of the Japanese Authorities in the matter of land. We say "Japanese Authorities" advisedly, for the Koreans know well that the Toyo Takushoku Kaisha is Marquis Katsura's child. What has engendered this mood of morbid distrust? A great deal of it is unquestionably due to the exaggerated statements that have been publicly made again and again by responsible foreign journalists and correspondents.

Tuesday, September 29.

The Korean members of the Establishment Committee of the above Company were entertained at the Bankers' Club on the evening of the 28th inst. Mr. Toyokawa of the Mitsu Bishi Bank presided. In his speech he expressed great satisfaction that the Korean members of Committee had frankly stated their doubts and received explanations of them, thus clearing the atmosphere and establishing a full understanding between both parties. He pointed to the fact that the returns of the Clearing House in Korea showed a state of affairs very similar to that which existed when this valuable institution was inaugurated in Japan 15 years ago, and he trusted that under good management and with a due measure of official encouragement as well as under the operation of good laws the development in Korea would equal that which had taken place in Japan. The Toyo Takushoku Kaisha had come into existence safe-guarded by law and protected by the Governments of the two countries, and, if properly conducted, it ought to have a brilliant future. He raised his glass to the health of the Company and in welcome of their guests that evening.

One of the Korean guests, Mr. Cho, speaking in Japanese, said that the establishment of such a company for the purpose of developing Korea's resources was a great happiness for his country and that he himself fully appreciated the honour of being a member of the Committee. There were two classes of critics with regard to this enterprise. One consisted of those who, while approving its programme, doubted whether it would realise any profits; the other, of men who suspected the integrity of its designs. He did not make any particular statement with regard to the criticisms, but he recalled the old Japanese proverb that after the rain has fallen the soil grows firm, and he expressed conviction that the proverb would be verified in this instance.

The Shogyo Shimpō, referring to the fact that the public are to be asked to subscribe to this Company's shares from the 1st to the 10th of November, says that the Government is anxious to avoid any repetition of the South Manchuria Railway Company's experience. Nevertheless, as the Company's share-rights are already selling in Tokyo at a premium of from 2 to 2½ yen, and as the Government's subvention of 300,000 yen annually insures a good interest on the small sum (one-fourth) of the capital to be paid up at the first installment, the applications are expected to be two or three times the number of shares allotted.

THE AMERICAN VISITORS.

What may be called the first of the series of entertainments planned by the Japanese for their American visitors took place on the 26th instant, when the Mitsu-Koshi Department Store invited eighteen of the wives and daughters of the Battleship Squadron's officers to an all-day party. Mr. Hibi, the enterprising Manager of the Store, was the host, and he received able aid from Mr. Takayanagi, the assistant-Manager. The first incident was photographic. The ladies were pictured twice in a group, Japanese costume being worn on the first occasion, foreign on the second, and they were afterwards taken singly in Japanese dress. Tiffin was then served, purely à la Japonaise, in the beautiful refreshment salon of the Store, and subsequently there was a display of Japanese painting by two well known artists. Keramic experts then disclosed the mysteries of Raku faience, a species of ware which lends itself notably to such occasions, as the amateur can write his name or sketch any object on a utensil preparatory to the stoving process which fixes the script or sketch permanently. This very interesting interlude was followed by a seance of the tea ceremonial (cha no yu), one of the happily preserved graces of Japan's old-time civilization. The party then repaired to dinner at the Seiyoken, and each carried off a souvenir in the form of a Fuji-shaped vase of artificial flowers. Finally a visit was paid to the theatre Hongo-za, when the closing performance of the Sada-Yacco comedy brought the day's entertainment to an end amid much mirth.

CHINA.

Friday, September 25.

The Shanghai Mercury again publishes telegrams from London with reference to the question of the Fakumen Railway. It appears that The Times' correspondent in Peking has wired to London in the sense that this is the most important of all the problems still unsolved between China and Japan. The Financial Times seems to have been again brought into the field by this telegram, for it publishes correspondence to the effect that the Katsura Cabinet would be doing much towards rehabilitating Japan in the world's confidence if it settled the Fakumen question in a friendly spirit.

In this context we observe that the London and China Express condemns Japan's procedure in the Fakumen question on the ground that she makes a private contract override a public agreement. That is certainly a novel doctrine of international law, nor can we think that such a principle would be applied were a Western Power in question. It amounts to saying that the protocols of a conference have no value whatever if they restrict in any degree the privileges actually embodied in the treaty or convention negotiated. The doctrine need only be stated to expose its extravagance.

We read in the Official Gazette that one of the conditions of the Yalu Timber Felling Convention is that the enterprise should be policed by the Chinese. This represents a considerable concession on Japan's part. Another condition is that, if after the enterprise has been carried on for some time it be deemed expedient to hand it over to a private company, that step shall be taken. The Chinese negotiators sought to effect a different arrangement of this particular question. They wished to make a hard and fast agreement that the enterprise should be placed in private hands after one year of official operation. The arrangement finally made seems to us much wiser. We may add that, according to news from Mukden, the Manchurian authorities are not provided with funds for putting up China's share of the capital, namely, 1½ million yen. Viceroy Hsu has accordingly asked for the assistance of the Viceroy of Pehchili in raising a loan to that amount.

Very disquieting news comes via Amoy. It is to the effect that owing to the long continued drought in northern Fuhkien riots have broken out; a town has been seized, and excesses of all kinds are being committed.

Saturday, September 26.

Mr. Hagiwara, Chief of the Communications Bureau in the Department of Foreign Affairs, is said to have communicated to the various Chambers of Commerce throughout Japan a statement made by the Japanese consul in Canton. It is to the effect that the anti-Japanese feeling engendered by the Tatsu Maru affair has of late been considerably softened, and the Chinese are beginning to frequent Japanese stores as of old. Moreover paragraphs are appearing in the vernacular journals speaking of friendly relations with Japan. Altogether an improved tone is perceptible, and there is reason to hope that the boycott will soon be relaxed.

The pest seems to be spreading at Tangshan. During the 15 days ended the 20th inst. there were 200 cases. The Central Government has allotted a sum of 80,000 taels for hygienic purposes, but it is said to be almost impossible to take effective sanitary measures. The miners will not enter hospital. A rumour has been spread that unless they do so, they will be dragged thither in chains, and that if they do so, they will be buried before death. The consequence is that they are thinking only of flight, and the circle of infection will thus be widened. It is feared that Tientsin will soon be reached. As for getting rid of the great spreaders of infection, that is a hopeless task, for the rat is associated with the god of wealth in the pantheon of North China. Of course the output of coal from the Kaiping mine is virtually brought to an end, and since it is an ill wind that blows no one any good, the Japanese mineral will now be without a competitor in Tientsin and Peking. It is lamentable to think that just as Hongkong has eradicated the pest this fell disease should have broken out in North China. The filthy conditions among which a Chinese is quite content to pass his life create an atmosphere only too favourable for the spread of such a horror.

The Shanghai Mercury, as telegraphically quoted by the Asahi Shimbun, has a wire from London giving the gist of an interview said to have taken place between Mr. Yamaza, Counsellor of the Japanese Embassy in London, and a representative of the Bristol Daily Press. What with diplomatic caution and translators' vagaries it is difficult to make out exactly what Mr. Yamaza is supposed to have said. But the gist of it is that Japan contemplates a mutually satisfactory settlement of the Fakumen Railway question, and that in this matter she is guided by a desire to show her friendly disposition towards China and to dispose of a problem which has brought her into some disfavour and caused more or less suspicion among foreign Powers. Naturally Mr. Yamaza does not say what the nature of the solution would be, but he speaks in a vague way of some guarantee for the security of the South Manchuria Railway. We have all along thought and said that any European Power situated as Japan is would have adopted towards the Fakumen Railway question an attitude at least as resolute as hers. Agreements are agreements binding all their signatories. They are not unilateral documents which may be torn up by one of the parties at will. At the same time we have appreciated and written that, considering the peculiar position occupied by Japan in the world, and having regard to the agitation which has been successfully fomented about this question, its settlement by arbitration or some other friendly means is very desirable.

The latest news about the Dalai Lama is that he actually left Wutaishan en route for Paoting, but that he was attacked by illness en route and had to turn back. Was it an attack of second thoughts? The Dalai Lama's progress from Lassa to Peking will be recorded in history as a curiosity.

Tuesday, September 29.

It is rumoured that a complete reorganisation of the Peking Ministry will shortly take place. According to the present system the responsibility of the high officials is of the vaguest description, and moreover it would be impossible with such a system to make successful preparations for the establishment of constitutional government. All the leading politicians, as Prince Ching, Chang Chih-tung, Yuan Shih-kai and others, are in favour of complete re-organisation, and it is thought that the Japanese system will be taken for model. In the old days it used to be commonly said among foreigners that the most inchoate body conceivable was the Tsung-li Yamen, for if one of its many Ministers made to-day a concession disagreeable to the rest, another Minister would simply retract it to-morrow. Things are not nearly so bad with the Waiwupin, but still the proposed reorganisation would be welcomed most heartily by China's friends.

In spite of denials said to be made by the War Office in Tokyo the Asahi Shimbun alleges that the Japanese Government has determined to withdraw virtually the whole of its troops from Peking and Tientsin. It would be remembered that the Powers decided to station troops in these cities after the Boxer outrage 8 years ago, and that Germany in 1905 or 1906 suggested that the time had come for withdrawing. It is not known of course what attitude was assumed by the various Powers towards this proposal, but we do not imagine that it was ever contemplated to keep the troops long in China. The Japanese Government does not propose, it is said, to withdraw the detachments altogether: the idea is merely to reduce them to skeletons. It seems to us that in Japan's case at all events there is good reason for withdrawal.

Viceroy Hsu has memorialised the Throne in favour of erecting the region of the Long White Mountain into an administrative district under the name of "Changpei-Fu." This territory, though it may be said to form part of Chientao, has never been in dispute, Chientao proper being on the east of the Long White Mountain whereas Changpei-Fu is on the west. The dimensions of the proposed district are said to be from 800 to 900 li, but whether this means some 300 square miles or 33 miles square is not clear.

The Dalai Lama finally reached Peking at 2.30 p.m. on the 28th inst. A temporary resting place had been erected at the station, and there the Pontiff received the persons who went from the city to greet him. Apart from the Yong-ho prelate who went as a matter of duty, the only highly distinguished personage who welcomed the Dalai Lama seems to have been Mr. Na Tung, and he went in charge of a guard of honour. The telegrams say that everybody went down on his knees and bowed his forehead to the ground in saluting the great Prelate, and the Dalai Lama answered these salutes by raising his hands to his head. When the ceremony was over, he entered his palanquin and repaired to the Yong-ho Temple.

If the above account be correct, the Dalai Lama's visit to Peking will have the effect of reducing him to the rank of a most unequivocal inferior. It was generally believed that he hoped to rehabilitate himself after his flight from Lhasa by the brilliance of the reception accorded to him in Peking. If that be so he has been significantly disappointed, for not even a Prince of the Blood was specially sent to meet him.

The telegraph (Asahi Shimbun) says that the Dalai Lama is a man of 31 or 32 years of age, of medium stature, very dark complexion, prominent teeth and pockmarked. His eyes flash vividly and he gives the impression of a man of action. He came accompanied by a retinue of about 300 people, including a cavalry escort of 13 troopers, and the Chinese Government lined the road with policemen to preserve order amongst the huge crowds which assembled to see him pass.

Wednesday, September 30.

It appears that the force of Japanese troops now stationed in Peking, Tientsin and Shanhaikwan is seven companies, and the idea is to take away four and leave only three. If Japan contemplated removing her whole force it would be necessary for her to consult the other Powers, but when there is question merely of reducing the number, no such precaution is required. The idea, so far as we can gather, is to leave Shanhaikwan and Chienwantao entirely without garrisons and to keep three companies in Peking and Tientsin, but whether equally divided between the two places or not we do not know. Evidently so long as Japan maintains a garrison in South Manchuria and a strong force of guards for the railway, she can have no difficulty in taking any necessary military measures in the adjoining territory. That is the ostensible reason assigned for the present step, but it is not an altogether satisfactory reason seeing that it has existed ineffectually for more than two years. The two more credible causes are that Japan wishes to be on as friendly as possible terms with China, and that she also desires to dispense with unessential outlays. Japan still retains, we imagine, a vivid recollection of the days when the bluff at Yokohama was covered with the barracks of a British and French military force. She is therefore in a position to sympathise with the plight to which China was reduced after the Boxer enroute.

Thursday, October 1.

With reference to the commercial crisis in Tientsin which has been so much and so ably discussed, it is said that the Chinese merchants of that place have come to an agreement with the Russo-Chinese Bank and the Chinese Bank of Communications for the granting of accommodation to the amount of 500,000 taels. Such a figure would not afford much relief, but it might at least have the effect of setting things going.

We learn from the Asahi Shimbun's telegrams that an attempt recently made by Japanese traders to open stores in the Chinese quarter of Tientsin was opposed by the police, and the action of the latter led to a protest by Mr. Consul Obata. After some exchange of views the Chinese authorities declared that this veto had been imposed temporarily, in connexion with a plan of city improvement, but that hereafter Japanese subjects opening stores in the Chinese quarter would receive just the same protection and liberty as that enjoyed by the Chinese themselves.

The Chinese boycott of Japanese goods seems to have extended to San Francisco. A telegram from that place to the Asahi Shimbun says that a certain Chinese firm in the City having imported a quantity of Japanese goods, the Chinese merchants of Canton and Swatow announced their intention of ceasing all transactions with this firm. The only recourse for the threatened firm was to declare that it had made the purchase by mistake, and to put up a fine of 1,500 dollars. This appears to have been done, and now the goods valued at 10,000 dollars are lying piled up with nobody to take delivery of them.

San Francisco telegrams are by no means worthy of universal credence, especially where Chinese and Japanese affairs are concerned. Still the above message is very circumstantial. We presume that when the merchants of Canton and Swatow are spoken of, the reference is to traders who originally emigrated from those places and are now settled in San Francisco.

THE ENGLISH PRESS.

The Asahi's London correspondent telegraphs that The Times has a leading article on the subject of China. It says that administrative reforms which are essential to Chinese admittance into the rank of strong Powers do not appear to be earnestly undertaken by China. In fact there is no evidence of them. These reforms are also the key to the solution of the Chinese domestic problem. Turning then to the Fakumen question, The Times regrets that Japan should place weapons in the hands of those who are disposed to be hostile to her. It would be a very mistaken policy on Japan's part if she were to show any lack of sincerity towards the problem of the open door and equal opportunities in Manchuria, since her liberal attitude towards that problem was largely instrumental in procuring for her the friendship of the British nation.

The Shanghai Mercury also has a long telegram from London which is re-wired to the Asahi Shimbun. It quotes The Times as giving a brief résumé of the history of the Fakumen Railway question, and as expressing a strong hope that Mr. Iijun, Japan's new Representative in Peking, will be instructed to approach this question in a friendly spirit with a view to its speedy settlement on amicable lines. The Times further goes on to say that the rights of Japan and Russia with regard to railways in Manchuria are now accomplished facts, and that none of the great Powers has any intention of disputing those rights or of interfering with the steps necessary for giving effect to them. But in the practical enjoyment of such rights Japan ought to abide by the limits which the business men of America, England and China regard as recognised and which Japan has herself recognised, namely, that her sphere of influence does not extend westward of the Liao River. If she approaches the Fakumen question on that basis, its satisfactory solution will soon relieve her of an embarrassment which may otherwise prove mischievous.

The Standard is quoted by the Shanghai Mercury as asking whether, if Japan is really sincere in her declarations of friendship for China and in her announcement of a desire to develop the resources of Manchuria, she would not be well advised if she yielded on this point, which has earned for her no little animosity among the Chinese and the British.

The Globe speaks in even stronger terms. It says that Japan by her arbitrary interpretation of her Treaties with China has raised a question which has elicited expressions of resentment from all quarters in America, England and China. This problem has even caused a section of the Chinese nation to advocate a Sino-American alliance. It is not likely that such an alliance will be formed at present, but as America is earnestly bent upon developing her trade with China, she might very well welcome the Alliance at a favourable time, and thus the balance of power which makes for peace in the East would be disturbed.

It will be observed that with the exception of The Times the above newspapers do not assign any reason for passing judgment unfavourable to Japan on the Fakumen question. The Times says that Japan has herself recognised the Liao River as the limit of her sphere of influence in a westerly direction. We have never been able to obtain any evidence of such recognition. It is not in writing, and certainly the fact that Japan held the Mukden-Hsiniuntun Railway after the War is a practical evidence to the contrary. This theory about the Liao River was originally asserted by the representative of the British and Chinese Corporation, but it was denied by the Japanese Government, and no proof of it has ever been adduced so far as we know. We can only repeat our often expressed opinion that any European Power situated as Japan is would have taken precisely the same line with regard to the Fakumen question as she has taken, but that in view of the commotion caused by the question it becomes problematical whether she would not consult her best interests by submitting it to arbitration or by some other sacrifice.

THE TOKYO CITY ASSEMBLY.

The Tokyo City Assembly held a meeting on the 30th ultimo and decided among other things that the bun zai (percentage tax), which was levied solely for the purposes of the great Exhibition, should henceforth cease to be collected. Mr. Koidzuka proposed that as the citizens of Tokyo were much disappointed by the postponement of the Exhibition, steps should be taken to approach the Government for the purpose of holding a purely domestic exhibition in Tokyo in the year 1912. This led to an objection from another member to the effect that a domestic exhibition in Tokyo in 1912 and an international exhibition in 1917 might be an excessive strain. An animated discussion ensued, and the result was that the Assembly agreed to place the matter in the hands of a committee, which may be interpreted to mean that it is shelved. The Assembly decided to ask the Government to refund the money (namely 1,300,000 yen approximately) which the City has hitherto lodged with the Treasury for the purposes of the Exhibition. This is likely to prove a troublesome question, for the Government may justly claim that the Exhibition is only deferred not abandoned, and that the Treasury is not under any obligation to replace matters in statu quo ante, while neither the Treasury nor the City is justified in abandoning preparations for the postponed event.

A PEOPLE'S PARLIAMENT.

The latest novelty in the political field is a proposal to organise a people's parliament which would contain twice the number of members in the present Diet and would hold its first meeting in Tokyo next February for the purpose of discussing matters having a genuine relation to the people's interests. How these members are to be chosen, how they are to be convened and in what building they are to meet, the public is not informed, but this magnificent looseness will be understood when we say that the principal projectors are Messrs. Kono Hiro-naka and Oi Kentaro. In the background, however, are said to loom the figures of Counts Okuma and Itagaki, which we do not believe.

As to the new political party whose probable birth was announced a few days ago, its prospects do not look bright. Certainly it would be a more or less formidable body if the Yuko-kai and the Boshin Club joined hands unequivocally. But the Boshin Club consists mainly of business men who support the present Cabinet, whereas the Yukokai includes the Shimada section whose members would certainly not enter into any unrestricted alliance with such a party as the Boshin Club.

MR. PRESTON AND AN UNFOUNDED CHARGE.

AN AUTHORITATIVE CONTRADICTION.

Mr. W. T. R. Preston, Canadian Trade Commissioner at Yokohama, returned yesterday afternoon from a trip to Manchuria and Korea, and to a representative of the Japan Mail expressed his surprise at the circulation of a report that he had in some form or another attacked the foreign merchants of Japan.

Mr. Preston states positively that neither in any report to his Government, in any speech, in anything that he has written, nor in anything that he has said or done, has he either attacked the foreign merchants in Japan or given the slightest expression of an unkindly feeling towards them or reference to them. He characterises the statement that has been much commented upon in this particular as absolutely without foundation, and as baseless as it is possible for a slander to be.

It will be interesting to see what our contemporaries will now say in the face of this statement from the Canadian Commissioner of Trade.

Mr. W. T. R. Preston, naturally astounded at finding himself accused of attacking the foreign merchants of Japan, an attack which existed only in the dreams of his accusers, has addressed to the Japan Herald a letter from which we take the following paragraphs:—

Will you allow me to say that neither in any reports to the Canadian Government, nor in any speech that I have delivered, nor in anything that I have written, nor in anything that I have said, have I either attacked the foreign merchants, or endeavoured in any way to reflect upon them or their business?

The charge which you have made in this particular is as baseless as the fabric of a dream. It is absolutely without foundation.

I can only come to the conclusion that you have been innocently deceived in some manner. I certainly hesitate to believe that you would wilfully and deliberately give currency to such statements regarding myself, unless the absolutely unfounded suggestions had reached you from some quarter interested in circulating the falsehood. * * * *

Where this extraordinary hallucination can have arisen I am at a loss to understand. But I only want to repeat again that I have not attacked, nor attempted to discredit, nor given expression to an unkindly thought, in regard to the foreign merchants who are doing business in this country.

To this letter the Japan Herald appends the following foot-note:—

[Mr. Preston must be well aware that the foreign Press in this country is supported by the foreign merchants, who would not give such support unless their views were expressed therein more or less clearly. Further it is difficult to understand his complaints as to "the unrestricted liberty accorded to foreigners" in this country unless his attack on the Press includes an attack on the supporters of the Press, who are in many cases themselves merchants. It would be more interesting, however, if Mr. Preston would attempt some proof of his remarks regarding "certain publications of the Press," which he holds over for "future discussion."—Ed. J. D. H.]

We think it right to reproduce these paragraphs. It is now distinctly admitted, by the Japan Herald at all events, that the alleged attack upon foreign merchants was of a wholly vicarious nature, and that the local newspapers, finding themselves criticized, chose to identify themselves with the merchants and to take refuge under the latter's skirts. According to this new theory, when any one condemns the yellow press of America he is condemning the people of the United States. It is certainly true that every newspaper takes its tone more or less from its milieu, but the foreign merchants of Yokohama and Kobe will think twice before they endorse the Japan Herald's theory.

Mr. W. T. R. Preston, in a second contribution to the National Review, on the future of Japan, says that fifty years hence Japan will have a population of seventy millions and a larger revenue than Great Britain. To-day her manufactured products find a market everywhere throughout the world. From a national standpoint and an individual one, Japan will be taking rank as one of the wealthiest countries of the world. Long before that period has been reached, the western public will wonder why it ever listened to pessimistic forebodings concerning the future of Japan. She is a nation the west can now well afford to treat with magnanimity.

The Advertiser has interviewed Mr. Preston with reference to his comments on foreign local journalism in Japan and has obtained from him the following valuable statement:—

I cannot believe that the foreign journalists in Japan who so persistently criticise and attack the Japanese really understand the full force of their actions. They may not intend to cultivate an anti-Japanese sentiment among the foreign population, but just as true as night follows day, they are giving occasion for a serious anti-foreign sentiment among Japanese. I state this advisedly, and with a full sense of the responsibilities of all that it means. Your anti-Japanese foreigner is playing with a two-edged sword. For more than a year I have gone in and out among the people of Japan, with a view of making enquiries as to the lines upon which Canadian trade might be fostered in this country. Without going into details I have only to say that very shortly after I commenced my enquiries for the Canadian Government, I was fully convinced that unless this ill-advised and persistent criticism of things Japanese, by a section of the foreign Press, should come to an end, the result could not but be detrimental to foreign commercial interests; and that all those whose sympathies were with the constant criticisms of Japanese life and character would sooner or later find their business in an unfortunate position. * * * I have perhaps mingled more with the Japanese during the last fifteen or sixteen months, than very many of the foreigners in the Empire, and I certainly regard the outlook for the friendly relations that ought to exist between the foreigners and the Japanese as not extremely encouraging unless there is a decided change in the tone of a section of the foreign publications here. The question is of far too serious a character in its disastrous possibilities to be allowed to drop, simply because a howl has been made by those who have been disturbed by my candid expose of the situation. I will venture to say that in no country in the world will a foreign press be found carrying on a similar policy as that to which I am making reference. The position here is certainly unique as well as exceedingly regrettable from the foreign commercial standpoint.

In thus speaking Mr. Preston fully endorses what we have written again and again. Quite recently, in view of the extraordinary line taken by the Japan Gazette with reference to the Yang trial, we were constrained to ask how friendship between Japanese and foreigners could possibly be hoped for while foreign local journals adopted such a tone. It is our deliberate conviction, confirmed by observation which does not suffer for lack of opportunities, that certain foreign newspapers published in Kobe and Yokohama are the worst conceivable enemies to the interests of the foreign community which they so blatantly profess to serve.

MANCHURIA.

Saturday, September 26.

A telegram to the Mainichi Dempo says that Mr. Ma, Governor of Ulyasutai, in Mongolia, has advised the placing of the Kiakhta-Ulyasutai telegraph line in Russian hands. He says that the repairs of the Kulong-Kiakta line have been completed, but there is no sign of any progress with the Kiakhta-Ulyasutai section. The Governor suggests that the people should be invited to furnish the telegraph poles, and that the working of the line should be entrusted to the Russians, whose commercial interests are intimately concerned.

Port Arthur complains of trade depression, now the universal lament. A committee has been appointed to devise means of restoring prosperity. We wish it all success.

It is stated that extensive reforms are to be effected in the operating of the South-Manchuria Railway. They include reductions of staff and the adjustment of money details.

The attempt to raise additional revenue in Manchuria seems to be faring very badly. It was the Viceroy's idea to obtain a large amount by means of a house tax, but the people protested vigorously, and sent a strong committee to Peking to contest the matter. This committee seems to have been so thoroughly representative that although its success in the capital has not been notable, the householders everywhere have refused to pay the tax, and not only that, but also petitions have been received for a reduction of the taxes already existing, and for greater leniency in the terms on which State property is leased. Viceroy Hsu's financial adjustment seems likely to encounter much difficulty.

Koyama Rokunosuke, the man who attempted to shoot Li Hung Chang in Shimonoseki, when the Chinese Viceroy came to Japan to negotiate the Peace Treaty of 1905 (1905), and who was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment with hard labour, has just been released. Owing to his good conduct in jail, we presume, this slight mitigation of his sentence is granted.

Monday, September 28.

The Official Gazette of the 28th inst. publishes an Imperial Ordinance, signed by the Prime Minister and the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, with reference to criminal procedure in Manchuria. There are 12 articles, and the gist of them is that discretionary powers are vested in the judges to substitute flogging for imprisonment or fine in certain cases where such substitution seems expedient. The cases are given in detail but there does not seem to be any occasion to reproduce them. It may be mentioned, however, that this order does not apply to women, that the flogging is not to be public, that due regard must be given to the state of the malefactor's health and that the minimum age of prisoners so treated is 16 and the maximum 60. The proportion of blows to fine is one blow per 1 yen, and not more than 30 blows may be administered in one day, while the proportion as to imprisonment is one blow per one day. In the case of Chinese who have no domicile in the leased territory, punishment by fine is obviously futile, inasmuch as no power to collect the fine exists. In other cases we presume that the ordinance will be welcomed by the Chinese, most of whom appear to prefer ten blows with a bamboo to ten days' imprisonment or to paying 10 yen.

Thursday, October 1.

It is stated that in the sequel of negotiations between the Viceroy of Manchuria and the Russian authorities a decision has been reached that Chinese subjects residing within the railway zones shall be exempt from the obligation of paying taxes to their own Government. The Viceroy at Mukden has made formal announcement of this fact to those concerned.

The state of the Sungari and Noni Rivers seems to be causing much uneasiness. They are said to have risen to a height of 20 ft. above their normal level, and a little more would make them overflow their banks. Tsitsihar, is already inundated—there are said to be 200 Japanese settled there—and the people are hurriedly seeking places of refuge, while the new railway works have been completely destroyed. A part of Harbin also is inundated, and it is feared that the floods will ultimately invade the whole city.

The Hochi Shinbun has a paragraph describing the results of a journey made by Major-General Murata in the Chientao region from the close of August to the 25th of September. We are puzzled about the identity of this officer, for the General Murata of rifle-inventing fame is now and has been for some time in the Red Cross Hospital in Tokyo, and we do not know of any other General Murata. But whoever the officer may be who made the journey, the gist of his report is that there are about 80,000 Koreans settled in Chientao, and only 20,000 Chinese. He also states that the Chinese and Japanese local administrative offices are only 10 miles apart, and that the exercise of their functions often overlaps. The presence of the Japanese has had the effect of putting an end to the harsh methods of Chinese tax collectors and to the inroads of Hunghtsz, so that although official difference of opinion may exist as to the over-lordship of Chientao, the Chinese settled there welcome Korean rule as exercised by the Japanese. The region is undergoing steady development especially at the hands of the Korean settlers who are constantly increasing in number.

NEWSPAPERS

While we entirely agree that some of the telegrams sent from Seoul to Japanese newspapers about the Debt-Redemption case have been unjustifiable and misleading, and while we think that Mr. Bethell may justly complain of having been thus represented as implicated in misappropriation of public money though the judicial investigation into that matter was still unconcluded, we cannot but be amused to find that gentleman calling upon H.B.M.'s Consul in Seoul "to invite the Japanese Authorities in Korea to exercise control over the local correspondents of Japanese newspapers with a view to stopping the dissemination of false statements tending to his (Mr. Bethell's) injury and discredit." The proposal is supremely ridiculous in itself. Imagine what would be said if an American citizen invited the U.S. Authorities in Manila to take a similar course with respect to the American journals published there. Any official who treated such a request with even a semblance of seriousness would be laughed to scorn. But the mirth must be even heartier when the complainant is the ex-editor of the Korea Daily News, a journal which, while under his control, was notorious for collecting and publishing every report injurious to the Japanese without any apparent consideration of its truth or falsehood. While he presided over the Korea Daily News the hospitality of its columns was extended to any and every anti-Japanese story coming from a Korean source, whereas now he would put an official muzzle on every anti-Bethell story coming from a Japanese source. Mr. Bethell has had the delightful assurance to declare that during all the period of his editorship he was animated with perfect friendliness towards the Japanese. The Seoul reporters can now meet his remonstrance with the placid reply "we are animated with perfect friendship towards Mr. Bethell."

That is the comic side of the picture, but of course, it has its serious side, also—two serious sides for the matter of that. One is that there certainly have been some flagrant misrepresentations wired from Seoul to Tokyo in connexion with the Yang trial; the other, that a conspicuously exaggerated fuss has been made about them. Considering the general level of journalistic scrupulosity, as displayed by the Korea Daily News while it was under Mr. Bethell's editorship, and as displayed by Occidental newspapers which have been much in evidence of late, it is only commonly just to admit that Japanese reporters are well above the average. No Japanese reporter has yet been convicted of deliberately planning to telegraph intelligence concocted or distorted for political purposes. The trouble with Japanese newspapers is that the correspondents they employ are usually an inferior class of men—they can scarcely be otherwise in view of the small stipends paid them—and they consequently have very little direct access to sources of news, above all, where foreigners are concerned. This disadvantage considered, they may be congratulated on their work, and they would be congratulated if they were not Japanese.

GERMANY IN CHINA.

The German Governor of Tsingtao has been interviewed by a representative of the Kokumin Shinbun. His Excellency is represented as saying that the Japanese and the Germans are both very active in China, the former being, if anything, the more active of the two. It is not political rivalry, however, but commercial, and therefore it presents no objectionable features. The Japanese seem to entertain mistaken ideas about Tsingtao. They derive their impressions from newspapers which found their views not upon direct observation but upon news filtering in by roundabout channels. The same may be said about German appreciations of Japan. They are derived not from observation at first hand but from intelligence which passes through American and English channels. Tsingtao may be justly said to be a little Germany. Its municipal system, its harbour regulations, its sanitary arrangements and its whole civic system are practically replicas of a town in Germany. It is distinctly a prosperous place, and even during recent times of depression the number of ships clearing at the port was very considerable. Tsingtao, from having been a petty little island when it passed into German hands, has now given the go-by to Chefoo. When the railway from Tientsin to the banks of the Yangtze which passes through Tsinan is completed, Tsingtao will become the most important commercial depot in North China, and will in fact be a second Shanghai. By and by Kiaochow will be linked up with the Peking-Mukden Railway and German enterprise will thus derive a further impetus. Tsingtao and Dairen may be regarded as good exponents of the extraterritorial methods of Germany and Japan. Both places have progressed by rapid strides, and if there be any difference it is in favour of Dairen. Mr. Kubota, one of the directors of the South Manchuria Railway, recently paid a visit to Tsingtao in order to pick up any wrinkles that might suggest themselves and the Governor of Kiaochow sent an official to Dairen for the same purpose. The Governor expressed great admiration for the facility with which the Japanese adopt the good points of foreign systems, and the ability they show in improving on them. His Excellency strongly deprecates the idea prevalent in some quarters that Germany is fortifying Kiaochow Bay so as to make it a second Port Arthur. He points out that geographical and topographical conditions render it quite impossible to convert Kiaochow into a Port Arthur even were Germany so disposed. But she is not so disposed. The docks she has built there and all her other arrangements are on a purely commercial basis, their object being economic, not political. Whatever measures of fortification have been adopted, their unique purpose is to enable Germany to preserve her neutrality in the event of any trouble in the Far East.

THE EXHIBITION.

After all the hubbub there appears to be now scarcely a ripple of remaining excitement outside the walls of the Tokyo Assembly about the postponement of the Exhibition. Therefore it comes as a sort of anti climax to read the news sent by Mr. Hayashida, Chief Secretary of the House of Representatives, who was in London when the telegraph told that city about the postponement. It appears that the effect produced was at first very bad. People asked whether Japan's financial difficulties were really so great that she could not adhere to her programme in the matter of an exhibition still 4 years distant. But all this pessimism was changed when, a few days later, intelligence of the Government's financial programme became public. It was then clear that a Cabinet headed by a statesman who is supposed to represent the military party in Japan, had laid resolute hands upon the military and naval appropriations, which were thought to be sacrosanct, and had cut them down so materially, or rather had spread them out over a term of years so greatly extended, that relief was obtained for the Treasury to the extent of some two hundred million yen. English men of affairs interpreted this to mean not only that the country's finances were placed upon a sound basis, but also that Japan must be acquitted of the belicose intentions ascribed to her in connexion with the "integration" of her Army and Navy. The reaction of opinion was very marked, Mr. Hayashida says, and from being the recipient of commiserations he found himself loaded with congratulations.

RACE CLUBS.

It is reported by the Nichi Nichi that the Horse Breeding Office is considering the steps to be taken toward the race clubs in general, in order to diminish the alleged disgraceful effects connecting with betting. The authorities intend to issue a notification for that purpose. The main features of the notification are as follows:

- 1.—A special charge shall be imposed at the entrance of the pari mutuel department besides the ordinary entrance tickets.
- 2.—Only one chance shall be sold to each person, and thus purchases by professional gamblers shall be prevented to an extent.
- 3.—Visitors to the race clubs must be fully dressed, viz., frock-coat, or haori and hakama for men; and shiro-iri and montsuki for women. Otherwise admittance shall be prohibited.
- 4.—The dividend of the pari mutuel shall be paid to the first, second and third winners.
- 5.—A special union must be organized as to the pari mutuel business. Any person who is not in the union shall not be permitted to purchase chances.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, September 26.

Considerable amusement has been caused in Tokyo in connexion with the affair of the Japan Marine Products Company. The President of the Company, Lieut.-General Enya, lent 400,000 yen, which is more than one half of the Company's paid up capital, to a certain Mr. Ota for the purpose of purchasing a forest from the Shimadzu Family. Apparently Mr. Ota paid over only 250,000 yen of this amount for the forest, which is some 120,000 yen short of the price of the property. What became of the other 170,000 which passed into Mr. Ota's hands we have no idea. At all events the thing has been settled by the Marine Products Company taking over the forest, and it is a change of venue which excites merriment. The forest is said to be not altogether a white elephant, as it contains much timber which can be used for electric poles.

The Jiji Shimpō quotes the Governor of Tokyo as saying that there has been no application as yet for revising the schedule of the Tokyo Railway, and that as the Railway Company in its negotiations with the Municipality, represented its affairs in a favourable light, there ought to be no reason now for raising the schedule. If, however, it were conclusively shown that the Company can not carry on with the present rates, a change must of course be made. The Niroku Shimbun quotes Mr. Inouye, one of the most prominent Directors, as saying that the Company is not at present thinking of revising its schedule, but is engaged in adjusting its affairs.

Saturday, September 26.

The Yorodzu Choho has a pessimistic note about the Anglo-Japanese Hydro-electric Power Company. It represents the United States engineers as being at variance with Mr. Furuichi, and it alleges that there is apparently insuperable difficulty in raising the capital. We wonder what hand holds the pen which makes such frequent assaults upon this Company.

The Nippon says, in effect, that the affairs of the Oriental Glass Company have been adjusted and that the production of window glass in Japan will soon become an accomplished fact.

It is stated (Jiji Shimpō's Osaka telephone) that the Swedish match-manufacturers, whose trade has been largely interfered with in recent years by Japanese competition, have determined, in the sequel of investigations conducted in loco, that if they can buy up the firm which supplies wood for the stems of the matches, they will be in a position to crush the Japanese industry. Already their negotiations to that end have nearly matured, it is said.

Sunday, September 27.

The matchmakers of Osaka and Kobe, confronted by the possibility of foreign competition, are again taking measures to form a trust. Success is still problematical, but as much good will is said to be brought to the effort, it may possibly have substantial results.

The sugar refiners of Japan are already beginning to agitate for such a revision of the import duties as will enable them to exclude foreign sugar. Probably there will be a good deal of this kind of agitation.

Monday, September 28.

Mr. Tsukada, Chief of the National Debts

Adjustment Bureau in the Department of Finance, is quoted by Tokyo newspapers as denying the very confident assertions recently circulated in the sense that the Government had decided to pay over the whole of the railway-purchase bonds in 1909-1910. He points out that the 2300 million yen of bonds are already disproportionate to the country's financial strength, and, as some of them remain still undigested, it cannot be doubted that an addition of about 5 millions would produce more or less depression. A suitable method of meeting that contingency has to be thought out, and the Government has not yet arrived at any conclusion. The problem is not one that presses for solution, and therefore it may be considered at leisure. Whether Mr. Tsukada made this statement, we cannot undertake to say, for the fact that it appears in the same language in several papers simultaneously shows merely that it emanated from a news agency. But if he did use the words attributed to him, they will certainly be much resented by the business world. The bankers and leading men of affairs have repeatedly urged that these bonds should be issued with as little delay as possible, and if in the face of a view held by such experts a prominent official of the Finance Department declares that the matter is not at all of a pressing character, we have a decidedly awkward clash of opinions.

Another piece of intelligence published by all the newspapers relates to railway construction. Assuming—on what grounds it is not stated—that the new appropriations for the building and repair of railways next year will be 16 million yen, and that the postponements from the current year represent 4 millions, the total outlay would be 20 millions, which is only about one half of the appropriation fixed by the Railway Law. This would involve such a large reduction of works now in progress that the engineers engaged came recently to Tokyo for the purpose of pointing out the great disadvantage of such economy. It is, however, alleged that they received from Baron Goto assurances which satisfied them for the moment. The Baron is represented as having explained that this part of the Budget had by no means reached the degree of fixity alleged by rumour, and that he hoped to be able to arrange so that there would be no serious reduction or suspension of work. The engineers are reported to have accepted this explanation for the time being, but they are resolved to agitate strongly against any abandonment of productive railway enterprises, and it is thought that this question may create a parliamentary difficulty.

The Government's recent action in largely extending the provisions of the law for the protection of birds is attributed to the fact that the capture of all birds with brilliant plumage has assumed enormous dimensions of late years. From 3 to 4 million skins are now exported annually, chiefly to France, and the consequence is that the birds are becoming scarcer and scarcer. This is notably true of swallows which used always to be protected in olden times. The indirect result is that insects injurious to crops are multiplying rapidly.

The Mainichi Dempo quotes an anonymous member of the Government as saying very positively that there is no valid reason for raising the fares of the Tokyo Railway. This statement is based upon the fact that the Railway is paying a dividend of 7 per cent., and that the shareholders ought to be quite content with that. If the dividend fell to 3 or 4 per cent., the problem might assume a different complexion. This statement is interpreted by our contemporary's informant as a plain indication that the Government will refuse to sanction any increase of fare. But it seems to us very doubtful that any responsible official should have committed himself to such a sweeping and inconsiderate verdict.

The eminent engineer, Mr. Furukawa, has just paid a visit to Saghalien and does not bring back a very encouraging report as to facilities for material development. Mauka, on the west coast, is the only harbour open all the year round, but Mauka is so segregated by mountain ranges that it cannot be reached by railway. The alternative plan would be to build a line from the coal-bearing regions to the east coast, but there no suitable harbour is to be found. Nothing remains therefore but to fall back upon Odonari (Korsakoff), which means that the mines could be worked for only seven months in the year, as the harbour is frozen up for five months. There is plenty of coal, but whether it could be profitably mined in these circumstances is doubtful.

Tuesday, September 29.

The Tokyo press announces that large reforms are on the verge of being carried out in the organisation of the Railway Company with the object of reducing its expenses.

The Jiji Shimpō has interviewed Mr. Nedzu, one of the principal shareholders of the Company, and has elicited from him a statement that extensive reforms must be effected before the question of increased fares is finally taken up. Mr. Nedzu thanks the Jiji Shimpō for its recent exposures of the abuses in the management of the Company. He says that some of these exposures were incorrect, but that others fell short of the truth, and that at any rate they had the effect of arousing a wholesome spirit of inquiry. He declares himself radically opposed to the system of a uniform fare, but he defers the consideration of that problem and confines himself to explaining that really effective amalgamation of the three Companies joined into one two years ago is only now about to be accomplished. When it is accomplished and when the Company can show by plain arithmetic that an increase of fares is necessary, the question can be raised with propriety.

The deferred meeting of the Japan Steamship Company took place on the 28th inst. and immediately set itself to discuss the whereabouts of a sum of 70,000 yen which is said to have disappeared in very suspicious circumstances. A tumultuous and abortive discussion seemed likely to result when one of the members threw oil upon the troubled waters by pointing out that to carry the case to the law courts would be to benefit the lawyers only, and that the best way would be to appoint a committee of six to confer with the directors for the purpose of finding a via media.

Wednesday, September 30.

A curious difficulty is described in dealing with the fourth re-payment of the first War Loan. The Government has determined, as is already known, to resort to the method of lots. But it has been found on careful investigation that there are no less than 680,000 holders of the bonds to be redeemed, and that if the numbers drawn for redemption were all published in the Official Gazette, 40 pages would be required and the thing could not be accomplished in less than 10 days. Thus a question of interest payable would be raised. Some device for getting over this difficulty has been elaborated, but we confess that the details are so obscure as to elude our understanding.

Settling day on the Tokyo Stock Exchange passed off very quietly. The total number of shares handled was 42,060; the total price 1,791,790 yen and the average 47.356 yen.

The Mainichi Dempo, referring to the extensive reforms effected in its affairs by the Tokyo Railway Company, says that they are to be definitely announced to day, and further states that Mr. Kawada is henceforth to have chief charge of the Railway's business. We are not surprised to learn this for Mr. Kawada is universally recognised as one of the ablest business men of the time. From a statement made by the President, Mr. Mudaguchi, we gather that this is the second large measure of reform undertaken since the re-organisation of the Company, and that the high-salaried officers whose services are dispensed with, number 30.

Thursday, October 1.

The operation of drawing lots for repaying the fourth installment of the First War Loan commenced yesterday, the 1st instant, and will be finished by to-morrow, when the results will be announced in the Official Gazette. Perplexing explanations are offered by some Tokyo newspapers as to the methods pursued in the lot-drawing. But we need not weary our readers with such details. Without going into figures everybody will be quite content to believe that the Treasury's methods are just and straightforward. The money will be paid over on the 15th inst.

The programme of reforms effected by the Tokyo Railway Company was published on the 1st inst. So far as we can gather, there has been a reduction of 40 in the ranks of the high-salaried officials and of about 400 in the general staff. It would seem that in connexion with this affair there has been a somewhat sentimental incident, namely, the voluntary resignation of 3 high-salaried officials for the purpose of setting an example. The President, Mr. Mudaguchi, strongly eulogises the self-sacrificing spirit of these gentlemen, and the latter on their side have only good words for the President, respect and regard for whom seem to have largely influenced them in the course they took. Altogether the Company's success in effecting these reforms without any commotion appears to be much applauded.

The Jiji Shimpō has interviewed Mr. Tachikawa Yujiro, now a large shareholder, who was a member of the board of directors of the Shigai Company in ante-amalgamation days. This gentleman is of opinion that the reforms now effected do not reach the real root of the evil, namely, the survival of the three-company sentiment. He seems to think that great abuses have arisen in consequence of each of the old companies wanting to have a lion's share in the plums of employment and contracts, and that so long as there are three managing directors it would be impossible to carry on the business in a really competent manner. A complete change of the present board of Directors is necessary in his opinion. He charges the present Directors with relying too much upon what the Japanese call undo—a euphemism for intrigue—instead of applying themselves to develop the resources of the enterprise. He also contends that no time should be lost in laying all the lines for which the Company has concessions, and he disposes in a lordly manner of the obviously valid argument that if the lines be extended to thinly populated districts with the present uniform fare, the Company must incur heavy losses. We are disposed to think that the basis of the commotion now going on is a manoeuvre for removing the present board of Directors and replacing them by the leaders of the agitation. The position of a Director in such a large company is naturally very much coveted.

The Jiji Shimpō has a leading article on the subject, the gist of which is that the honourable course for the Directors would have been to resign, and that they might well have set an example, as has now been done by the three employees who sacrificed themselves in the Company's interest. Our contemporary is not disposed to regard the scheme of reform just announced as a bonâ fide evidence of good intentions on the part of the Directors. It appears to think that they undertook reform because their endeavours to procure a rise of fare were unsuccessful. Nevertheless, as the great majority of the shareholders are willing to entrust the care of their interests to the present Directors, our contemporary notes that outsiders have nothing to say. It is thus evident that the Jiji Shimpō also is a strong advocate of a change of personnel.

The Asahi Shimbun has an interesting note about the Stock Exchange record on the 30th ultimo. It says that no such leap upwards has been seen during the past two years. One can not say that all the circumstances were favourable. The weather was not everything that could be desired; some diminution of the original estimate of the rice crop is inevitable; silver is low and the markets for silk and cotton yarns are not active. In spite of all this, quotations took a very marked upward leap. The lowest prices were reached in May, and the following table shows the comparative figures between the worst period of that month and the 30th of September:—

	Lowest Quotation in May.	30th Sept.	Difference.
Tanko	76.40	92.05	+ 15.65
Tokyo railway	52.95	60.90	+ 7.95
Yusen	76.60	81.15	+ 4.55
Gas	74.90	82.70	+ 7.80
Fuji Spinning	64.05	83.95	+ 19.90
Kanegafuchi Spinning	66.05	87.50	+ 21.45
Sugar	56.40	73.75	+ 17.35
Stock Exchange	97.95	126.50	+ 28.55

Our contemporary thinks that a distinct reaction has taken place among the business classes and that the country may be said to have emerged from its period of gloom. Of course there will be temporarily relapses on the Stock Exchange owing to profit-taking sales, but on the whole the upward tendency will be maintained. A great deal of credulity is needed by anyone who places implicit trust in this optimistic forecast.

The second estimate of the rice crop published by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce shows a diminution of about 2½ million koku as compared with the first estimate. The returns from all the Prefectures have not yet been sent in and therefore this statement is more or less hypothetical. Should it prove correct, however, the crop will still remain a record.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Saturday, September 26.

It is not to be expected that in its present delicate condition the Tokyo Stock Exchange could fail to be depressed by the present wet and cold weather, supplemented by the depreciation of silver and copper, the great lock-out in England and the political commotion in America. All shares, with four insignificant exceptions, fell yesterday, and thus there have now been two consecutive days of débâcle just at a time when an upward movement was anticipated.

Tuesday, September 29.

The continued fine weather and the fact that money has become much easier produced a very active market on Monday. All shares rose, with insignificant exceptions, and experts are said to regard the record of the past two days as the beginning of a better time.

Thursday, October 1.

The 30th ultimo was a very active day on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. There has not been such an upward leap since the depression set in 19 months ago. Doubtless the now assured prospect of a good rice crop was mainly responsible, but for some days back there has been a much easier feeling, and the impression now prevailing among experts is that better times have set in. Many relapses must be anticipated, however.

Friday, October 2.

There were some profit taking sales on the 1st instant, and the result was a falling market in some cases. But on the whole the tone was confident, and the great leap—5½ points—made by the shares of the Exchange itself may be taken as an indication that a better time is anticipated. The news that the balance of trade was favourable for the 11 days ended the 30th ultimo was also not without effect. We append the quotations for October delivery:—

	Sept. 28th.	Oct. 1st.
Tankō Kisen	92.20	91.45	— .75

FOREIGN TRADE.

The returns of the foreign trade during the 10 days ended 30th September show exports amounting to 10,004,000 yen, and imports totalling 8,906,000 yen, the excess of exports being thus 1,098,000 yen. For the 9 months ended September, the figures are:—

	Yen.	Diminution compared with 1907.
Exports	258,003,000	—50,733,000
Imports	349,621,000	—25,013,000

Thus the excess of imports was 81,618,000 yen, and the reduction in the volume of the trade, 75,746,000 yen.

A NAG (SAKI) telegram to the Nichi Nichi reports that five men have been arrested while trying to leave for China. They forged 3,000 $10 notes of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, and has the counterfeited notes in their possession.

TEA.

The Lancet has been saying some very nice things about China tea:—

The argument in favour of China tea on the ground that in general it is far less astringent than is Indian tea rests on a scientific basis, and there we are content to leave the controversy. It is idle and impossible for the advocates of Indian tea to deny that their favourite commodity contains and yields when infused a much larger amount of tannin than for the most part do China teas. The latter, in fact are altogether more delicate in character, and certainly more suited to the requirements of persons with delicate digestive apparatus. If a dyspeptic is permitted to drink tea at all, that tea should be China tea, because as a rule it is much less astringent and therefore less likely to derange a delicate digestive system. Analysis has proved this again and again, and it is a confluence which has no reason behind it which asserts anything to the contrary. There can be little doubt that if it were not for the habit of adding milk to tea, which in the circumstances is a perfectly correct physiological, though perhaps not aesthetic, proceeding, the infusion of a powerful Indian tea would produce infinitely more harm than it does. On the other hand, China tea, owing to its delicacy, is frequently consumed without milk. * * *

The parties interested in the sale of Indian and Ceylon teas declare that China tea is objectionable because the leaf is prepared under unwholesome conditions, that it sustains in fact contamination owing to its manipulation by hand, whereas Indian and Ceylon teas are immaculate in this respect because nothing is concerned in their manufacture and production for the market but machinery. To this view many tea connoisseurs reply that the aesthetic qualities of the tea leaf are injured considerably by the mechanical means adopted. The disparaging statements in regard to China tea, which are based on the fact that it is prepared by hand, may, we think, be disregarded, for it is hardly conceivable that any serious contamination can arise, and if it did, any diseased organisms that survived the process would be destroyed in the teapot. It is well known that, apart from boiling, an infusion of tea is antagonistic to the life and development of micro-organisms, and this appears to be specially the case in regard to the typhoid organism. The objection to the manipulation of tea by hand instead of by machinery has about the same logic on its side as has the objection to the grape being trodden under foot before the wine is produced. No one gives much thought to this fact when drinking a favourite claret. The fact is that the tendency of a fermentative process is to exclude adventitious impurities, and fermentation is essential to the production of both tea and wine.

There is, after all, very little to be said against the stronger teas so long as they are prepared under the simple precaution which excludes the greater of the astringent substances from the pressing into the infusion—namely, by allowing the tea to 'brew' for only a few minutes. That precaution, however, is not so necessary when China tea is chosen.

The hand-firing process here referred to used to be very common in Japan twenty years ago. Early on a summer's morning crowds of women and men—chiefly the former—might be seen congregated outside all the tea-firing godowns, where the large stipend of from 18 to 24 tempos daily was to be earned by standing over a hot pan and keeping a quantity of tea constantly turned over until it was thoroughly dry. It was not a very cleanly or a very hygienic process, and it has now been replaced by machinery, but at any rate the Lancet does not think very badly of tea thus prepared.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Last evening the Minister of State for the Navy entertained at dinner the Governor of Tsingtao, the German Ambassador and a number of other distinguished guests.

A telegram has been received by the Asahi Shimbun from New York announcing the death of Mr. Fenollosa in England, where he was travelling. The news will be received with great sorrow by a wide circle of Japanese and foreigners resident in Japan. Mr. Fenollosa was an able student of his own particular branch of science, namely political economy, but the distinction he certainly would have attained in that line was quite eclipsed by his ability as an art critic. He identified himself with Japanese pictorial art, and it is not too much to say that he was incomparably the most learned critic of that art in the world. It will probably be said that he carried his admiration too far, and indeed with all respect we should be disposed to endorse that criticism. But Professor Fenollosa was wont to say that your medium man can never attract public attention now-a-days, and that to win a hearing one must be something of a partisan. That is absolutely true. Had he not thrown into his work a large share of magnetic energy and appreciation, he could never have succeeded, as he certainly did succeed, in obtaining the world's recognition for Japan's art. This country owes him much gratitude, and his decease at a comparatively early age will be lamented by many friends and admirers.

The Japan Herald is really colossal in its misrepresentations. It now accuses us of having alleged that we reported Mr. Terry's speech on "hear-say." In the paragraph upon which this false allegation is based we stated distinctly that we took the speech from Japanese newspapers. That is not the Herald's only mistake. It says, "the Professor, it will be remembered, disowned the speech as reported by the Mail, and in commenting on it remarked that our contemporary in the way it had 'dressed' the speech had 'exceeded the limits.'" The Japan Herald is so completely regardless of truth that it uses inverted commas to distinguish the word "dressed" as Professor Terry's ipsissimum verbum. Our readers will scarcely believe, but it is nevertheless a fact, that Professor Terry never used the word "dressed" at all from first to last, and consequently never accused this journal of having "dressed the speech." Such reckless misrepresentation as that indulged in by the Japan Herald is surely wasted on these petty matters. The resources of falsehood are soon exhausted and should not be too prodigally lavished.

The representatives of the business men of California who are to visit Japan left San Francisco on the 26th inst. according to a telegram to the Hochi Shimbun. It appears that this affair had its origin in a suggestion of Mr. Consul-General Koike, and that the project was gladly taken up by San Francisco's men of affairs, who have themselves suffered from the anti-Japanese feeling. Owing to the ready welcome given to the proposal by the five principal Chambers of Commerce of Japan, the enterprise has taken larger dimensions than those originally contemplated. It is not clear, however, what are the exact numbers of the party. Some authorities put them at 50, including 20 ladies, and others say 42. Mr. Koike accompanies them, and happily the Reverend Mr. de Forrest, of Sendai, whether by design or coincidence, is one of the party.

A new political party is in process of formation in Tokyo. Its promoters are Messrs. Kono Hironaka, Hosokawa Jiro and Urabe Kitaro. To those who have paid any attention to Japanese domestic politics these names will, of themselves, convey sufficient information as to the platform and prospects of the new Party.

Lt.-General Baron Tomasu, Head of the Accountants Bureau in the Army Department, has resigned on the ground of ill health. This officer's services in connexion with military finances have been very distinguished, and his resignation causes much regret and some surprise. Rumour has it that he shrinks from the situation caused by the Cabinet's wholesale reductions of unproductive expenditures, but that explanation hardly commands credence.

We wonder whether the Japanese know that one of their qualities most esteemed by Western observers is their faculty of keeping silence at times of crisis, or pending crisis. This quality, so far as we know, was first noticed in 1614, when the semi-piratical British vessels Tiger and Tiger's Whelp, commanded by Captain Michelborne, made an attempt on a Japanese junk at Bintang near Singapore. Sir Edward Michelborne, who had been specially commissioned by the British Government to "discover" Cathaia, China, Japan, Korea and Cambaia, and to trade with the people there, charter or no charter, made a failure of the trading part of the business, but he left an interesting appreciation of the Japanese, whom he describes as "not being suffered to land in any port of India with weapons, being a people so desperate and daring that they are feared in all places where they come." He experienced the truth of this estimate at Bintang, for his attempt upon the junk was repulsed by the Japanese, who "fought, strange to say, in the utmost silence, and did terrible execution with their swords." We are reminded of this incident by seeing in the Japan Times account of a recent encounter between a Washington base-ball team and a Waseda, that the former talked incessantly during play, doubtless trying to rattle their adversaries, whereas the Japanese lads maintained silence; but, our contemporary adds, they are now debating the advisability of following the American example. We strongly recommend them to do nothing of the kind in this matter at all events.

Some time ago, as our readers doubtless remember, there was talk of Japan adhering to the Anglo-American-Russian Convention for preserving seals in the Behring Sea. Rumour, however, then attributed a dissentient attitude to the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, whose officials were disposed to contend that if Japan became a party to that Convention, she would be giving away a great deal and getting very little in return. It is now said, however, that the Department has modified its opinion, and that it approves the idea of Japan joining England, Russia and America in this business. It is true that some 30 Japanese schooners which now ply a profitable trade by fishing outside the 3-mile limit in the Behring Sea would lose their métier if Japan adhered, and it is also true that Japan has very few seals to protect where England, Russia and America have a great many. The former consideration, however, is not very important, and, as for the latter, it has to be noted that Japan would have a great many more seals had it not been for poachers in the old days. There is no reason why she may not look forward to having fine rookeries in the future.

According to the Chuo Shimbun, the meeting of Cabinet Ministers and Elder Statesmen on the 25th inst. was convened at the instance of the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs. Its object, if we may follow this authority, which ought to be trustworthy—was to determine Japan's policy towards China. There are many outstanding questions which hold the two countries apart, and in the meanwhile China is progressing rapidly, while Anglo-French and Franco-Belgian Syndicates are vigorously seeking railway concessions. It is evidently important that these long unsolved problems should be cleared away, and that the relations between the two neighbouring Empires should be placed on a really friendly and intimate footing. It was about the method of effecting this that the meeting was asked to confer. The nature of its decision is of course secret, but that it arrived at a satisfactory decision is said to be certain, and the departure of Japan's new Representative in Peking, Mr. Ijūin, will take place early next month.

It is stated (Asahi's telegrams) that Russia has determined to make the headquarters of the Amur Railway at Chita. For a long time the question lay between Nerchinsk and Chita. But it was found impossible to get in the latter place a building sufficiently large for the purpose, and accordingly Chita has been selected. Meanwhile the doubling of the Circum-Baikal Railway is proceeding apace. An English traveller who has just passed over the line speaks enthusiastically of the vigour and skill with which the Russians are pushing the work. Russia is evidently determined to make her occupation effective by colonising these remote regions. Her intention extends to North Saghalien also, for she has announced that the Island shall be brought under the same system as that prevailing in Siberia with regard to free grants of land to settlers.

The autumnal equinox is acting up to its usual character. Numerous centres of depression are reported in the vicinity of Japan. There is one in Saghalien, another in Mongolia, a third at the Ogasawara Islands and a fourth on the south of Kyushu. The one whose effects were felt in Tokyo from the afternoon of the 24th inst. was the visitor from the Bonin Islands. The Kyushu depression remains to be heard from, but it is not of a serious nature.

The deluges of rain which visited Yokohama and Tokyo during the night of the 29th—30th are not traced to any special centre of depression. There have been four centres of shallow depression in the waters neighbouring the coasts of Japan during the past 48 hours, but none of them is of serious dimensions.

Lieut.-General Nakamura, Chief Director of the Wakamatsu Steel Foundry, speaking through the columns of the Mainichi Dempo, says that as the Foundry's affairs are dealt with in a special account, it has escaped the postponements effected in other directions in connexion with the programme of financial revision. The Foundry is now capable of turning out 600 miles of rails annually, but unfortunately there is no commensurate demand in consequence of the depressed state of the business world. In the intervals of manufacturing rails the Foundry turned its attention to locomotives, and has been eminently successful in producing them. In fact the Wakamatsu Foundry and the Kure Arsenal combined are now in a position to supply the country with everything required for the purpose of armaments, to say nothing of railway material. Last year the Foundry manufactured articles to the extent of 80,000 tons, and this year its estimate was for 110,000, but owing to lack of demand the figure will probably fall to 100,000. If the Factory worked up to its full power it could turn out 150,000 or 160,000 tons yearly. There is now not so much as one foreigner on the staff. The 8,000 employees and workmen are Japanese. The only things of which the Factory has to complain are that the demand for its products is small at present and their price low.

On the 29th ultimo an imposing ceremony was organised by the Russian military authorities at Medsy, where 23 Japanese officers and soldiers who died while imprisoned in Russia were buried. The Japanese Government appears to have asked Russia to exhume these bodies and to cremate them so that their ashes might be returned to Japan. The Russians not only complied with the request, but also made the disinterment the occasion for a solemn military service presided over by the Colonel of the 199th Regiment and attended by a large force of guards. In spite of inclement weather there is said to have been a great concourse of people. The remains were sent to the cremation grounds by train and were accompanied by Lieut.-General Odagiri.

The new Criminal Code goes into force to-day. It is accompanied by a body of regulations called the keisatsu shobatsu-rei. This latter defines the punitive powers of police magistrates and greatly extends them, for whereas their competence under the old system was limited to 10 days' imprisonment and a maximum fine of 2 yen, these limits are now enlarged to 30 days and 20 yen respectively. Moreover many offences not hitherto specified as falling under the purview of police magistrates are judiciable by them in the new regulations.

At its meeting on the 15th instant the Hongkong Sanitary Board received and adopted the following report:—

1. The Committee advise that a Chinese circular be drawn up by the Registrar-General and distributed broadcast. The circular to exhort people to keep cats so as to keep away rats and thereby diminish the plague epidemic.
2. That the Sanitary Inspectors during their periodic inspections inquire if cats are kept, and if not, advise the householders to do so.
3. That the Registrar-General use his influence with the various Chinese institutions and societies and explain to them the benefits to be derived from the keeping of cats and further,
4. That the Registrar-General call upon the restaurant and brothel keepers to keep a sufficient number of cats upon their premises.
5. That a circular be issued to godown keepers informing them that godowns, and more specially those storing grain and other food, are as a rule infested with rats and thereby a great source of danger to the public, that a building infested with rats is a nuisance under the Public Health and Buildings Ordinance, and that it is their duty to rid their buildings of rats; and that experience has shown that rats in godowns can effectively be kept down by keeping a number of cats on the premises.
6. That the Sanitary Department endeavour to obtain and supply cats and kittens of a good rat-catching breed.
7. The Committee are glad to be able to state that the Chinese seem fully to realise the benefit to be derived from keeping cats as a prevention of rat infestation, and that the increase of cats is very noticeable.

For sometime back there has been quite a mania for cats in Tokyo, and it is now a rare thing indeed to see any dead kittens by the road side—formerly a common sight.

Mr. Heki, hitherto Councillor of Embassy in Berlin, has been nominated Minister Plenipotentiary in Chili.

Mr. Ozaki Yukio has been nominated Mayor of Tokyo in the sequel of the recent election.

It is reported by the Japanese Consul at Odessa that the cholera in St. Petersburg is infecting other districts. Recently 15 cases were reported in Odessa. Some steamers from Odessa have been detained at the quarantine station near Constantinople for 5 days.

THE LAW COURTS.

ALLEGED TREASON.

The trial of K. Kushitani, an official of the Iwachu Harbour Office, and S. Ishiyama, a lawyer of Sapporo, who are charged with infringing the Military Secret Preservation Law, began on Sept. 24th in the Tokyo District Court before Judge Shimada.

Kushida stated, according to a Tokyo paper, that when he was employed at the Maidzuru Naval Station, he photographed the fortress, and in 1904 when the Russo-Japan war broke out he handed the photograph to Ishiyama after cutting it into 26 pieces.

Ishiyama stated that he brought the photograph to the notice of a military attaché of the Russian Embassy in Tokyo merely with a view to ascertaining whether Russia was endeavouring to renew hostilities or intended to maintain friendly relations. When the accused showed the photograph to the Russian officer he was very anxious to have it. Therefore he asked the officer five million yen for the photo but the officer hesitated to give a definite reply. The accused added that, if the Russian officer offered a price for the photograph, the accused would have transferred it to the Minister for the Navy with a request for money, taking as a standard what was offered by the Russian.

The Judge decided to pass decision on Oct. 1st.

SCHROEDER-SILVA CASE.

A case in which Mr. Schroeder claims yen 300 from Mr. G. M. C. de Silva, for having caused damage to a diamond entrusted to him for setting in a ring, was again brought up in the Yokohama District Court on Sept. 30th.

As Plaintiff was absent, and was not represented, Judge Miyake passed judgment dismissing Plaintiff's claim and also ordering him to bear the costs.

CLAIM FOR WOOLLEN CLOTH.

The hearing of a case filed by Messrs. Simon Evers and Co., against S. Hashimoto, a woollen goods merchant, claiming yen 587.21, began on Sept. 30th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miyake.

Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. Yamada, and Defendant by Mr. Ota.

Plaintiffs' counsel stated that his clients made a contract with Defendant in May, 1906, for supplying 12 pieces of fancy woollen cloth, and another contract in October of the same year for supplying 12 pieces of coating. The main condition of the contract was that the delivery of the goods should be taken not later than 60 days after the arrival at Yokohama. The woollen materials were imported in due time and Defendant took delivery of 6 pieces each of the fancy woollen cloth and of the coating. The remainder was still left untouched though Plaintiffs urged Defendant repeatedly to take delivery and to pay for them. Defendant further refused to bear the storage, the payment of which was due by him as a condition of the contract. Counsel asked the Judge to order Defendant to pay for the remaining woollen materials, the value of which was yen 587.21.

Defendant's Counsel said that his client did not personally attend to the alleged business and consequently did not know the real nature of the business. One of his employees seemed to have made the contract with the plaintiff firm. The banto, however, left his office a long time ago. Under the foregoing circumstances, Counsel was not perfectly prepared with the case. He asked the Judge to adjourn the proceedings.

Thereupon the Judge decided to re-hear the case on Oct. 14th.

SNOW.

On the morning of Sept. 24th, snow fell on Mount Yatsugatake and the surrounding mountainous districts in Shinano province. The temperature at Suwa was 57° F.

Snow fell on Sept. 24th in Ishikari province, Hokkaido. The fall is 10 days later than that of last year.

THE "JAPAN GAZETTE."

WITH no little reluctance do we find ourselves constrained to notice a curiously unjust and baseless attack made by the Japan Gazette upon this journal. It would be much more congenial to leave such assaults wholly unnoticed, contemptuous silence being most worthy of them. But in some cases silence is apt to be construed as consent, and we, who have lived in Japan more than 40 years and have counted among our intimate and respected friends a greater number of Far-Eastern merchants than those with whom the editor of the Japan Gazette has even casually associated during his whole career, cannot choose but protest when we are publicly charged with "slandering foreigners at command"; with "neglecting no opportunity to sneer at the Yokohama merchant and belittle his function"; with "championing Mr. PRESTON's 'direct-trade' campaign," and with advocating the elimination of the foreign middleman from the commerce of this country. Everyone of these charges is absolutely false. We challenge the Japan Gazette to quote from the columns of the Japan Mail from January 1st, 1881—when this journal came into the hands of its present editor—to September 25th, 1908, so much as one passage which "slanders foreigners"; which "sneers at the Yokohama merchant"; which "belittles his function," or which advocates the elimination of the foreign middleman from the commerce of this country. There is no such passage to be found. As for "championing Mr. PRESTON's direct-trade campaign," not the remotest allusion, direct or indirect, has been made to that campaign in these columns.

The proximate cause of the Japan Gazette's attack is an article which we published on the 22nd instant, pointing out that foreign middlemen and Japanese merchants constitute a big coöperative association of the kind so frequently advocated for the development of Japan's resources, and that the foreign middlemen bear the burden and heat of the day in the functions of the association. The Japan Gazette essays to prove that in taking this position we have made a complete volte-face, for whereas we formerly advocated "direct trade," we now advocate the opposite. We have never advocated direct trade. But we have never been blind to the fact that, in some degree, it is inevitable. Our contemporary, in support of its proposition, quotes a letter from the Tokyo correspondent of The Times published in July, 1907. Certain historical and absolutely undeniable facts were there set down, and in their sequel the correspondent said:—

Are we to assume, then, that the role of the foreign merchant in Japan must become by-and-by a thing of the past; that he will be excluded from the trade which he founded and has done so much to develop? In a measure the answer must be affirmative.

On this one paragraph is based the charge that we advocate "direct trade." No one reading the paragraph with commonly honest eyes could construe it in such a sense. Further, in view of the misunderstandings engendered by the above letter among persons ignorant of the history of Japan's over-sea trade in the early days, the correspondent of The Times wrote an explanatory letter on April 6th, 1908. To this second letter the Japan Gazette is careful not to make the slightest allusion. Bent upon traducing the editor of the Japan Mail and throwing dust in the eyes of the public, it carefully suppresses evidence which would at once expose the falsehood of its accusation as to "slandering foreigners at command"; "belittling their function" and advocating the elimination of the foreign middleman. Here is a portion of the suppressed document:—

Last July The Times published in its Financial and Commercial Supplement an article from its Tokyo correspondent, discussing the future of the foreign merchant in Japan, and arriving at the conclusion that his some-time great share in the country's over-sea commerce is in process of gradual diminution, owing to very active intrusion on the part of the Japanese middle-man, who, not unnaturally, counts it an implied reproach to his competence that he can not do his country's business without alien aid. It was pointed out that this desire for independence had been stimulated by certain peculiar trade methods which, though essential from the foreign merchant's point of view, were noxious to the Japanese, first, as being based on an assumption of native untrustworthiness, and, secondly, as affording opportunities occasionally utilized by foreigners with more shrewdness than scrupulosity. Unfortunately this analysis was read as reflecting upon the ability and morality of the British merchant in particular, on his ability because he allowed his melior to slip from his grasp, and on his morality because he abused abnormal circumstances. As a matter of fact the British merchant was not even once referred to directly from the beginning to the end of the article, and equally as a matter of fact the British merchant, throughout the history of Yokohama, has never been connected with the irregularities referred to. It may be said with strict truth that the general average of commercial morality is higher among the foreign residents of Yokohama than among any community elsewhere of similar size not specially selected. But it may also be said—and this is not merely my own opinion based on over forty years' experience, it is also a conviction which I know to be prevalent among the Japanese—that, speaking broadly, the British merchant stands in a class by himself, just as the British Judge does. In point of straight, fair dealing other nationals contrast rather than compare with him, premising of course that this applies to the general level, not to the numerous exceptions elevated above it. By the British merchant, too, were laid the foundations of Japan's foreign commerce in the Meiji era, and by him has been built a large part of the fine edifice now standing on them. Yet there is no doubt that he and his able confireres of other nationalities are gradually losing the paramount position they once occupied in that commerce. Their native rival is displacing them. Whether in the last resort, however, room will not remain for them, is a question which the events of the past few months have helped to answer. It has always to be remembered that if the percentage of the foreigner's share in the trade is growing smaller, the volume of the trade itself increases in a much greater ratio. To monopolise a business of a hundred million yen is five times as insignificant an operation as to do one-half of a trade of a thousand millions. Hence, though the foreign middle-man has to be content with a diminishing proportion, what remains to him is great by contrast with what preceded, and there is moreover the well-founded hope that his conspicuous ability will discover new opportunities of profitable usefulness. These features have been recognised from the first. But recent experiences have intensified another aspect of the problem. Can Japan afford to dispense with the resident foreign merchant in his role of capitalist? Can she, in the absence of his cooperation, finance her over-sea commerce without detriment to her development in other directions? Capital is her great want. She has not enough, not nearly enough, to go round. In Hokkaido, in Saghalien, in Korea, in Manchuria and in Formosa, to say nothing of the home islands, great opportunities lie fallow for want of funds to cultivate them; and if, in the presence of this urgency, she is relieved from the pressure of having to finance her foreign commerce, she ought to welcome and foster the relief instead of obeying a sentimental inclination to become independent of it.

Even if the Japan Gazette pleads that it was ignorant of this second letter, thus confessing gross carelessness in collecting evidence, it certainly cannot show that the first letter contained so much as one assertion capable of being construed in the sense of advocating direct trade, while as to "belittling the Yokohama merchant's function," we leave our contemporary to reconcile its allegation with the statement of The Times correspondent, quoted by the Gazette itself, that "the foreign merchant founded the trade and did so much to develop it."

We have now shown conclusively that the Japan Gazette's accusations are flagrant misrepresentations, a task which will doubtless appear quite superfluous to all readers of the Japan Mail, but which the falseness and effrontery of the charges rendered unavoidable.

MR. CONSUL-GENERAL COCKBURN.

MR. COCKBURN is unfortunate. He was obliged to discharge his functions in Seoul at a time when to steer an even course between two contending parties was difficult. His natural predilection for his own countrymen drew him in one direction while duty and justice drew him in the other. The YANG case was a hard nut indeed. YANG had been deceitfully inveigled from under the shadow of the extra-territorial flag in the first instance, and when he returned to it, he had lost his right to claim its protection. But the privilege having been vitiated by a subterfuge, it may well have seemed to a highly conscientious official, like Mr. COCKBURN, that to acknowledge YANG's loss of asylum would be to indirectly endorse the device by which it was taken from him. In these circumstances it could not but be very repugnant to surrender the man incontinently. To hold him, however, would have been technically wrong, and it was Mr. COCKBURN's misfortune that he failed to realize the fact sooner. The public, however, appreciated his dilemma, and his too tardy rendition of the refugee elicited no harsh warrant. But he has now written to Mr. BETHELL the following letter, which appears in the Japan Chronicle:—

"H. B. M. CONSULATE-GENERAL."

"Seoul, September 10th, 1908."

"SIR,—Some three weeks ago you wrote to ask me to invite the Japanese authorities in Korea to exercise control over the local correspondents of Japanese newspapers with a view to stopping the dissemination of false statements tending to injury and discredit. I did not formally reply to your letters because on the 20th August I had an opportunity of explaining to you my views in conversation. I pointed out to you that one at least of the Japanese newspaper correspondents has reported by telegram that either I myself or some member of my staff was personally concerned in the alleged embezzlements of the Loan Redemption Fund, and I told you that I thought the statements of these persons should be treated with indifference. You thereupon represented to me that although you might be indifferent to statements appearing in the vernacular press of Japan, it was not impossible that some of these statements might be repeated in telegrams to England and that your reputation might thereby be injured in the eyes of those who did not know how untrustworthy were the original purveyors of information.

"You also pointed out that it was useless to hope for redress by means of a libel action in Japan, and in this, from what I have been told of the Japanese law of libel, I felt bound to agree with you. I adhered, however, after full consideration, to my opinion that it would be useless for me to make for your protection the representations you desired to the Japanese authorities here."

"I did not, at the time of this conversation, fully realise in what manner the statements appearing in the vernacular press might be misused. You have, however, to-day drawn my attention to a telegram dated Tokyo, August 30th, published in the North China Herald of September 5th, as received from the Tokyo correspondent of that newspaper, to the following effect:—'It is reported from Japanese sources that there is considerable native agitation in Seoul against Mr. Bethell in connection with the national debts redemption funds. The Japanese telegrams state that Mr. Bethell confessed to misappropriation in reply to remonstrative inquiries that were made yesterday.'"

"Under the circumstances, I think that you are entitled to a formal expression of my opinion, which is that the mere fact of a statement being telegraphed to Japan by a Japanese newspaper correspondent ought not to be considered as creating any presumption that there is the slightest basis of truth for it.—I am, Sir,

"YOUR OBEDIENT SERVANT,
(Signed) "HENRY COCKBURN."

With what object was this letter written and what good purpose could it have been intended to serve? If any time can be conceived when silence is specially golden, and when the discretion imposed on all responsible officials is particularly imperative, that time was surely the closing period of Mr. COCKBURN'S service in Seoul. He had been placed in a very embarrassing situation, and had emerged from it not altogether without blame, and not without some semblance of partiality. He was living amid considerable commotion. A section of the British community had conceived the notion that the Korean editor of the Dai Han Mai Il Shin-pao was the victim of persecution at Japanese instance because he had given evidence in the criminal suit against Mr. BETHELL. At the head of that section stood Mr. BETHELL himself, a man who had undergone 3 weeks' imprisonment in a British jail for inciting to anti-Japanese violence, and who was almost directly concerned in the charge of malversation. The British Consul-General was bound by every principle of fair-play and by every canon of official etiquette to stand strictly aloof from either party in this matter. Unhappily failing to discern the prudent course, he wrote to Mr. BETHELL a letter which, though carefully worded, can not but convey to the Korean nation the conviction that he sympathises with Mr. BETHELL. It is inevitable. This letter from the British Consul-General will effectually rehabilitate Mr. BETHELL'S reputation in Korea and restore all his capability for sedition-mongering. We do not believe that Mr. COCKBURN had any such intention in writing the letter. But that is scarcely an excuse. Every reader will ask, "What then was the intention?" That is the question which presents itself to us and we confess ourselves perplexed to answer. Apparently Mr. COCKBURN thought that there was occasion to bear public testimony to the absolute untrustworthiness of all Japanese journals. He could scarcely have used stronger or more sweeping language—"You are entitled to an expression of my opinion, which is that the mere fact of a statement being telegraphed to Japan by a Japanese newspaper correspondent ought not to be considered as creating any presumption that there is the slightest basis of truth in it." That this is a serious exaggeration and very unfair to the Japanese press, are facts which do not concern us so much as Mr. COCKBURN'S purpose in making such a pronouncement. His official duties did not include any obligation to pass public judgment on the press of Japan, and his opinion is therefore not more valuable than that of any private individual. But is it conceivable that he did not foresee the effect of his letter, or anticipate its significance as identifying him with the BETHELL section in Korea? If not, his want of foresight was lamentable.

NATIONAL IDEALS.

THE ideals which nations, in this material age, are disposed, or free, to set before themselves are as a rule the reverse of lofty. With nations this is true to an even greater degree than with individuals. The springs of action for both, in the war of existence, may be gathered up under one head—competition; and for all alike material well-being, in its widest sense, is the common goal. It is conceivable, of course, that an individual may be so favoured of circumstance as to be able, if he will, to withdraw from the strife, and in the seclusion thus obtained, to pursue, unmolested, aims higher and more peaceful than those of self-aggrandisement. But with a nation, particularly if it be in the van of civilization and political influence, such a course is impossible, unless the alternative of national death can be faced with equanimity. One example may no doubt be quoted of a small and self-contained State which is able to work out its destiny undisturbed by fears of interference from without—to wit, the land-girt mountain-State of Switzerland. But the happy isolation of that State is the gift of Nature, and one that will last for all time. Change its physical formation and environment—make it, for example, an island—and all that self-centred security would be gone. But few nations are thus favourably placed. Those in the forefront of the race, who would have a voice in the parliament of nations, must struggle—bloodlessly, if possible, but struggle they must, or go under.

In these circumstances it is little wonder that national ideals do not look well on paper. Dr. A. R. WALLACE, the eminent scientist, has enumerated them for us in an article inspired no doubt by the most pacific intentions. His list is as follows: (1) Extent of territory (2) world-wide commerce (3) great and increasing population (4) enormous wealth (5) Imperial rule over vast territories of subject peoples. False ideals, says the great scientist, yet nevertheless they are the ideals of modern Governments.

Up to this point most people would probably agree with the learned doctor. The world is far from a state of perfection, and seeing that mankind in the mass, as nations, will and must continue to act in much the same way as individuals when brought under the influence of competition—viz. enrich themselves at the expense of others—there would seem to be no remedy short of the moral regeneration of the world at large. How this is to be accomplished is not explicitly indicated, but Dr. WALLACE suggests that something might be done by the force of example. He would have one particular nation, for the benefit of mankind, renounce these false ideals and all that they have brought in their train. The nation he has selected for this wonderful and unprecedented feat of self-abnegation is Great Britain.

Here both the idealism and the logic of the doctor begin to wobble. After admitting that "we (Great Britain) owing to a series of favourable conditions and mainly owing to our naval and manufacturing superiority, have obtained a decided superiority in most of these elements of greatness" he goes on to declare that it has all been done "from the one point of view of self-interest, and by means of unjust and disgraceful wars—by plundering and blundering all over the globe."

"And we are proud of all this!" cries the worthy Doctor. "We boast of our Empire on which the sun never sets." Well, if it has been the result of our own naval and manufacturing superiority, aided by favourable conditions, why not? What is there to be ashamed of in an Empire thus won? Is there no such thing as legitimate pride, which applied to one's country, men call patriotism? Dr. WALLACE, apparently, thinks not.

Here, it seems to us, Dr. WALLACE does not give sufficient recognition to the fact that, throughout the history of the nations since the world began, war has been the main instrument of territorial aggrandisement—the greatest of those national ideals which Dr. WALLACE has so explicitly set forth. In so far, therefore, as war has played a part in the formation of the British Empire, it has been only in pursuit of that ideal. But the critic complains that the British wars are "unjust," and cites as recent examples those in Egypt, North-West India and South Africa! The examples are unfortunate in the extreme. The war which delivered Egypt from the terrors of a fanatical and murderous barbarism, and led to an occupation which has given that troubled land freedom from oppression, enlightenment for darkness and material prosperity for bankruptcy—is an unjust war! To repress fanatical raids on the frontier of India and establish peace on her borders is unjust! To rid South Africa of an overweening and corrupt oligarchy, which had for its avowed object the extinction of British rule throughout the whole region, is "a petty quarrel, deliberately founded on fraud and aggression, a war begun on false pretences, culminating in an orgy of devastation and bloodshed," etc., etc. When a writer betrays such blinded passion, so palpable a lack of the sense of proportion, the value of his opinions must be heavily discounted. Here speaks not the man of science, but the man of prejudice—the Little-Englander with an axe to grind. Dr. WALLACE does not add to the strength of his appeal when he thus allies himself with the pitiful and insensate crew who in the critical days of that struggle went about crying "Shall I slay my brother Boer?" He is fully aware that never was a war conducted on such "rose-water" principles, and never did a vanquished enemy receive such generous terms as the brave but misguided Boers. To talk of an orgy of devastation and bloodshed in such a context is to reveal either a colossal ignorance of history or a deliberate desire to mislead. The loss of life in that war in proportion to the numbers engaged was, one might almost say, ridiculously small. Some 3000 men were killed out of 300,000 on the British side in the course of 2½ years—a mortality which has been exceeded in hundreds of single battles from the beginning of the Christian Era down to the two great wars of modern times, the France-German and the Russo-Japanese. How, one wonders, would Dr. A. R. WALLACE place these great encounters, both as regards the motives underlying their inception and as regards the consequences which ensued? Is it to be presumed that by comparison with the Egyptian or South-African campaign these wars were just?

It is a remarkable fact that the be-littlers of England cannot or will not argue "straight." Probably they will not—for logical processes of reasoning would lead to conclusions other than they desire. Like BALAAM, perhaps, they might start out to curse and finish by blessing. At any rate the curious meanderings of Dr. WALLACE's arguments are such as to lead ordinary mortals to wonder why that scientist did not confine himself to his speculations on Mars instead of dabbling in the political pie. Here are some of them from the same article.

1. "All the most suitable regions for European colonization and expansion are monopolised by us or by our countrymen—" a terminological inexactitude of the first water. The idea intended to be conveyed by the word "monopolised" is peculiarly false. It is a truism that wherever the British flag floats men of all nations are free to come and go, to trade and to live, with absolute freedom.

2. "The whole of temperate North America is held by people of the English race"—a half-truth intended to bear out the previous statement: the United States form no part of the British Empire.

3. "Germany and the United States are already superior to us in population and fully our equals in wealth and civilization." Here, for the purpose in hand, the United States are regarded as a separate nation, and though the British Empire as such is continually harped upon elsewhere in the article, it is here, for purposes of false comparison, conveniently ignored.

4. "How virtuous of us to want peace when there is nothing more to be got by war!" The italics, which are ours, show a grotesque parody of fact.

5. "We will not be allowed (sic) to interfere with whatever it (Germany) considers to be its legitimate expansion." Allowing the assumption of "interference" to pass—how can there be expansion for anyone when there is "nothing more to be got?" And, why is expansion "legitimate" for Germany but not for England?

Nevertheless all this flap-doodle, despite its absurdity, affords supreme delight to our local German contemporary. The floundering in argument, the reckless misrepresentation, are congenial and, therefore, in a review of the article, it adds a few more artifices of its own to deceive those who may be content to take the Japan Herald's versions of statements for the statements themselves. Its review of Dr. WALLACE's article the German organ heads "International Morality." Now with all his bungling Dr. WALLACE takes pains to say that he leaves morality out of the question—"the high ethical standpoint of right and justice has no place in practical politics." Dr. WALLACE set out by showing that all the Great Powers have been pursuing "false ideals." There is no mention of morality from beginning to end of his article. Yet the Herald represents him as "holding that Great Britain has transgressed international morality"—a romance of the Herald's own. Again, it makes Dr. WALLACE say England has set up a "claim to decide the empire of the world." Dr. WALLACE made no such remark. That is the Herald's misrepresentation.

Leaving these elegant "additions" of our contemporary we may remark that the worthy doctor's remedies for this state of affairs are heroic enough. He himself fears that they will be regarded as Utopian, but how Utopian he does not appear to realize. First, the two-Power standard for the Navy must be abandoned; to maintain it is "insolent." England must retire into herself and attend to social problems. Self-government must be given to Ireland, India, Egypt, etc. Verily, if the worthy scientist's recommendations were carried out, the last state of the British Empire would be worse than the first. In the very three countries he has selected we would soon have an "orgy of bloodshed and devastation" beside which that attendant on the Boer War would sink into nothingness. But of course they would not be suffered to remain thus: they would be seized by the first enterprising Great Power that came along. England herself, the richest prize, would doubtless be fought over most fiercely of all, for, stripped of her naval defences, she would fall an easy prey to any assailant with "a legitimate desire for expansion." Then with the breakup of the world's greatest Empire, there would follow such a game of grab as the world had never seen; the day of Armageddon would dawn, and world-wide war; and what with fire and sword and devastation, all the other Powers with a legitimate desire for expansion would be able to pursue unimpeded those "false ideals of greatness" which England, dead and gone, had so successfully pursued.

Then, at last, in the seclusion of his laboratory—if anything was left of it—Dr. A. R. WALLACE would be satisfied—and so no doubt would the Japan Herald, whose "opinions are his," only a little more so.

FACTS AND THEIR EFFECT UPON SOME PUBLICISTS.

MR. GLADSTONE once said that no one who spoke the truth openly could hope to live at peace in an Eastern community of foreigners, for he would be hounded out by those interested in the suppression and distortion of the truth. We have often been reminded of the accuracy of that dictum during a long sojourn in Japan. In saying this we do not mean to suggest that truth is not as highly regarded and as much respected in Yokohama or Kobe, for example, as it is any part of the world. What we contend is that the settlements are never without publicists who, for the sake of posing as champions of the foreign residents, fabricate the existence of some attack upon the latter and make a clamorous show of defending them against it. A champion's services possess value only in the presence of danger. It is therefore necessary to manufacture danger, and these self-appointed champions habitually fix on the Japan Mail as the terrible peril, such choice being doubly convenient in that to hound the Japan Mail out of the field would remove their only formidable business competitor. Their iterated and reiterated cry is that the Japan Mail is pro-Japanese. But in raising that cry they fail altogether to appreciate what it means, fail to perceive the postulate underlying it, namely, that radical animosity exists between Japanese and foreigners, and that to say a good word for Japan is to be the enemy of Western countries. There is no escaping the inference. If these publicists denounce the Japan Mail as the enemy of foreigners because its tone is kindly to Japan, there is no escaping the conclusion that they hold friendship between foreigners and Japanese to be radically impossible. Yet if any one ventures to call them anti-Japanese, they indignantly and vociferously repudiate the charge! At the head of these distortors of truth stands the Japan Chronicle, and we propose to devote a few lines to exposing its latest manoeuvre. The weapons used are very simple, distortion and misrepresentation. In the first place we are accused of having said in 1907 that "the foreign merchant in Japan must by-and-by be excluded from the trade which he founded and has done so much to develop." We never said so. Our words were:—"Are we to assume, then, that the rôle of the foreign merchant in Japan must become by-and-by a thing of the past; that he will be excluded from the trade which he founded and has done so much to develop? In a measure the answer must be affirmative." In a measure—these words, which expressly limit the extent of the forecast, are carefully ignored by the Japan Chronicle. It is absolutely true that the foreign merchant has already been excluded from the trade in a measure, and it is absolutely true that the process is still going on. But it is absolutely false to assert, as the Japan Chronicle asserts, that we have predicted his entire exclusion. That is an example of the misrepresentation and distortion of facts by means of which the Japan Chronicle seeks to discredit the Japan Mail. But since to relate as a historical fact that a part of the over-sea commerce is gravitating to Japanese hands would not be in any sense inimical to foreigners, there remains the task of proving that this journal is an enemy against whose insidious attacks the Japan Chronicle guards the community. The feat is essayed in this way. The editor of the Mail is charged with having described the foreign community as "men whose general behaviour tended to create the impression that they despised and looked down upon the nation whose hospitality they enjoyed, and whose" (i.e. the foreign community's—we are not responsible for our contemporary's English) "business practices in almost every branch of the country's over-sea commerce were, to say the least, not strictly honest." In the context of this description the Mail is accused of "wholesale denunciation of the foreign community," and the foreigner is spoken of as "much maligned." A falseness never was penned, but it belongs to the category of crafty lies so mixed up with truth as to be all the more insidious. What was really said was this:—

The foreign community lived almost wholly isolated. They did not of deliberate choice segregate themselves from the people among whom they had cast their lot, but all the conditions of their existence combined to differentiate them, and that, too, in a manner eminently calculated to estrange Japanese sentiment. In the first place, they acknowledged no responsibility towards the laws of the land, the exemption being based on an assumption of superiority necessarily galling to a proud and patriotic nation like the Japanese. In the second, the imposing dimensions of their houses, the comparatively costly and ostentatious fashion of their lives, and the fact that they had virtually no social intercourse with the people of the country all tended to create an impression, on the one hand, of deriving large profit from the trade they controlled, and, on the other, of despising and looking down on the nation whose hospitality they enjoyed.

Now from first to last the above statement is literally true. Everything there described did actually happen. No fair-minded man who possesses any knowledge will deny it. But to say that it is a "wholesale denunciation of the foreign community" and that it "much maligns" them is false. The foreign community had no choice. They were under the extraterritorial system and therefore under their own laws only, which system was avowedly based on the inferiority of Japanese laws and Japanese tribunals, and therefore galling from the Japanese standpoint. They could not live in Japanese houses, and the houses they built were necessarily magnificent in Japanese eyes. They could scarcely have cultivated any social intercourse with the people of the country, but the fact nevertheless differentiated them in Japanese appreciation. The whole description is a narrative of indisputable truths, which, while accounting for the desire of the Japanese to get the trade into their own hands, constitutes no sort of reproach to the foreign residents. Therefore to speak of it as a "wholesale denunciation of the foreign community" is a slander of the most unscrupulous description. As to the assertion that the editor of the Japan Mail has affirmed that "the business practices of the resident foreigner in almost every branch of the country's over-sea commerce were, to say the least, not strictly honest," we find nothing to describe it but a word of three letters which we do not care to write. Our original statement that "the same story, though in less striking terms, might be told of almost every branch of the country's over-sea commerce," was made in the context of a narrative of tearing, a practice which did not in the remotest degree reflect on the integrity of foreign business methods. Our paragraph had reference solely to the elimination of the Japanese producer. Besides, in the very same article, the generally fair and upright dealing of the foreign resident was eulogized, and in a subsequent article, of which the Japan Chronicle has full cognizance, we wrote:—"It may be said with strict truth that the general average of commercial morality is higher among the foreign residents of Yokohama than among any community elsewhere of similar size not specially selected." The editor of the Japan Chronicle we repeat, must have been quite well aware of our saving clause in the first article and of our appreciative clause in the second, yet he has the turpitude to charge us with saying that "the business practices of this resident foreigner in almost every branch of the country's over-sea commerce is, to say the least, not strictly honest."

If qualities doomed to be ultimately suicidal are of any temporary service in the moral "get up" of a newspaper, we congratulate the Japan Chronicle on possessing a full measure of craftiness. It knows by experience that the average reader of a journal will not be at the pains to verify its statements; will not give himself the trouble to investigate whether such and such a story is in accord with facts, or such and such a version consistent with its original. He assumes that the newspaper speaks the truth, and his assumptions are confirmed by its assurance, another quality with which the Japan Chronicle is amply dowered. We do not apologise to our readers for devoting so much space to exposing a mere harlequin trick, the creation of a bogie for the sake of parading its creator's valour in assault; but we do assure them that our exposé is not dictated by any distrust of their intellectual competence to detect the fraud unaided.

THE BOOKSHELF.

The Story of Two Women; by Baroness ALBERT D'ANETHAN (Messrs Kelly and Walsh, Yokohama.)

THE material used in constructing this story are not novel—a marriage which turns out to be no marriage; another's life thrown thereby into deep shadow, from which it barely emerges at the close into brief sun-shine; an illegitimate daughter whose surpassing beauty makes society receive her with open arms, but whose bar sinister repels serious suitors; these are the ingredients. The two women tell their own tales in alternate chapters from their diaries. That too is hardly a novelty of construction, but in this case it is used with great skill. The reader is made aware that by no other method could he have obtained such an intimate insight into the characters of the heroines. He is made aware, also, that only by a woman could the sentiments and sensibilities of women have been so closely analysed. Lady Beaumont, the mother, is profoundly lovable, but she lacks certain qualities of insight and resolution with which Ruby, the daughter, is richly endowed. This deficiency in the one and sufficiency in the other is cleverly thrown into relief, and the difference faithfully preserved throughout, whether expressed in words or translated into acts. Of the male sex there are two principal and two subordinate figures. The principals are in sharp contrast; one an excitable individual; the other, his antipodes. The subordinates have comparatively minor roles assigned to them, but they are clever types and very interestingly depicted. It might be supposed that as the book is written by a lady the scene of whose first and eminently successful work of fiction was laid in Japan, the same choice of locality would have been made in "The Story of Two Women" also. That is the case partially only, the events of the first section happening in England and Belgium, those of the second in the Far East. This second section contains some admirable descriptions of Japanese scenery, and very sympathetic appreciations of Japanese moods, manners and morals. A poem written under the shadow of Daibutsu is illustrative:—

I stand beneath the shade of heavy-lidded eyes;
Eyes passionlessly pure, inscrutably cold;
Eyes where the silence dim of distant ages dies;
Eyes weary with the sins of countless spheres untold!

Ah! consecrated Calm! Ah! Aspiration full!
Thy giant form is bent, thy great curved lips are still!

And yet thou speak'st—High Priest! Peace—wrought and wonderful!
Thy spirit-voice with dreams unbroken tones fill!

Nirvāna! Such the psalm, the slumbering psalm of rest,
That springs from silent lips, unfathomable eyes:
Supreme, grand, motionless. Bare is thy mighty breast.

Wrapped in eternal Calm, eternal Calm supplies.

Millicent Beaumont and Ruby live for the reader in delightful pictures from the brush of the Honourable Mrs. Lindley, and the book is dedicated to Mrs. Saxton Noble. Thus it is essentially a production without any intrusion of male assistance. Certainly it will have a wide circle of readers, and we predict that to old-fashioned folk it will suggest the question "is this a true photograph of the ethics of modern society?" The answer must be regretfully in the affirmative. Baroness d'Anethan depicts faithfully. She sets down things as they are, without taking from or adding to them. Whether the resulting facts represent progress or spell retrogression each reader of this fascinating volume must decide for himself. The opinion of the authoress is easily divined from the words she puts into the mouth of Millicent Beaumont. But the fact remains that the grand passion rules supreme now-a-days, and that its dominion has extended openly to regions which it used to invade by stealth only. "The Story of Two Women" rises, we think, to an even higher intellectual and dramatic level than that reached by "It happened in Japan." Yet it is difficult to decide between the two. Each will have its special eulogists. The book is excellently printed (Japan Gazette) on thick Japanese paper.

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

The question of how far the Japanese people as a whole will go in the acceptance of any form of Christianity and the question as to which of the many forms of Christianity is likely to find most favour here are still undetermined. One of the objects set before us in writing these Summaries is to state the views of prominent Japanese writers of all schools of thought on these two questions. There is no denying that rationalistic Christianity as held by the bulk of the Kumiai Churches, by all the Unitarians, by the Japanese Churches founded by certain German Missionary Societies and to a certain extent by Christians belonging to other sects is immensely powerful to day. In independence of spirit, in pecuniary self-support and perhaps in energy and progressiveness these Christians are certainly ahead of what are known as the orthodox sects. Will they maintain their pre-eminence during the next 50 years, or will they suffer from the disintegration to which all rationalistic Christian sects are liable? No confident answer to this question can be given now. It is impossible to forecast precisely what will happen. Lookers-on often see most of the game. So the opinion of outsiders is not without its value. That opinion we have often given before in these Summaries, and we now proceed to epitomize from the August Taiyō an article by Mr. Hasegawa Tenkei, entitled Ware wo shite jiyū ni katarashimeyo (Let me Speak freely), in which anti Christian views are expressed. Mr. Hasegawa first refers to Dr. Katō Hiroyuki's recent attack on Christianity as irrational and uncalled for, and then proceeds thus:—Like Dr. Katō, I am opposed to the spread of Christianity here, but on other grounds. It is important to distinguish between real Christianity and the secularized form of the religion as espoused to day in Europe and America. When it is affirmed that Christianity is the foundation of Western civilisation, the secularized form of the religion is referred to. That form in the history of Western nations has certainly been inextricably mixed up with their civilisation, is one element in it if not exactly its foundation. The real religion of Christ is a religion for the weak, a religion which teaches men to despise this world and live for the next. It has always been specially welcomed by persons who have failed to get on in this world (Genze ni oite ishi wo tate-ōsu koto no dekinu mono ni wa kakkō no shūkyō de aru). A nation which has succeeded in developing a civilisation of its own, a nation whose policy is firmly established on a sure secular foundation has no use for Christianity. Japan developed herself and reached the position she now occupies without the aid of this religion, showing what is possible in this matter. . . . As regards Dr. Katō's position, his views on evolution and all that it has done and his views on the Japanese State and its superiority to the teaching of Christianity are quite irreconcilable, and hence it is that his replies to Christian attacks within the past few months have been most unconvincing. In his Waga Kokutai to Kirisutokyo he assumed a false position and hence laid himself open to attack. But there is one point on which Dr. Katō's argument is unassailable. In maintaining that State objects and Christian objects can never be identical and that when the two authorities Christianity and the State clash, one must give way, he did good service to the cause of clear thought. In the West perpetual tining down of Christianity so as to make it acceptable to rulers and politicians has gone on for centuries. The vaunted Japonization of Christianity here is a movement of the same kind—another form of the secularization of the creed. With this movement I have no sympathy. If the creed as originally taught by Christ and his disciples can effect nothing in the way of moral reform here that has not been effected by our own ethical systems, then we shall do well to keep it out of the country. That the original creed did claim supreme authority over mankind, that this authority is higher than that of the State is an undoubted fact. There is no middle way between acknowledging the supremacy of the State and the supremacy of Christianity. If we can't place Christianity above the State, to reject it is the only honest course. To obey one lord in some things and another lord in other things, to be always trying to reconcile the irreconcilable, involves hypocrisy and lying such as are all too common in religious circles in the West. As loyal subjects of the Emperor we can not accept the teaching of primitive and genuine Christianity. To pretend to do so is hypocrisy. So the only course open to us is to reject Christianity altogether. Mr. Hasegawa in a long article deals with other subjects more or less bearing on Christianity. He discusses the influence of the desire for vengeance which is so common among mankind on the doctrinal system of the Jews and Christians. But we have no space to follow him further here.

It is perhaps true to say that the Japanese are very fond of grand sounding terms. The extent to which Taiyō (Oriental) has been used in recent years is quite astonishing. It is very frequently applied to something exclusively Japanese. Occasionally adjacent countries are included, hardly ever India or Siam. An "Oriental Tree-felling Company" one would expect to see cutting down trees all over the Eastern World, but the recently started Company bearing this name confines its work to Japan. In a recent number of the Teijū Rinrikai no Kōen-shū we find an essay on "The Need of Establishing an Oriental System of Ethics," written by Mr. K. Endo. Had Mr. Endō put Japanese instead of "Oriental" his title would have been more correct. What he discusses is the necessity of gathering up the various ethical theories, doctrines and precepts current in this country at the present time and blending them into some intelligible system. In the Japanese ethical world to-day great chaos prevails. In the moral teaching carried on in the schools there is much that is contradictory, much that is out of date and much that possesses no practical efficacy. A good deal of the ethical teaching to-day has come from the West. But the relative authority of ethical principles and rules has never been determined. The students at the various schools hear all sorts of teaching on morals and are often more confused than helped by what they hear. Confucius and Mencius, Wang Yang-Ming and Chutsz, Chwang-tsz and Laotze are all quoted in turn as of equal authority, despite the fact that on some cardinal points they differed materially from each other. Yet it seems to us that Mr. Endō hardly realizes the enormous difficulty of drawing up a system of ethics that shall commend itself to the general public. The whole question was discussed in these columns 20 years ago in a series of articles entitled "The Japanese in Search of a Basis for Ethics."* It was then shown that the old basis has been thoroughly undermined by modern influences of various kinds and that no new basis satisfactory to the whole nation has been determined on. The situation has not changed. The Japanese, or at any rate a large number of the more thoughtful of them, are still seeking for the same thing.

To the September Rikugō Zasshi Mr. K. Azuma contributes an article entitled "The critical condition of Christianity," of which we give the gist below. It is an undeniable fact that Christianity is not doing to-day what it did in former ages anywhere. It fails to satisfy men's spiritual wants in the way history tells us it was wont to do a century ago. Mental problems that press for a solution it no longer is able to solve. Another striking sign of its loss of influence is the fact that talented young men rarely enter the ministry or the Mission Schools from which Divinity students so often come. In Japan this fact is known to everybody. (Arayuru ten ni oite daiichiryū no seinen wa Kyōkeshia to yōsei suru iwayuru Mission School ni hairanu to iu koto wa hannin no mitomuru jijitsu de aru). Now to me the two above-named facts suffice to prove that real Christianity is making hardly any progress in this country. There are people who will cite evidence on the other side. They will say, Look at the success of our mission services. Were there not 600 converts made at the Exhibition? Were not the meetings held last year connected with the World's Young Men's Society a proof of the great influence of Christianity? Has not the Emperor himself contributed to the cause? Have not the Methodist Sects amalgamated and selected a Bishop of their own? Are not the Kumiai Kyōkai and the Nippon Kirisutokyo Churches now nearly all self-supporting, and are not our Japanese Churches now sending missionaries to other lands? People who are satisfied with such tokens are in a pitiable state of ignorance of the real situation of affairs, says Mr. Azuma. When one comes to ask what kind of Christianity it is that meets with popular favour, he finds it is of a distinctly worldly and inferior type. Numbers make a big show, but when one inquires what the majority of Church members are doing for the cause of Christianity and what standard of Christian life they have reached, bitter disappointment can not be avoided. However prosperous churches may appear to be, looked at from the outside, regarded from within they are seen to be devoid of all life (Gwaimen-teki no jiyū wa to ni kaku, sono naibu ni okeru seihei wa naku, nan to no kwakki ni son senu koto wo mitome uru de aru). The attendance at Church on Sundays is very bad. In some of the Metropolitan churches beyond the Mission School pupils who are marched to church by their teachers there are often not 20 persons present on Sundays. The numbers perhaps would not matter so much if there were any life or energy in those present. But this is just what is lacking. The men and women who assemble in churches are no doubt usually good men and good women, but their attainments are not such as to bring honour to the churches to which they belong. They show no culture that is superior to what is to be found elsewhere. To them the world looks in vain for a higher type of life than is commonly seen. To such people it is useless for young men to come with their mental perplexities. The Christian Church is only a big social organization, with its Shimboku kai, its Bansankai, its Kwangei-kai, its evangelistic missions, and what not, but the high spiritual life that one reads about as characterizing the Christianity of other countries and former times is conspicuously absent in our churches. Lacking spiritual authority among men, what is the Church but a big worldly institution whose chief function it is to supply ordinary social needs? If the Christianity of the old and genuine type cannot be revived in this country, if the creed no longer exercises a strong spiritual influence over men's thoughts no longer helps to solve their many doubts, Christian churches will soon be regarded as on a level with Shintō and Buddhist temples. No one who has the higher interests of the nation at heart can witness the steady manner in which Christianity has been secularized and vulgarized everywhere without deep regret. The greatest of all questions connected with religion in this country to-day is, can this tendency be checked? Can the Churches which now exist be converted into centres of spiritual power? Compared with this other subjects, however noisily they may be discussed, are utterly insignificant.

Writing in the Chūō Kōron Dr. Nitobe says that in modern times moral sayings are no longer drummed into the ears of young boys and girls in Japan as they used to be. In the West children are obliged to read the Bible in schools, and in Japan in former days the writings of Confucius and Mencius were used as text-books for very young children. Wise sayings whose meaning no child could take in were stored up in the memory to be quoted or applied in later life. There was some good in this, Dr. Nitobe thinks. But in the modern school no substitute exists. It would seem from what Dr. Nitobe tells us that there are people who have proposed that suitable moral text-books be compiled for use in schools. The Primary School moral text-books, it is considered, do not go far enough. But Dr. Nitobe ridicules the notion that moral text-books can be made to order. The sayings of Confucius and the sayings of Christ, he observes, derive their power from the personalities of these two great men. Is there anybody in the country to-day to whose authority people generally would submit in things moral? A Bible made to order! Is such a thing conceivable? Dr. Nitobe doubts whether a Committee consisting of the 12 Apostles or of 10 Philosophers, with Christ or Confucius as Chairman, could produce the kind of volume demanded.

The September number of the Koe opens with an excellent article addressed to its readers urging the necessity of greater co-operation between those who write and those who read as a means of making the Magazine a success. The editor says that in order to be really helpful to his readers it is necessary for him to know what are their difficulties, their doubts, their experiences, their wishes. He desires more communicativeness on their part. He rightly remarks that an editor who is quite ignorant of most of the ideas and opinions entertained and held by his readers pens much that is of little interest to them. He promises to make subjects of articles or notes any topics suggested to him by readers and to reply to any questions propounded to him. The chief objects which the Magazine sets before itself are to unite the various members of the Church to each other, to be a medium of intercourse between them and to enable the whole church to carry on joint works of charity, while acting as an instructor and enlightener as far as possible. Among the 60,000 Japanese members of the Catholic Church the editor of the Koe thinks there must be many whose experience and difficulties in life if related would be very helpful to their fellow-Christians and the Church's literary organ furnishes a suitable medium for the use of such persons.

Mr. Abe Isoo, writing in a magazine called Nyūjin, draws a distinction between Christian doctrine that can be put into practice and Christian doctrine that no one can safely carry out in real life. Among the teaching that is universally binding Mr. Abe reckons the precepts of Christ against anger. There is nothing he says that does more harm to men themselves and to others than giving way to anger. And as regards domestic and social happiness, no human weakness has marred that so much as anger. The precepts which Christians never carry out are those which embody a principle of non-resistance to evil, the turning of the left cheek to him who smites us on the right one, the giving of the cloak to him who tries to take away a coat. It seems quite plain, says Mr. Abe, that there are parts of the Christian ideal that can never be put into practice as long as the world is constituted as it is. Practical men and women must make a distinction between realizable and unrealizable Christian ideals and shape their actions accordingly.

The leading writers belonging to the Greek Church, whose articles have been repeatedly reproduced in these Summaries, are men of wide reading, who take a very keen interest in the attitude of various sections of Christendom to modern thought and to what is known as Western civilisation. In the Seikyō Shimpō the Rev. K. Ishikawa, the editor, has been reproducing at considerable length Roman Catholic statements bearing on the attitude of their Church to science and modern civilisation. It will be remembered that some months ago we epitomized an article or articles written by Mr. Yamada Toyohiko, one of the regular contributors to the Seikyō Shimpō, in which he demonstrated most clearly that modern Western civilisation is quite hostile to real Christianity. This is strenuously maintained by all orthodox Roman Catholic writers as well as by some leading Protestants. To this fact Mr. Ishikawa calls special attention in the articles he publishes under the title of "A Phenomenon in the European Religious World." It does not seem to us that Mr. Ishikawa has overrated the significance of the utterances of Pope Pius X and leading European Catholics on this point. In the face of these declarations the recent dictum of a political orator who has his own axe to grind like Mr. Balfour on the harmony between modern science and genuine Christianity carries little weight. Christianity must be twisted and made to assume all sorts of fantastic shapes in order to be reconciled to modern scientific teaching, say the leading European Catholics. This assertion naturally interests Japanese Greek Church scholars, who have always held the same view. It is after all a question of authority. Does paramount authority to settle what men shall believe lie with the Divines or with the scientists? When they differ fundamentally, Catholics and certain Protestants and Greek Church Christians are taught they must in all spiritual things follow the teaching of the Divines and reject that of the scientists. This, as Mr. Ishikawa points out, is logical ground to take, and it is infinitely preferable to the face-both-ways course adopted by numerous Protestant writers. A religion that claims to be based on a Divine Revelation can not afford to allow its doctrines to be tested or questioned by mere scientists or philosophers. Where there is disagreement the higher authority must always be appealed to.

"The spirit of the Gospel" is the title of an editorial which appears in a recent number of the Seikyō Shimpō; which emphasizes a point connected with Christian character among Japanese that is frequently overlooked. What a Christian becomes, says Mr. Ishikawa, depends largely on the original traits of his character, his early education and the culture to which he has been subjected. With all our most influential Christians it will be found that before they joined the Church they had fixed moral ideas, a certain amount of learning and some acquaintance with religion. It has been frequently pointed out that the men who joined the Church a quarter of a century ago are a finer set than those who have become Christians in recent times. The reason of this is that in the early days of the Church's history men of high moral culture were induced to become Christians. The culture did not come from Christianity at all, but it served as an excellent groundwork for Christian teaching. Confucian and Buddhist ideas in many cases are so rooted in the minds of the early converts to Christianity that even to-day their Christianity is distinctly coloured by the teaching of these alien creeds. In the formation of character the impression produced by early influences lasts to the end of life. In doctrinal views the moral notions with which a man starts investigating Christianity affect the conclusions which he reaches. The Christianity that will become permanent here will certainly be strongly tinged with Japanese native thought, just as Greek and Roman Christianity embodied some of the distinctive mental characteristics of the two nations. Yet there is certainly a danger of allowing this to go too far. We must avoid the error of altering the teaching of Christ and his apostles so as to make it suit our national proclivities and weaknesses.

The London Correspondent of the Yoroku Chōhō has of late been discussing the effect of European education on religious belief in the Eastern world. He thinks that Europeans are acting inconsistently in trying to spread Christianity in the Eastern world while they are endeavouring to promote Western education; as the latter is bound to undermine the former sooner or later. Of course Christianity is not the only religion that suffers from the spread of education, says this writer. Brahmanism, Buddhism and Mohammedanism are equally injured by it. Lord Cromer has told the world that Western education is destroying the Mussulman faith of the Egyptians. Japanese Buddhist teachers make the same complaint. Believers in a supernatural creed of their own are not likely to exchange it for one preached by foreigners in the face of the teaching of modern scientists and philosophers, says the Yoroku Chōhō correspondent. But just as in Europe and America a great many people cling to old beliefs, old customs and old traditions, despite the progress of knowledge, so will it ever be in the Eastern world. The notion that Europeans are doing harm by spreading Western education in the Oriental world this correspondent pronounces to be erroneous. Let the consequences be what they may, it is the duty of civilised people to spread knowledge.

A recent number of the Kirisutokyo Sekai (Congregational) announces that among the 30 Churches which were dependent on Mission funds three years ago the majority have already begun to support themselves and that there is little doubt that before very long every church connected with the Kumiakyōkai will be self-supporting and independent. This is regarded as a great achievement on the part of the Congregationalists.

"What are the men of this generation longing for?" is a question to which the Kirisutokyo Sekai replies somewhat as follows:—There are signs of unrest and dissatisfaction everywhere. The money-makers are not satisfied when they have amassed wealth. The ambitious find that titles and honours fail to bring contentment of mind. The seekers for power live to learn how many are the worries that it brings to those who wield it. People who think at all deeply are in search of some great object that shall make life worth living, some grand ideal whose realization shall demand the outputting of all the strength possessed, the devotion of a man's whole soul. It cannot be said that the majority find what their hearts yearn for. They drift along aimlessly from year to year. They dwell on the darker side of life, on all its drawbacks privations and miseries till death gets to be longed for. Christianity alone, says the writer we are quoting, can supply what such people need.

Members of the Kumi Kyōkai are this month engaged in carrying on a number of evangelistic services in Hokkaido, at Otaru, Sapporo and other places.

The Kirisutokyo Sekai of Aug. 27th gives an account of the Baptist Gospel ship the Fukui Maru and the evangelistic work which has been carried on by means of it among the islands of the Seto-nai-kai and in villages and towns lying on the coast of Hyōgo-ken and elsewhere. This vessel began its voyages some nine years ago. When it is remembered that the Japanese Mediterranean Sea has in it some 300 small islands, it will be seen that the gentleman who some years ago subscribed 20,000 yen towards the purchase of a mission ship for carrying evangelists to the islands conferred an immense boon on the ignorant fishermen who pass their lives in these isolated spots. The Fukui Maru is a small sailing vessel of about 90 tons, with a crew consisting of 5 Japanese under a foreign captain, whose wife lives on board. The monthly cost of running the vessel is put at 300 yen only. By its means tracts have been distributed, Magic Lantern lectures given and Bibles sold in places that have never been visited by Christian evangelists before.

In the Keiōjiku Gakukō, No. 133, we find a rather amusing report of a speech made by Mr. G. Mukō, one of the Christian pupils of the Rev. W. Spinner, entitled "The Worship of Posterity." The homage paid to parents and ancestors has gone to a ridiculous length in this country, says Mr. Mukō. It is taken for granted that children exist for the sake of their parents. Hence when a parent is hopelessly in debt a girl is taught that filial piety requires her to sell herself for the sake of paying off the debt. Instead of saying that children exist for the sake of parents, I will go as far as to assert that parents exist for the sake of begetting children, observes Mr. Mukō. It is the children that are important, for without them mankind would die out. The true way of looking at things is to regard offspring as more important to the world than the man and woman that produce it. (Oya no tame ni kodomo wa umareru no de wa nai. Hontō wo itta naraba oya wa kodomo no tame ni kila mono, kodomo wa uman ga tame ni oya ga dele kuru.) The world is ever progressing, and this progress depends on the preparation that each generation of men makes for the one that follows it. We are living for the future and not for the past. It is for the good of posterity that we must make great sacrifices. Veneration for the golden future is superior to veneration for the hoary past. There is more need in this country of insisting on the duty of parents to their children than of children to their parents. I do not mean to say that parents should be slighted or neglected, but neither should their feelings, wishes and comforts be allowed to become the one dominating factor in the lives of sons or daughters. Selfishness in parent or child is to be condemned. But as to the relative importance of two classes of human beings, those who are entering life and those who are rapidly going out of it, there can be no two opinions. There is much to be said for the worship of posterity, concludes Mr. Mukō.

In the To-A no Hikari Dr. Inoue Tetsujirō points out that there is to-day a fierce battle going on between States and individuals. Individual interests and State interests ought to correspond, but in many cases they do not do so. One or the other has to give way. The notion that in this country individual development has not been encouraged Dr. Inoue does not think is supported by facts. The Confucian philosophy lays great stress on the development of character. When the late Mr. Fukuzawa preached self-respect and independence he was only reiterating what Mencius had taught before him. What is most desirable, says Dr. Inoue, is that all States should allow plenty of scope for the development of individual character. It can hardly be affirmed that this has been done in this country in past ages.

In an article entitled "The Mission of Christianity to-day" published in the August Shinjin (New Man) Mr. K. Koyama expresses the opinion that the chief function which the Christian religion has to fill in this country to-day is to teach morality. Japan is passing through an age of transition. The old order of things has gone and no new order has taken its place. Men's minds are greatly confused by the many new ideas that have been introduced from the West. Liberty of thought, though so desirable in itself, has led to all manner of abuses and not a few people have lost their moral bearings altogether. In many cases the notions derived from the West have not been properly understood and have turned out a hindrance to high moral culture, instead of being a help. To repair the injured moral compass and make it point true is the task that all true Christians must set themselves to perform, says Mr. Koyama.

BASEBALL.

The first game between the Washington University and Keio was played on Saturday afternoon at 2 p.m. on the Waseda grounds in beautiful weather. A large crowd, which included many foreigners from Yokohama, gathered to witness the game. Keio opened with Sasaki at the bat, Washington's battery being composed of the Brown brothers. Sasaki made first and Takahama hitting towards first base advanced Sasaki to third. Kanki with a fly to centre brought Sasaki home, and advanced Takahama to third, who was put out attempting to steal home. Fukuda was struck out. Tetses, first man up for Washington met with the same fate. Hoover got 1st on an error of 2nd base. Tetses got his base on balls. Grinn with a two-base hit to left field brought Hoover home. Tetses and Meagher were then put out. The second and third innings passed with no alteration to the score. In the fourth Takahama got base on balls; Kanki got first on his hit to S.S. Takahama made third, but was put out by a ball from the catcher. With Fukuda at the bat Kanki reached 2nd. Fukuda got first on a hit to right field, advancing Kanki to third, who got home on Reser's bad throw. Koyama and Fukuda were put out. Washington then played very carefully to recover what they had lost, but were well kept down by the excellent fielding of Keio. The game closed with 2 to 1 in favour of Keio.

TRAGEDIES.

A widow, living in Kyobashi, Tokyo, committed suicide on Sept. 25th by drinking a quantity of sulphuric acid. She had been worried over her only daughter who had eloped with a man in March this year, and at times she seemed to be suffering from brain complaint.

A Chiba telegram states that a woman murdered her only child by strangling it with a towel and subsequently committed suicide by hanging herself. The cause is said to have been poverty and family troubles. On Sept. 24th, the dead body of a young woman was found on a fishing boat which came drifting to Anegasaki point, in the Ichihara district.

A young man, living in the district of Aso, Tochigi prefecture, laid himself on the railway near the Sano Station, on the morning of Sept. 23th, where a train ran over and crushed him to death. The cause is reported to have been shitaru or refusal of marriage.

An omnibus was overturned on Sept. 23rd, while running down a steep-road in East Chikuma, Nagano prefecture, with the result that two of the passengers were killed and two severely injured.

YOKOHAMA.

About 5 a.m. on Sept. 24th an armed man broke into the house of a wealthy farmer, living at Katsura, not far from Negishi, and attacked the farmer's wife with a sword for crying out dorobo! (thief) while he was trying to open a cabinet. The intruder injured the woman severely and then absconded. Later the occupants found that a bag containing yen 103 had been stolen.

An employee of the Taura Post Office absconded on Sept. 25th with a letter containing yen 280 addressed to the Yokosuka Post Office, and some thirty letters containing postal orders. He is still at large.

YOKOHAMA SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY.

An extraordinary general meeting of members of the Yokohama Subscription Library was held on Monday at the Van Schaick Hall. There was a small attendance. M. C. Allen presided. The question before the meeting was deciding whether the Library should be closed or efforts should be made to keep it going.

The CHAIRMAN mentioned several projects that had been brought forward. The deficit was now yen 400 but this included payments for magazines to the end of December and for all new books to the early part of the year.

It was stated that various members were willing to contribute to a reduction in the subscription list by sending in magazines after they had used them. Also it was stated by Mr. McBeth, the Hon. Treas., that there was good prospect of wiping off the debt of yen 400 now hampering the Library. It was also stated that the next year's expenses had been more than guaranteed.

It was pointed out in reply to questions that application with regard to amalgamation had already been made to the Literary Society and that the Committee of the latter had deferred the question so that the whole matter would come up at the annual meeting of the Literary Society.

Eventually, after considerable discussion it was decided, on the motion of Mr. McChesney, seconded by Mr. Haskell, that the Library should continue its existence, and that a special committee be appointed to interview if possible every member with the view of re arranging subscriptions in order to an increase; and that a ways and means committee be appointed to attend to the financing for the next year.

On the motion of Mr. McChesney it was decided that the special committee should consist of five and should be nominated by the President. This concluded the proceedings.

At this critical time, fire broke out in Torii-zaka, with the result that five houses were burned down, three persons were killed and one was severely injured. A landslide occurred in Shim-machi, Akasaka, through which three houses were destroyed, crushing one old woman and five infants to death, and injuring five. ## THE REAL FUNCTION OF THE BATTLESHIP-CRUISER.

The Indomitable, says Mr. Stead, is one of a set of four swift battleship-cruisers, only one degree less important than the eight Dreadnoughts of which they form the indispensable complement.

The Indomitable and the Dreadnought are the greyhound and the bulldog of true Nelson breed. They are the latest and at present the supreme types of the swift and strong. But the swift is not weak, nor is the strong slow. The Dreadnought, with her 20 knots average, could outpace most of the ocean greyhounds of the world, and the Indomitable, with her 17,250 tons displacement and her armament of eight 12-in. guns, can hold as hard and at as long a range as the Dreadnought herself.

The first duty of the Indomitable and her sister-ships is to prevent the escape of the enemy. The assumption upon which they have been built is that which underlies every action of the Admiralty. They are more than the mere eyes and ears of the fleet. They are scouts capable of making a stout fight for themselves.

It is difficult to say whether the Dreadnought or the Indomitable is the most effective instrument of naval war. Who can estimate the comparative value of speed and endurance, or check off so many inches thickness of armour belt against so many knots of speed? But there is much more that appeals to the imagination and the love of adventure in the Indomitable than there is in the Dreadnought.

THIRTEEN competitors started from the Police Pier, Kowloon, to compete for prizes presented by the China Mail by swimming across to the Praya Wall at Hongkong on Sept. 21st. ## YACHTING.

INTERPORT MATCH.

The annual interport yachting match between crews representing the Kobe Sailing Club and the Mosquito Yacht Club took place on Saturday. As Yokohama won both races, and so was best of three, the race fixed for Sunday was unnecessary.

Mr. W. W. Campbell and Mr. C. H. Abbey were for Kobe and Mr. A. E. Cooper and Mr. N. B. Morton for Yokohama. The weather on Saturday forenoon, when the crews turned up before ten o'clock, was fine with a good northerly breeze that promised better for Edna than Pele—the former of which had been drawn by Yokohama and the latter by Kobe.

The first race was from between two mark boats outside the southern breakwater, around the Mandarin Bluff Markboat, then to Tachibana, and Light buoy, again around the Mandarin Bluff mark, and finish across the starting-line.

They got away very level, Pele in the windward berth. Reaching to the Mandarin Bluff Mark, Edna took a slight lead, but Pele was able to squeeze around the mark a clear length ahead. On the windward work to Tachibana, Pele began to draw out in front but Edna held the better wind and got round about half a minute ahead. Reaching to the Lightship Edna added to her lead, and she crossed the line 58 seconds ahead of Pele. The first race therefore fell to Yokohama.

Boats were changed for the afternoon race and again the odds seemed to be in favour of Yokohama, the wind having become lighter and thus in Pele's favour. The course was the same as the morning with a turn round the Quarantine Ship. The wind had gone out to a little to the east.

They had another good start, Kobe in Edna again securing the weather berth but failing to hold her rival. Pele kept edging away and a difference of 15 seconds separated the boats at the Mandarin Bluff Mark. Still improving her position, Pele was about 30 seconds ahead at the Tachibana mark. On the reach to the Lightship Edna came along and rounded the mark 17 seconds ahead, but Pele picked her up on the run to the Mandarin mark and rounded 9 seconds ahead. At the Quarantine ship Pele had increased her lead and rounded the mark a minute and 35 seconds ahead. On the run home Edna gained somewhat but Pele crossed the finishing line victor by one minute and twenty-two seconds. Yokohama, having won the match, retains the cup.

The crews and their friends dined together on Saturday evening in the Yokohama Yacht Club.

YOKOHAMA YACHT CLUB.

The Yokohama Yacht Club had a race for a Club prize for all boats on the Club register except Larks, over the Widow Buoy course.

Seven boats started—Mary (scratch), Winsome and Valkyrien (23 minutes), Nanivwa and Albatross (30 minutes), Elsa (29 minutes), and Asagao (36 minutes). Mary, of course, sailed away by herself but although she finished first Nanivwa with her allowance of 30 minutes, came within 17 minutes of her. Winsome being third.

Nanivwa would thus win the prize, but it is understood that a protest has been laid against her for fouling at the start. If the protest is sustained, the prize will go Winsome.

The Larks had a race round Tachibana, Mandarin Bluff, Lightship, Southern Breakwater Markboat, and home.

No. 12 (Mr. Poole) finished first, No. 11 (Mr. Mason) being second, and No. 2 (Mr. Eagling) third, the latter, with an allowance of nine minutes, taking the prize—a handsome silver cup presented by Mr. Stone.

DAILY MARKET REVIEW.

The review of the Tokyo Stock Market sent us by Mr. H. Maxwell, Share and Stock Broker, is to the following effect:

Tokyo, September 26.

In response to the fine weather, the market started very firm this morning and all stocks rapidly gained what has been lost yesterday—the last day of depression and of weakness. It will be no surprise, if the market develops a new strength, as to-day's trading entirely put a new aspect on the market. The Tokyo Stock Exchange shares shot up 3½ points for November at 120. Oriental Sugars are quoted at 28.70; Kanegafuchis at 83.95; Huden Petroleum at 124; and Tokyo Gas 81.80.

On the "Jiki" market, Tokyo Stock Exchange new shares moved up to 63.05, the highest yet reached.

Tokyo, September 28.

The market opened very strong this morning, almost all stocks going up without cessation. Now that the weather is settled, every body believes that a bumper harvest is at hand, and the bulls, who have been anticipating this sort of affairs, are very much elated. For the last few days, the confirmed bears, who saw nothing good in the situation, had to close out at heavy losses. These operations alone were responsible for the phenomenal rise, and on the top of this the bulls launched heavy purchasing orders on the market, practically routing the crest-fallen bears. It is, however, difficult to tell whether the market will continue on the present aggressive onward path, or it will come to a halt, before it takes another plunge forward. On the whole, it is obvious that we are facing a big market. Now we can say safely that it is the weather that is keeping dancing attendance on the market, not the market as before. Besides, the market has passed the stage when climatic influences could control it.

To-morrow being settling day, there will be no market except for "Jiki" trading. This morning 64.50 was recorded for "Token" (stock exchange new shares).

THE PROTECTION OF BIRDS.

A correspondent says:—"The Japanese Government in largely extending the provisions of the law for the protection of birds is taking a step in the right direction but it is probably as much of a farce as the game laws. The shooting season opens only on Oct. 15, but snipe have been in the market for weeks. I understand that one local sportsman has addressed a letter to Baron Sufu signed by about 50 foreign shooting men and lovers of fair play, pointing out to the Governor that, on Sept. 21, 3 Japanese hunters were met in the Hakone Hills, each openly carrying a gun and having in their possession 3 young pheasants, gun shot. This happened on Sept. 21st and the season for pheasants opens on Nov. 1st. Comment is superfluous! What is the use of passing new laws unless they are strictly enforced?"

Can nothing be done to put a stop to these absolutely unsportsmanlike proceedings? They recur every year, are yearly pointed out to the proper authorities and yet nothing is done. Japan has beautiful scenery, but a dead calm reigns in it, as every living bird or animal is ruthlessly slaughtered. From many years' experience in this country I am sure that the new law regarding the protection of birds will have no effect at all. It is a dead letter.

TIENTSIN.

With regard to the commercial crisis in Tientsin, a correspondent sends the following interesting letter to the Peking and Tientsin Times:—

The depressed condition of affairs obtaining here, probably stagnation is a better word, is only partially explained by the four reasons given by your native correspondent. One must look further and deeper into the subject to find the malignant sore which has affected the whole of our little mercantile world, and as an old China hand I trust you will give space to the following remarks in which I believe the true causes are given.

- 1.—A series of indifferent harvests, complicated by floods in some districts, famines in others, and followed by famines in two of the flooded districts (Hunan and Kiangsi)
- 2.—Overtrading.
- 3.—Steady drain of money by Boxer Indemnity payments.
- 4.—The annual deficit or heavy debit balance caused by the inequality of Exports and Imports.
- 5.—The general dullness (or stagnation) of trade all the world over, due to overmanufacturing and overtrading, intensified by the American financial collapse of last Autumn.
- 6.—The dishonesty of the Chinese dealers in Tientsin

The truth may as well be written and published openly; no good can come from attempting to hide or disguise it longer. The dream of Chinese honesty has vanished and in place we have the bare naked fact of dishonesty.

Foreigners are not free from blame in this matter; the struggle to "do business" has resulted in the foreign merchants giving unlimited credit to impecunious, unknown adventurers, who calling themselves "dealers," opened depôts and then called themselves merchants.

Tientsin only developed into a direct importing centre after the Japan-China war. At that time the Native Banks, after vainly striving to re-establish the old order of things which existed before the war, took definite action and commenced to restrict credit up to the point of almost abolishing it; then the native dealers, finding eager firms ready at hand to meet them in anyway, began buying either from stock or goods to arrive and—this way perdition lay.

When the goods arrived they were delivered on credit (to men whom the native banks had withdrawn their credits from or firms that they refused to assist.) As time went on the goods out on credit increased in volume, like a rolling snowball; unlimited credit was given, "to keep the ball rolling" and when the breath of life ceased, what would you? Trade stopped. The foreign banks called halt! the foreign merchant called pay, pay, pay! the native dealers, sitting calm and serene said; we cannot—and so we are 'between the devil and the deep sea.'

It is an irrefutable fact that the major portion of the goods given on credit to the native dealers has been sold at prices varying from cost to (commonly) twenty-five per cent. below, and how are these "originally" impecunious men to pay the merchants for their goods? They have lived and rioted these past years on the proceeds of the goods on credit! Now the day of reckoning has come! Well?

It will take months to get prices up to the actual value of the goods, meanwhile there is nothing to be done but wait patiently, if our creditors, the banks and the Courts, will give us grace.

We have reached the limit, and only one safe course is open in the future, cash on delivery, and forget that anyone has ever been so unwise as to say a Chinaman's word is as good as another man's bond—forget it; I say.

Tientsin exports call for no comment; they speak for themselves in empty hongs.

AUTOMATIC WRITING.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Some days ago I noticed an interesting communication in the Mail from a correspondent who quoted from the notable article of Sir Oliver Lodge entitled Psychical Research which appears in the Aug. number of Harper's Magazine.

Since reading the communication above referred to I have been tempted to write you a few lines on the subject of what is called "Automatic writing," which subject receives mention in Sir Oliver Lodge's article.

Some time before leaving England for Japan, I made the acquaintance of a playwright of some distinction, a gentleman not unknown also I think to the Royal Society, and a man who has had some personal experience of psychological phenomena; I refrain, however, from mentioning his name.

"Automatic writing" is executed by his hand,

Curiously enough the writing done in this way—at any rate I do not know whether its form ever changes—has the appearance of a daintily formed tiny feminine "hand." I think he once said that before he commences work in the morning, he allows his hand to execute this "automatic writing and looks to see what there is for him!"

Once his hand wrote to the effect that something he anticipated concerning a certain piece of dramatic work was not coming off. He threw his pencil down in disgust, he said, as he sometimes did when the writing did not always chime in with his own wishes, and could think of no reason why that which he was anticipating should fail to take place, under the circumstances. However, he received later corroboration of the writing executed in the way described, and the explanation from Mr. Frank Curzon, which was that in consequence of a slump in theatrical matters consequent upon Queen Victoria's death—quite a satisfactory explanation. Another time he had a somewhat strange experience. As nearly as I can remember, I think he said he had been commissioned to write a Napoleonic play and was just about to commence it when he felt a heavy pressure of a hand on his forehead. I wish I had some of his experiences by me in writing to quote for you. I have none; perhaps at some future date I may get some. By the way, it is interesting to note that Sardou's hand has executed "automatic drawing." I should like to add that I seriously question the wisdom of unexperienced people endeavouring blindly to develop that "automatic writing." Psychological dabbling can result in highly deplorable results in some cases. Trusting the above may not be without interest.

Faithfully, CHILLINGHAM DUNN.

A DISGRACEFUL NUISANCE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I should be extremely obliged if you would kindly allow me space in your paper to protest against the disgraceful noise and carrying on that still continues, sometimes the whole night, in several of the Grog shops in the Chinese quarter of the settlement, generally known as Hoinmura Road. The worst offenders in this respect are the so called hotels or bars nearest the Maeta Jashi, which although called by pleasing names, are nothing less than an inferno during the night, when the various women of these bars entertain their guests. A person cannot pass by the restaurants or an evening without being accosted by these women, and called to come inside. Another fact I wish to point out is that a proprietor of a respectable hotel has had visitors leave his hotel, and others will not reside with him because of the unearthly noises and rows which go on in these dens, which unluckily happen to be near his hotel. I am not the only complainer, for this is not the first letter that has been written to the press on these public nuisances and I think it high time some movement was taken by the police in this matter, especially as the American Fleet will soon arrive and it would not be right if bluejackets were allowed to be lured into these holes, as many evils are practised by these unprincipled women. I should imagine the entertainment committee to the Fleet would take steps in this matter. Enclosing my card, I remain, Sir,

Yours faithfully, COMPLAINER.
Yokohama, September, 25th 1908.

POSTAL INQUIRY OFFICE.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I have the pleasure to inform you that, for the convenience of the public who may be desirous of making inquiries as to the Postal Service, an Inquiry Office has been established at this office. (Foreign Mail Department), and is prepared to supply all needful information with regard to the Post, Telegraph and Telephone, as well as other relative business. I am in hope that this system will especially meet the wants of tourists who are not acquainted with the details of these arrangements, and at the same time may obviate unnecessary misunderstandings which sometimes happen at the office windows through misinterpretation of the Official Regulations.

By direction of the Director of Posts,
Yours respectfully,

V. YANAGIYA,
Superintendent of Foreign Mails.
Imperial Post Office, Yokohama,
Yokohama, September 30th, 1908.

WHEN FINED for allowing his dog to be at large without an inscribed collar, John Race, of East Ham, said, "I was almost struck dumb when I got the summons; which came to me like an earthquake." To anyone who has seen an earthquake spring at its prey, says the Globe, the simile will be very impressive.

THE NATIONAL DEBT REDEMPTION FUND.

PROCEEDINGS AGAINST YANG KITAIK.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 25.

The trial was resumed at 10 a.m. The Judge told the accused that an affidavit made by Mr. H. Collbran before the United States Consul-General concerning the investment of money belonging to the Redemption Fund in mining shares and one or two other points has been received the previous day. The Judge then gave an oral translation of the substance of the document. The affidavit was as follows:—

AFFIDAVIT.

"Henry Collbran, being first duly sworn deposes: That he is the President of the Seoul Mining Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of Connecticut, U. S. A., and doing business in Korea: That during the month of January, 1908, one E. T. Bethell of Seoul approached him, the said Collbran, in relation to the investment of a portion of the Korean National Debt Redemption Fund, then at the disposal of the said Bethell: That after the discussion of the merits of several enterprises of possible interest to the said Bethell in the investment of the said Fund, the said Bethell on or about the 16th day of said January, offered to purchase, for and on behalf of the Trustees of said Fund, one hundred and twenty-five shares of the capital stock of the said Seoul Mining Company and to pay therefor the sum of twenty-five thousand yen (yen 25,000), which offer was accepted by this affiant for and on behalf of the said Seoul Mining Company: That thereupon on the 17th day of said January a receipt for twenty-five thousand yen (yen 25,000) was drawn by the Collbran-Bostwick Development Company and signed by N. E. Collbran and J. F. Smith and the said subscription of one hundred and twenty-five shares was then and there entered in the subscription book of the said Seoul Mining Company, and the said receipt for twenty-five thousand yen (yen 25,000) was given by the said Collbran-Bostwick Development Company to this affiant to hold and deliver to the said Bethell upon the cash payment of this said twenty-five thousand yen (yen 25,000): That the said receipt is hereto attached and initialed by this affiant marked 'Exhibit A': That later and on the third day of February, 1908, the said Bethell paid over to this affiant for and on behalf of the said Seoul Mining Company the sum of twenty-five thousand yen (yen 25,000) as full payment for the subscription of the said one hundred and twenty-five shares of the said Seoul Mining Company, and thereupon the said receipt, dated as aforesaid, on the 16th day of January, 1908, was delivered by this affiant to the said E. T. Bethell. Affiant further says that the said sum of twenty-five thousand yen (yen 25,000) was the only sum ever received by this affiant or by the Seoul Mining Company or by any one for or on behalf of the said Seoul Mining Company for shares or any other account of whatsoever. Affiant further says that the total amount of deposits received by the Collbran-Bostwick Development Company to the credit of the Headquarters National Debt Redemption Fund was forty-two thousand nine hundred and seventy-eight yen and sixty-seven sen (yen 42,978.67), and that but one cheque for thirty thousand yen (yen 30,000) has ever been drawn and presented for payment out of the said sum and that there remains at the present time to the credit of the said Fund in the said Collbran-Bostwick Development Company's possession the sum of twelve thousand nine hundred and seventy-eight yen and sixty-seven sen. Further affiant saith not.

EXHIBIT A.

"yen 25,000.
"We hereby acknowledge receipt of the sum of Japanese yen twenty-five thousand only (yen 25,000) from the Trustees of the Korean National Debt Redemption Fund, for which amount we agree to deliver to the above mentioned Trustees one hundred and twenty-five (125) fully paid-up shares (U. S. $100 each) of the said Seoul Mining Company, Hartford, Conn., U.S.A., so soon as the shares are received from America.

"THE COLLBRAN-BOSTWICK "DEVELOPMENT COMPANY.

"Approved,
"H. E. COLLBRAN,
"Manager.
"per J. F. SMITH,
"Auditor."

Judge: Had the accused any statement to make concerning the above affidavit.

Accused: He had nothing to say about it, as he knew nothing whatever about the purchase of the mining shares. As for the transfer of money to Holme, Ringer & Co., all that he knew was that it had been effected on account of the good interest thereby secured.

The Judge asked the Procurator if he had any witness to be called, but the latter replied that he had none.

The Judge next asked the counsel for the defence if they had any statement of fact or any fresh evidence to offer.

Before counsel could reply, the accused stood up and begged leave to make a statement. The Judge, in granting permission, cautioned the accused for the present to confine himself to facts and abstain from expression of views. The accused then stated that the Procurator, in opening the case, had charged him with misappropriating as much as 140,000 yen; but that facts since elicited disproved the charge; that he knew of the transfer of 30,000 yen to Holme, Ringer & Co. but knew nothing of the purchase of shares; that mention had been made of a sum of 70,000 yen, but the amount received at his newspaper office to the account of the Redemption Fund had been a little over 60,000 yen as advertised.

Counsel Yi: As for the 61,000 yen received at the newspaper office, it had been clearly shown by evidence how it had been disposed of. The Procurator had stated that the accused had misappropriated 140,000 yen, but there had been no evidence to prove it.—

Judge: The counsel, as a lawyer, ought to know that it was not permissible at this stage of proceedings for him to express opinions. Had he any new facts to offer?

Counsel Yi: No new facts.

Judge: Had Mr. Marnham any new fact to submit?

Mr. Marnham: No.

Judge: The evidence of Mr. McKenzie, the Manager of Holme, Ringer & Co., was still lacking. But the Court considered his evidence was not now necessary. So the Court would consider the examination of evidence as concluded, and call upon the Procurator to proceed with his charge.

The Procurator said he must express his satisfaction at the care and thoroughness with which the Court had conducted the examination of the evidence. The accusation had been that Yang Kitaik had fraudulently appropriated money received both at his newspaper office and at the Central Society to the account of the National Debt Redemption Fund. But as the result of the evidence produced during the trial, especially the evidence given by Mr. E. T. Bethell, it had been clearly established that, although the accused occupied a position of some importance in the management of the business of his newspaper, he possessed no authority in regard to the Redemption Fund collected by his office, Mr. E. T. Bethell being solely responsible for the disposal of the money in question. Moreover, according to Mr. E. T. Bethell's evidence, the accused, although he was auditor to the Central Society, had not been consulted either concerning the purchase of the mining shares or the lending of money to M. Martin. All this had been made clear by Mr. Bethell's statements. There was thus no evidence to show that Yang Ki-taik had fraudulently misappropriated any money. As for the question whether the investment in shares and loans of money collected for the ostensible object of paying off the national debt of Korea was proper or right, there was no occasion for the Procurator to go into it at all now that it had become clear that the accused had no responsibility whatever for those transactions. It therefore, only remained for the Procurator to thank the Court for the painstaking manner in which the case had been tried, and request that the accused be acquitted and released.

Judge: Had the accused been able to follow the Procurator's statement? Had he any remarks to make?

Accused: Had no remark to make, as the Procurator had asked for his acquittal, but he wished leave to say that the statement originally made by the Procurator that the accused had misappropriated a sum of 140,000 yen having been published by all the papers, he felt his position would be awkward even if he were acquitted. He wished to know who it was that had originally brought such slanderous accusations against him.

Counsel: Had no remark to make: they could only subscribe themselves to the statement just made by the Procurator.

Mr. Marnham: No remarks.
The Judge said that the decision of the Court would be announced on the 29th inst.

The Court then rose at 11 a.m.

TELEGRAMS.

(REUTER'S SERVICE.)

TURKEY AND BULGARIA.

London, September 24.
Fresh friction has arisen between Turkey and Bulgaria owing to the fact that the latter is assuming control over the Rumelian section of the Oriental railway. A Turkish note demanding withdrawal of the staff was keenly resented in Bulgaria, where mass meetings urge the government to retain the line at all costs.

GERMANY REPLIES.

The German reply to the Franco-Spanish note of Sept. 15th is of the most moderate tone, accepting the proposals in general. Confidence is now expressed in Paris that an international understanding will be reached with reference to the repayment of the Franco-Spanish military expenses and compensation for the murders committed. Germany trusts France and Spain will consider the financial position in Morocco as one in which all Powers are interested.

AUSTRO-BULGARIAN RELATIONS.

Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria has been warmly welcomed by the Emperor Francis Joseph at Buda-pesth. The latter, toasting Prince Ferdinand at a banquet, dwelt on the excellence of the Austro-Bulgarian relations and wished the young country every prosperity. Its capacity for progress was one of the remarkable qualities of its people.

MR. YAMAZA.

London, September 25.
Mr. Yamaza, the new Japanese Chargé d'Affaires in London, interviewed by Reuter, said that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance was a very real and powerful factor in Japanese national life.

He thought he was right in saying that the question of British trade-marks in Japan is practically settled. He knew no point on which Japan had departed from the policy of the open door in Manchuria, and Japan's intention was to maintain equal opportunity in all parts of China.

THE GERMAN NOTE.

The French press recognise the conciliatory tone of the German note, giving reasons for the hope that agreement will be possible on points of detail.

BULGARIA AND THE PORTE.

London, September 25.
Bulgaria has informed the Porte that her assumption of control of the Roumelian section of the Oriental Railway is a question to be settled solely between herself and the railway company.

Later.

M. Mintchavitch, the Bulgarian Agent in London, interviewed, said he anticipated his Government would purchase the Oriental Railway from the company, or arrange with the latter for control. The question was one of Bulgaria's national safety, and she could not tolerate the line traversing a country controlled from Constantinople; but there was no idea of forcing the matter to war. There has been no official intimation of Bulgaria's intention to declare her independence, but his own opinion was that the time for this had arrived, and that it would merely regularise the situation actually existing.

THE PHILIPPINES.

A terrific typhoon has swept the central Philippines, causing great loss of life. There are no details, owing to the interruption in the telegraph service.

THE CARNEGIE HERO FUND.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has made a gift of $1,250,000, yielding £12,500 annually, for the formation of a hero fund for the purpose of assisting these following peaceful vocations in the United Kingdom who have been injured in any heroic effort to save human life, and the widows and children of those who have lost their own lives in this way. The King has approved of the scheme.

DIPLOMATIC

The King has received at Balmoral in farewell audience Colonel Goro Shiba, the Japanese Military Attaché, and invested him with the insignia of a Knight of the Victorian Order.

THE AUSTRALIAN SCHEME.

The Admiralty, in reply to Mr. Deakin, Premier of the Commonwealth, agrees to the Commonwealth providing and maintaining a local flotilla of six destroyers, nine submarine boats and two depot ships at a cost of £1,250,000, with 1204 officers and men, who will be embodied in the Imperial Navy but controlled by the Commonwealth when in Australian waters. The Sydney dockyard as formerly will be reserved for Imperial naval purposes.

BRITISH POLITICS.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

The first old age pension forms were issued on Thursday, when there was a steady procession of applicants at the post-offices. Fifty thousand were issued in London.

THE PORTE ON BULGARIA'S ACTION.

The Porte, in a note to the Powers, says that Bulgaria's occupation of the Oriental Railway was a violation of Turkey's rights. Intervention is requested.

There is every indication that Bulgaria is determined to keep the disputed railway and ignore Turkish protests.

THE HEARST BOMB-SHELL.

Hearst's accusations of the 22nd inst. have produced a regular campaign of mutual recrimination between party leaders, wherein Roosevelt is vigorously participating. Several Republican and Democratic office-bearers have already resigned, owing to connections with the Standard Oil and other trusts.

THE TURCO-BULGARIAN CRISIS.

London, September 29.
The German and Austrian representatives in Sofia have been instructed formally to protest against Bulgaria's occupation of the railway, which is foreign property, and to demand the restoration of the status quo. Great Britain has informed Bulgaria that she considers the retention of the railway unjust. #### THE FAKUMEN QUESTION.

The Times, in a special article on the Fakumen railway question, says a feeling exists that claims arising out of the Japanese position along the Manchurian Railway ought to be defined within precise local limits, and ought not to be extended west of the Liao river. Japan by formally recognising this and acting thereon might avert discussion on some large general questions which it can hardly serve her interest to raise.

THE CASABLANCA AFFAIR.

M. Pichon, French Foreign Minister, has discussed the Casablanca incident with the German Chargé d'Affaires in the most conciliatory manner. General Damade in his official report says he possesses the original consul's order to the German secretary to secure the embarkation of six of the deserters, of whom three were non-Germans. He alleges that a consular employé struck the first blow, the secretary himself following it up.

A few days ago a strike broke out on the Oriental Railway, which traverses both countries. The Bulgarian railway troops manned the lines. The Turkish Minister commanded the strikers to return to work, but the Bulgarian troops still occupied the section within the principality, in spite of an official demand by Turkey for evacuation. #### THE TIMES ON FAR-EASTERN QUESTIONS.

London, September 30.
The Times, in an article dealing with Far Eastern questions, fails to discover any sign of that fundamental revolution in administrative measures which is imperative if China wishes to join the Great Powers. The Times declares that better finance is unquestionably essential to the solution of international problems. Referring to the Fakumen Railway question, The Times regrets that Japan has adopted an attitude calculated to challenge unfavourable criticism. It would be a great mistake if Japan, now that the Manchurian trouble is over, should feel inclined to minimize the significance of that project.

CHOLERA IN RUSSIA.

St. Petersburg.—Cholera is declining. There were 222 new cases and 98 deaths on Tuesday.

THE BALKAN AFFAIR.

The Press are despondent regarding the situation in the Balkans though they understand that the government is exerting a moderating pressure against Bulgaria.

PERSIA.

Tabriz.—For nearly five months the city has defied the Shah. The approaching of a severe winter, and the emptiness of the treasury will cause dispersal among the force of the bandits gathered in the Shah's name, outside the town. Their latest exploit was the robbing and illusing a French officer who was travelling in the country.

BULGARIA.

London, October 1.

Signs of uneasiness are growing about the possibility of Bulgaria declaring her independence. It is believed that she will shortly mobilise largely for military manœuvres in East Rumelia.

(RECEIVED IN TOKYO.)

U.S. NAVAL COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Rear-Admiral Swinbourne has been appointed to the command-in-chief of the United States Pacific Squadron.

LORD NORTHCOTE.

Lord Northcote, Governor of Australia, left for Japan by the Kumano Maru on the 30th ultimo. His Excellency will spend three weeks in this country.

MANCHURIAN WHEAT.

The Director General of the Chinese Customs has informed the customs officials at Dairen that wheat produced in Manchuria may be exported for the present after paying duty.

(RECEIVED AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

FAR EASTERN FREIGHTS.

Chicago.—According to private information received from a certain quarter with reference to the rates of freight on Far Eastern goods, which rates were recently fixed by agreement between the Shipping Companies having lines on the Pacific, although the charges—as for example, 30 sen per 100 lbs. of antimony, 50 sen for bamboo poles, 1 dollar for bamboo blinds, $2.25 for silk, 60 sen for tea and so on—show, when added to the railway prices, more or less increase compared with the previous schedule, it can not be called a violent increase. The representatives of the S.S. and Railway Companies who are now in Chicago are all waiting for definite instructions from their head-offices, but as they have not received them yet, it appears that there may possibly be some changes still. One of those concerned at this end seems to have found more or less ground for thought in the steps taken by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. A leading official here says that the Canadian Pacific S.S. Company, which was not a party to the above agreement in the matter of either railway or steamship charges, is bent upon preserving the old through-rate as far as possible.

RUSSIAN FAR-EASTERN FISHERIES.

The following law has been promulgated by the Russian Government:—"We hereby promulgate the law passed by the National Assembly authorizing outlays for the maintenance of ships engaged in preserving the fisheries in the Far East."

(The ships number 4 and the outlays total 102,700 roubles yearly.)

(FROM THE "ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

THE POLITICAL SITUATION IN NEW YORK.

New York, September 23.

The Independent Democrats under the leadership of Mr. Hearst have decided to nominate a candidate for the Governorship of New York vis-a-vis the two great parties, Republicans and Democrats. While the success of Mr. Hearst's candidate is hopeless, an element of complication will thus be introduced into the competition. A section of the republican party opposes Mr. Hughes, the present Governor.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

San Francisco, September 22.

President Roosevelt has issued a statement confirming the existence of a secret understanding between Mr. Foraker, the Ohio Senator who had in public condemned the various trusts, and the Standard Oil Company. The President added that in consequence of the disclosure, some of the Republicans will oppose Mr. Taft, whose candidature Mr. Foraker was supporting. The disclosure of the Foraker intrigue affords a topic which provokes the severest comments. It is generally said that President Roosevelt's purpose in issuing the declaration is to prevent any difficulty arising for Mr. Taft in consequence of Mr. Foraker's conduct.

THE BATTLESHIP FLEET.

Owing to the prevalence of cholera at Manila, the American Fleet will probably abandon its proposed visit to that port. The Naval Department is considering the matter. It is said that the fleet will call at Manila, but communication with the land will not be allowed and the fleet will leave for Yokohama earlier than previously arranged. Consequently, the stay of the fleet at Yokohama will be prolonged.

MR. HARA.

New York, September 25.

Mr. K. Hara, formerly Minister for Home Affairs, will arrive in New York on Sept. 28th from Washington on his way to Europe.

DR. FENOLLOSA.

A telegram has been received in New York to the effect that Dr. E. F. Fenollosa, formerly a professor of the Imperial University, Tokyo, has died in London.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

President Roosevelt returned from Oyster Bay to Washington and subsequently issued a long declaration in which he stated that Mr. C. N. Haskell, Governor of Oklahoma, and Treasurer of the Democratic Committee, had had secret relations with the Standard Oil Company and received large bribes from the trust. Mr. Bryan replied that the charge against Mr. Haskell was groundless, and that there were several men in Oklahoma who bore that name. On September 23rd, the President convened a meeting of prominent members of his party in connexion with the telegram from Bryan. After investigation the President was convinced that Mr. Haskell, governor of Oklahoma, had been illicitly connected with the Standard Oil Company, and the same afternoon he sent a strongly worded telegram to Mr. Bryan to that effect. It is rumoured that Mr. Bryan will discontinue his political connexion with Mr. Haskell. There is much excitement over the political situation.

San Francisco, September 25.

On the evening of Sept. 25th, Senator Foraker issued a statement in connexion with the charges of Mr. Hearst and President Roosevelt. In it Mr. Foraker condemns the President and Mr. Taft severely, and declares that the Republican Party in general is corrupt.

Mr. Haskell, Governor of Oklahoma, is now on his way to Chicago where he will meet Mr. Bryan. He denies the charge brought against him by Mr. Hearst and President Roosevelt and declines to resign his post as Treasurer of the Democratic Party.

Mr. Hearst is making further attacks on Mr. Haskell, as well as on Mr. Hughes, Governor of New York.

The situation is thus becoming very complicated.

It is rumoured that President Roosevelt, apprehensive of the increasing influence of Mr. Bryan, has joined hands with Mr. Hearst to shatter the credit of the Democratic Party.

PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

New York, September 26.

In reply to a journalist, Mr. Bryan has said that he would not reply, at present, to the recent telegraphic note from President Roosevelt.

Mr. Haskell has resigned from his post as chief Treasurer of the Democratic Party as he was apparently unable to reply to the condemnation by Mr. Hearst and President Roosevelt.

The President is endeavouring to expel from his party those who are alleged to be connected with various trusts. On Sept. 25th, he struck the name of a member off the list.

THE "MIURA MARU."

Vladivostok, September 27.

The sailing vessel Miura Maru (belonging to R. Yoneda of Shimminato, Echigo province) which was recently seized by Russians on suspicion of having fished in Russian seas, was brought on Sept. 27th from Imperatur harbour to Vladivostok. In spite of the fact that the affair is not settled, the Russian authorities have chartered the vessel to a Russian Merchant.

NORTH SAGHALIEN.

The Russian Land Adjustment Bureau has decided to lease land free to immigrants in North Saghalien with a view of developing the island.

TYPHOON IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Hongkong, September 27.

A destructive typhoon has been experienced in the central Philippines. Several thousand persons were killed or injured, the details of which are not yet known.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN.

New York, September 27.

On Sept. 27th, Mr. Bryan sent to President Roosevelt a long reply to the latter's recent letter. Mr. Bryan said: "Abusing the rights of the Presidency, you are supporting, with every effort, the Republican party, to which you belong. No person is so unfaithful to the electors as you are, leading them by partisan devices. If I am appointed to the presidency, I will not adopt any unjust measures." Mr. Bryan added that he had not previously been informed of the allegation that Mr. Haskell, Governor of Oklahoma, had been guilty of dishonesty, and probably neither President Roosevelt nor Mr. Mr. Taft had known it before. When Mr. Haskell was first appointed to his office, the President and Mr. Taft did not give him any warning as to dishonesty. In further condemnation of the steps taken by the Republicans, Mr. Bryan said that when President Roosevelt stood in 1904 as a candidate, he received an enormous amount of money as a bribe from the railway king, Mr. Harriman. Consequently the President must also be included in the charge of dishonesty.

Senator Foraker, who, was recently discharged from duty on the election committee of Mr. Taft, has written to President Roosevelt defending himself and disclosing the unjust actions of others.

These disagreeable recriminations in political circles reveal the political corruption that prevails in the United States.

SENSATIONAL POLITICAL SITUATION IN AMERICA.

New York, September 28.

President Roosevelt again sent a lengthy and strong note to Mr. Bryan on Sept. 27th in consequence of the latter's reply on the previous day. In the note the President disclosed without hesitation the secrets of the Democratic Party. With regard to the trusts, he said: "I am not opposing the honest trusts, and I am rather a friend to them, while I am trying to deal strictly with the trusts injurious to the public welfare." Most of the Democrats are in receipt of support from the trusts, which are acting very dishonestly. At present the political situation is remarkably sensational. As already reported, Mr. Foraker who has retired from office as one of the Republican committee, is opposing Mr. Taft. Mr. Foraker is popular among the coloured people. At his suggestion, the negroes are likely to support the Democrats. Consequently, the Republican leaders are contriving a plan to conciliate the coloured men whose votes are estimated at 500,000.

CHOLERA IN RUSSIA.

San Francisco, September 28.

It is stated that the cholera in Russia will in all probability spread through the whole European Continent. All the Powers are doing their best to prevent such a calamity.

THE GERMAN AMBASSADOR IN JAPAN.

It is rumoured that at his own request Baron Munim von Schiwarzenstein, German Ambassador in Japan, will be transferred to the United States.

JAPANESE DEAD IN RUSSIA.

St. Petersburg, September 28.

A religious service was held at 10 am on Sept. 28th at Medweij military cemetery in honour of twenty-three Japanese prisoners who died during the war. The 50th brigade of the Russian army presented flowers and a company of the force was present. At the ceremony Colonel Ogiuo, an attaché of the Japanese Embassy, read an elegy, after which Mr. Ochiai, Secretary, Lient-Col Odagiri, Commander Tanaka and other officials of the Embassy worshipped before the altar. Colonel Stakel-witch, commanding the 199th regiment in reserve, was also present to represent the Russian Army, in company with a number of Russian officers of the same body. In spite of the inclement weather, a large crowd of people watched the proceedings. The corpses will be sent to-morrow to Hamburg where they will be cremated. The ashes will be sent to Japan where they are expected to arrive about the beginning of December.

CHOLERA IN MANILA.

San Francisco, September 30.

The cholera in Manila is further virulently prevalent. The sanitary authorities are carrying out every day health examination at private houses. The proposed reception to the Battleship Fleet will be abandoned.

BOYCOTT OF JAPANESE MERCHANDISE.

In consequence of the import of Japanese merchandise by a Chinaman named Kwong-tang, from Singapore, indignation has been caused among the Chinese residents of Canton, Swatow etc. They have issued among their countrymen a declaration opposing the Chinese importer. He made an excuse that he had imported the goods in mistake and proposed that consequently he would pay $1,500 to his countrymen as a penalty for his misapprehension. On this proposal the affair was settled. There is a lot of Japanese goods valued at about $10,000 apparently consigned to Chinese merchants. No consignee has applied for their delivery.

POLITICS IN THE UNITED STATES.

New York, September 29.

Complication is further going on in American political circles. Some false letters have been published in several newspapers. Recently, the New York Times published a letter of the late Mr. Cleveland, which condemns Mr. Bryan. City-Attorney Jerome is investigating as to the validity of the letter. If he finds the letter to be a forgery, he will deal with the newspaper in accordance with the law.

President Roosevelt will shortly visit several States with a view to supporting Mr. Taft.

Mr. Bryan has greater influence than in his past two campaigns.

OBITUARY.

St. Petersburg, September 29.

M. Schwanoff, a member of the Imperial Russian Council, has died. Formerly he was Minister for Agricultural Affairs and then President of the Board of Auditors. He was a leader of the Right Party.

TINY GIRL MASS OF FEARFUL ECZEMA

Covered from Head to Foot—Cries Were Heartrending—Beat Her Head and Blood Streamed Down Her Back—In Agony When Washed—Suffering Lasted Four Months.

TWO SETS OF CUTICURA EFFECT PERFECT CURE

"I am writing to you a few words of advice to mothers who may have a child the same as I have. For more than four months my little baby girl had eczema, and no one but those who have had it can tell the agony they suffer. I have seen my child beat her head, and blood streaming down her back. She was a little sufferer from head to foot. She was one mass. I had advice from medical men; did not seem to cure her one bit. I was advised to use the Cuticura Remedies, and I had two sets. Now there is not one spot about her, and I am confident that the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Pills cured her. I used them, and I think they are worth all praise for my child's sake and other mothers who may have such trouble as I did with her.

"I used to dread the time for her to wake up, as the cries from her were heartrending. For months she was bad, and no one but myself can tell of the nights of misery spent with her. It first came in a small place on her head. I used all kinds of remedies for it and it got worse. When I washed her she would cry with pain. One day I made up my mind while reading about the Cuticura Remedies, so I got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills and used them in the evening. I continued for a week, and you can't imagine how thankful I was to see how well she got on. She was two years of age the 22d of February, and a fine girl. She is a picture to look at now. I shall recommend the Cuticura Remedies to every one I know. Mrs. Cutler, 140, King St., Royal Oak, Plymouth, Dec. 13, 1905, and Jan. 29, 1906."

The most torturing and disfiguring humours, eczemas, rashes, itching, irritations, and inflammations of the skin, scalp, and blood, with loss of hair of infants, children, and adults, are instantly relieved and speedily cured by Cuticura Remedies, when all else fails. Guaranteed absolutely pure.

hama on Nov. 9th. She will be exhibited to the public.

We have again to acknowledge receipt from the Editor of the Weekly Scotsman of a generous and handsome bunch of heather in capital condition.

The EMPEROR AND EMPRESS have distributed yen 800 among the poor people in Tokyo who are in distress in consequence of the recent inundations.

A TELEGRAM from Khabarovsk says that the Russian police have searched the house of a Japanese merchant and seized all the business books and letters.

The American Ambassador in Tokyo and Mrs. Thos. O'Brien, who have been home on leave, returned to Tokyo on Oct. 7th. They had travelled via Siberia.

The foreign trade of Yokohama during ten days ended Sept. 30th was as follows: Exports, yen 5,456,688; and imports yen 3,314,114; excess of exports yen 2,142,574.

On Oct. 1st heavy snow fell on Fuji as far down as the niyome or second station. Such a fall at the beginning of October has not been experienced for many years past.

On the morning of Oct. 5th fire broke out in the Kotobuki-za theatre, Honjo, Tokyo, destroying the building and various property. Damage estimated at yen 60,000 was done.

On the morning of Oct. 2nd, fire broke out in the residence of Count Sawa, at Koishikawa in Tokyo, destroying the building. The cause is said to have been sparks in the kitchen.

BARON SAKATANI, former Minister for Finance, arrived at Yingkow on Oct. 1st on his way home from Europe. After visiting several places along the Liao, he left the next day for Dairen.

The recent San Francisco report that Baron Mumm von Schwarzenstein, German Ambassador, will be transferred to the United States at his own request, is, says the Asahi, absolutely baseless.

A PICKPOCKET attempted on Oct. 1st to operate on Rev. Henry Scott Jefferys while travelling by car from Surugadai-shita to Kudan-shita. He was detected and given in charge of the nearest available policeman.

A CHINESE employee of the Anglo-Japanese Bank is alleged to have absconded with about yen 2,500. He is said to have been heavily in debt to some Japanese and Chinese as the result of losses through speculation.

At the Maizuru naval station, says the Kokumin, the work is in progress of constructing a large dock capable of receiving a warship of 20,000 tons. About 1,000 coolies are now engaged in the work which is expected to be completed in 1910.

MAJOR H. GONTO, a professor in the Military University, has died. At the beginning of the Russo-Japanese war he commanded the 24th regiment, and sustained an injury at Horvutien. Later he joined the Port Arthur investing army. After the surrender of the fortress, he was appointed on the staff of the Yalu Army. On the restoration of peace, he was appointed to the Embassy in Berlin as an attaché.

FIRE broke out in the electric apparatus and wire factory in Kobiku-cho, Tokyo, early on the morning of Oct. 6th. Ten buildings were burned down. A young man who had climbed an electric light pole to look on fell and was killed on the spot.

ALL doubt as to the attitude of the authorities towards the "Pari Mutuel" has been settled. The officials of the Nippon Race Club received on Wednesday a communication from the Basei Kyoku dated the 6th intimating the closing of the Pari Mutuel.

The sale of the October number of the magazine Shinsei has been prohibited on the ground that a novel appearing in it was injurious to social order. On Oct. 7th the police confiscated the copies remaining at the Ryuban-do printing office, where the periodical is published.

It is reported by a telegram via Nagasaki that the boycotting of Japanese merchandise in Canton has almost subsided and in Hongkong has come practically to an end, though some agitation is going on. In consequence of the recent inundations some 2,000 persons are homeless and starving. An enormous amount of money is needed for relief.

It is stated in a Tokyo despatch that on the guarantee of the Dai-ichi and Yokohama Specie Banks the London and Westminster Bank has signed a contract to undertake an issue of debentures of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha to the amount of yen 2,000,000. The term of the debentures is two years, but they can be renewed at four months' notice.

In consequence of the raising of freights by various American railway companies, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha has decided to lower its freight rates in order to lessen the heavy burden of freight on shippers who send goods to inland points in the United States by railway. The change will go into effect on Oct. 13th. The new rate is 16 per cent. lower on an average than the old tariff.

It is reported from Tokyo that the Russian patrol vessel Lieutenant Zaitzev, while proceeding to Nicolaievsk, discovered a Japanese fishing vessel on the northern coast of Great Fantail island. As the Japanese crew took refuge in a forest, the Russians burnt the ship. It is feared that if this news, which has been made public at Khabarovsk, is true, the Japanese will be frozen or starved to death.

The wedding of Captain Nodzu, eldest son of Field-Marshal Marquis Nozu, with Miss Hiro, daughter of Mr. N. Suyehiro, a prominent business man of Tokyo, took place on Oct. 6th. Some months ago when the Jiji Shimpō held a competition of beauties throughout the Empire on the challenge of an American newspaper, the bride received the first prize, a gold finger-ring with a big diamond,—from the Tokyo journal. Since then, she has been known as Nippon ichi no bijin, or premier beauty of Japan.

The vessels taking part in the Naval review at Kobe will comprise thirteen battleships and cruisers, fifty-two destroyers, twenty-eight torpedo-boats and several submarines. It is expected that some foreign warships will also be present and the total number of vessels to be in attendance is put at considerably over one hundred, being about twice the number which were present at the review in 1903. The review area will be 2½ miles by 5½. The Eastern boundary of the area will be off Nishinomiya and the Western off Ohama.

CHINA.

Friday, October 2.

Tokyo journals say that the conferences between China and France with reference to the Annam trouble have been satisfactorily settled. It will be remembered that France preferred a series of demands in connexion with this affair, and that she was thought to be treating China somewhat too severely. Now, however, an agreement has been happily reached. China consents to pay an indemnity of 100,000 taels for the loss of life by French troops, and she agrees to punish the persons chiefly responsible, and already she has sent in the names of these persons to the French Authorities. As to the compensation for injuries and delay suffered by the French Yunnan Railway, that question is deferred for further investigation. France has withdrawn her demand for the degradation of the Viceroy of Yunnan, and has agreed to postpone for further consideration the problem of extending the Railway beyond Taiyuan. With regard to the problem of mines in Yunnan, the accounts are conflicting, but we gather that France's already acquired rights at seven places in the province are to be confirmed and steps taken to give practical effect to them. The Kokumin's telegrams indicate that France's demand with regard to the extension of the Railway is intended merely to establish a prescriptive title so as to prevent the concession being made to any other Power.

In our issue of the 30th ultimo we mentioned that Germany, in 1905 or 1906, suggested that the time had come for withdrawing the foreign troops from the province of Pechili, but that it was not publicly known what attitude the various Powers had assumed towards the proposal. We have now been informed that this statement requires modification. When, in 1905, Germany suggested that the time had come for withdrawing all the troops, except the Legation Guards, her proposal was unanimously agreed to by the Powers concerned, with the understanding that the withdrawal should take place by installments. Consequently it was decided that, in the spring of 1906, all the posts held by the foreign forces, except Peking and Tientsin, should be evacuated, and that decision seems to have been carried out in March or April of the same year. If now, as the Asahi Shimbun states, the Japanese Government have resolved to withdraw the rest of their troops, the Legation Guards excepted, they have probably reached the conclusion that the political situation in North China no longer necessitates the keeping of foreign troops there, and that consequently, the time has come for giving effect to the original German proposal of October, 1905.

The following incident recently occurred at Canton, and is described by the Hong-kong Daily Press:

The Canton authorities were advised late on the 15th instant that half a dozen men alleged to be pirates had left Hongkong by the steamer Paul Beau. The same evening the Colonel of the Shameen Guard sent a messenger to the French Consulate with his card to inform the Consul that he intended to arrest six men on the Paul Beau the following morning.

The messenger was told that the arrests could not be made by the Chinese authorities on board, but that they could arrest them when they had left the ship. Instructions were sent by the Company's agent to the Captain of the vessel not to allow the arrests to be effected on board.

On the 15th instant when the Paul Beau steamed into the Harbour the Colonel of the Shameen Guard boarded her with a dozen soldiers in plain clothes and proceeded forthwith to arrest the men, having them put in irons. Meanwhile the Captain having received his orders went down to see that the arrest was not effected on board by Chinese officials. To his surprise he saw that the men were all tied up and bundled together in a sampan. He protested against the action of Colonel Lui and sent word to the Consulate. The Vice-Consul was soon on the spot and he caused the men to be released and put back on board. The soldiers were next ordered to leave the vessel, which they did after much hesitation, and not until they were told that they would be forcibly ejected if they did not elect to go of their own will. Meanwhile the alleged pirates made the most of their opportunity and while Lui and his posse of soldiers were deliberating as to what they would do next, the alleged pirates made a dash for liberty and must have succeeded as they are still wanted.

It is a pity that such blunders on the part of the Chinese Authorities should inure to the advantage of malefactors, for to ignorant folks it will inevitably appear that the French, by adhering to sentimental rules, were instrumental in defeating the ends of justice. As a matter of fact the French Consul was strictly within his rights, and the main responsibility rests on the Chinese who violated a common principle of international law. But it is easy to see how, by a little exercise of friendly co-operation, the escape of the pirates could have been prevented.

A Chinese gentleman from Canton, who has arrived at Nagasaki by the Empress of China, is quoted as saying that the boycott is practically over in Canton. In Hongkong, however, it is still kept up, but as sub rosa purchases of Japanese goods by Chinese merchants are going on successfully, it is not probable that the boycott will continue to be effective much longer in that colony.

The same informant says that there is still great suffering in the sequel of the recent inundations of Canton and that the sum of one million taels at least would be required to alleviate it.

The Dalai Lama seems to be spending his time very quietly in Peking. There has been no undue haste in receiving him at the Palace. He is not to have an audience until the 6th inst., and on the whole it would seem that the Chinese Government is devoting some attention to putting him back into his place as a subject. He can not even receive foreign visitors of his own choice: they have to approach him through the Waiwupu. It becomes a puzzle to divine what inducements can have been held out to the Buddhist Pontiff to induce him to go to Peking at all.

Saturday, October 3.

News from Tientsin is to the effect that the Haikwan Taotai, in answer to a memorial addressed to him by the local merchants, has replied by suggesting that 10 years' credit be granted to the Chinese tradesmen for paying up the amount of the goods already received by them from foreign merchants, the interest on this sum being carried forward to the end of the 10 years, and that, with regard to goods imported to Chinese order but not yet delivered, the loss should be divided equally between the Chinese and the foreign merchants. The United Chambers of Commerce were to hold a meeting on the 2nd inst. to consider this proposal. It certainly does not err on the side of stringency, so far as the Chinese are concerned.

It is stated that the Chinese Government is about to appoint a special Plenipotentiary to confer with the Dalai Lama on Tibetan affairs. The situation seems likely to resolve itself into this, that the Buddhist Pontiff has been summoned to Peking to receive orders.

The Shanghai Mercury publishes another résumé of the article in The Times which was already reported in précis a few days ago.

So far we can gather, the line taken by The Times is that, although Japan may be right textually in her interpretation of her agreements with China, and although there can be no denying the validity of her claims in view of her great expenditure of blood and treasure in Manchuria, her wiser policy would be to consult the spirit of her international relations rather than to abide by the exact letter of treaties and protocols.

This Fakumen Railway has certainly reached a curious stage. The probability is that China herself does not care a string of cash whether the Railway is built or not built. But she is decidedly interested in the commotion that has been raised by the cleverly manipulated Syndicate which, while working altogether for its own practical ends, has made an astute appeal to sentiment. It may possibly be that some very sapient Chinese statesman devised this matter in the hope that it would constitute the little rift within the lute of Anglo-Japanese friendship, and that he is now rubbing his hands in delighted observation of the progress of his plan.

Sunday, October 4.

The Dalai Lama is alleged to be an expensive guest to China. It is said that the Peking Government makes him an allowance of 13,000 taels per diem during his stay in the capital. He is at present engaged, together with the principal men of his retinue, in studying the etiquette to be observed on the occasion of his audience, which is now said to have been fixed for the 5th inst. Immediately after the audience the Pontiff is to present his gifts to the Throne, gifts which may be otherwise described as tribute. There will then be a Court entertainment which is spoken of as theatrical.

The munificent allowance made to the Dalai Lama will not surprise any reader of China's history. She has always been remarkable for her open-handed liberality to tribute-bearing missions; in fact, the tributary profited much more than the suzerain.

Mr. Tang Shaoi left Shanghai for Japan by the steamer Manchuria on the 3rd inst. It was raining heavily at the time of his departure, but this did not prevent him from receiving a great send-off at the hands not only of Chinese, but also of foreign officials and other leading men of Shanghai.

There are very disheartening accounts of the inundation at Tsitsihar. The whole country is said to have been converted into a sea; innumerable residences large and small have been more or less injured, and many lives are believed to have been lost. Harbin is busily sending to the scene of the disaster materials for repairing the railway and for building embankments, so it may be inferred that Harbin expects to escape scot free. We do not, however, read that the railway service has been interrupted, though it is not easy to see how that can have been avoided.

The troops left by the Powers in North China after the Boxer émeute are now distributed at eight places and their respective numbers are said to be as follow:—British 1,950; American 123; Russian 114; Germany 750; French 1,400; Italy 230; Austria 228 and Japan 1,000. Japan now proposes to withdraw one half of her infantry and all her cavalry. The Mainichi Dempo, from which we take these details, says that the monetary saving effected in Japan's case will amount to 1,300,000 yen annually.

When some of the local English journals in this settlement were indirectly applauding the Chinese boycott of Japanese merchandise—applause which these journals doubtless intended to be a display of friendliness to Japan—we suggested that to encourage China in such courses might be dangerous from a selfish point of view, since English, German or French goods might be the next objects of a taboo. Apparently the forecast was not ill-founded. The Peking correspondent of the N.-C. Daily News writes under date of Sept. 18th:—

Owing to the refusal of the Germans to cancel their agreement concerning the working of mineral deposits at Chichou and other districts in Shantung, the people of that province are threatening to boycott the Germans. As the agreement, which is still in force, was concluded with the permission of the Peking Government, the Governor of Shantung, Yuan Shihshün, who of course does not support the claims of his people, has telegraphed to the Waiwupu, deprecating the action as unreasonable. H.E. Yuan threatens to arrest the promoters of the dispute. In spite of this, the representatives of the people in Peking have again petitioned the Waiwupu demanding the cancellation of the existing agreement, saying that otherwise they will carry out the boycott against the Germans in Shantung Province until they give way to the demand. The plans of the people are:—

- 1.—Not to buy or sell German goods.
  - 2.—Not to do any work for the Germans.
  - 3.—Not to send their children and relatives to any schools or colleges where German teachers exist.
  - 4.—Not to travel by the Kiaochow-Tsinan railway.
- As Governor Yuan and the Peking Government are doing their best to quell the discontent, it is hoped that the existing friendly relations between China and Germany will not be disturbed by the action of these irresponsible people, who are more prompted by personal motives than any desire of acting for the public welfare.

The Viceroy of the Two Kiang is said to have reported to the Throne that the people under his jurisdiction raise no objection to the proposed increase of the salt tax.

A telegram from Shanghai says that the last drawing of lots to determine which of the opium dens shall be closed during next year, resulted in the selection of 363 houses as the next sufferers by this veto.

The audience of the Dalai Lama, which was to have taken place on the 6th inst., has been postponed indefinitely by an Imperial decree. No reason for this postponement is telegraphed, and we are left to imagine that the Peking Court does not wish to disturb the record for delay and loitering which the Dalai Lama has hitherto achieved.

The Mainichi Dempo, referring to the recrudescence of the journalistic campaign about the Fakumen Railway, declares that the British Government has fully recognised that the proposed line would fall under the definition of "parallel," as described in the protocol, and that Japan is quite within her rights in vetoing it. The only question is whether wise diplomacy counsels strict enforcement of this right. That is a matter which the Japanese Government reserves for consideration at the proper time. Meanwhile the writings of the English press seem to be based on imperfect knowledge of the problem.

Tuesday, October 6.

Under date of the 5th inst. telegrams from Peking say that the Japanese Chargé d'affaires, Mr. Abe, in obedience to instructions from his Government, repaired to the Waiwupu and announced that, as the present condition of China did not seem to justify the retention of a large body of foreign troops within her dominions, Japan had decided to withdraw the greater part of the force now stationed in various parts of Pechili. Mr. Na Tung is said to have received this information with much pleasure. It is believed that one of the objects of Mr. Tang Shaoi's visit to the West was to procure the withdrawal of the foreign troops, and that he was instructed to broach this subject to the American Government in the first place. Japan, however, has taken the lead, though it is possible that America may consent to become the mouthpiece for a proposal of complete withdrawal.

It is stated that the Japanese Government has officially announced its approval of Peking's plan for stopping the import of morphine into China from this country.

It is stated that the postponement sine die of the Dalai Lama's audience in Peking is due to the Prelate's superstition. The change of air and the change of diet entailed by sojourn in Peking have already affected his health, and several members of his suite also are prostrated. These facts have recalled to the Dalai Lama's recollection that one of his predecessors died in Peking on a visit to that city in the Chienlung era. In these circumstances it is impossible to tell how long the postponement of the audience will last.

Wednesday, October 7.

The Chinese Government has at last taken a step which may be said to prelude the adoption of gold monometallism. An Imperial decree has been promulgated declaring that, as the system of determining value by weight has been pursued in China for many centuries, there shall be no change in that principle, but inasmuch as uniformity throughout the whole Empire is absolutely essential to the prosperous conduct of business, the tael must henceforward take the form of a silver coin, its fineness 98, and there shall be a subsidiary silver 50-sen coin of 88 fineness, as well as 20 sen and 5 sen pieces, concerning the fineness of which nothing is stated. The decree peremptorily forbids the use of different coins in different provinces, and if its provisions are faithfully observed it ought to be the means of substituting uniformity for the chaotic condition hitherto prevailing in China's currency.

Mr. Tang arrived at Nagasaki on the 5th inst. by the S.S. Manchuria, but as there had been a case of cholera on board he did not land until the following day. Interviewed by a representative of the Mainichi Dempo, he is said to have stated that the main object of his journey westward is to convey China's thanks to the United States Government for the latter's generous action in returning a portion of the Boxer indemnity. But he is charged with the collateral mission of investigating the financial systems in the various countries of the world. During his stay in Japan he will endeavour to settle as many as possible of the questions outstanding between Japan and China, but as his sojourn here is limited to a month he can not hope to effect much in that line. He will remain in America about three months, and probably four in Europe, returning by way of Manchuria, so that his absence from China will total about one year. Questioned about the probability of Sir Robert Hart's return to China, Mr. Tang professed himself unable to speak, but he said that, if Sir Robert did not return, the problem of appointing his successor would have to be considered. He expressed doubts as to whether the state of affairs among Western Powers would permit of their withdrawing their troops from North China, and he seemed to think it very problematical whether even Japan seriously entertained such a design. Referring to Mr. Ijuin's appointment to represent Japan at the Peking Court, Mr. Tang expressed strong approval, and said that he trusted that the new Minister's placable methods would have an excellent effect upon the relations of the two Empires. As to the project of resuscitating the Chinese navy, it was brought to a halt for the present by lack of funds, and Mr. Tang could not say anything as to the probability of warships being ordered from Japanese yards. Mr. Tang confirmed the report that the Chinese Government intends to send 100 students to the United States in the near future, and to follow them by batches of 50 each year for five years. The only topic upon which Mr. Tang refused to be frank was that of the Sino-American alliance. He replied to questions on that subject with a laugh.

It is stated that the newly established Bank of China will have branches in Tokyo, London and Berlin.

The latest story about the Dalai Lama is that his audience has been put off, not on account of his own ill-health, but because of his dissatisfaction at the reception accorded to him. Certainly onlookers must have been somewhat surprised to observe how little recognition was extended to his sovereign attributes on the occasion of his entry into Peking.

The officials and people of the province of Hupch seem to be bestirring themselves very actively with the object of preparing for representative institutions. They are about to add two halls to the three already established for the purpose of hearing lectures from eminent scholars on the subject of constitutional government, and they have invited 100 officials and leading residents of the neighbouring provinces to listen to discourses on the topic of local autonomy. One of the principal lecturers at this latter meeting is to be Professor Tamaki, a Japanese jurist who is employed at the Law College in Hankow. At Hankow also we read of a class of 80 students being formed to hear from Japanese professors discourses on the topics of constitutional government and local autonomy.

It is telegraphed to the Asahi Shinbun that the loan on account of the Lu Han Railway has been effected with an Anglo-French Syndicate on terms very favourable to China. The amount of the loan is said to be 5 million sterling and the rate of interest 5 per cent, to be reduced to 4 after fifteen years. Nothing is stated by the telegraph as to the issue price, and there are important differences in the figures given, one journal saying that the interest will be reduced to 4½ per cent after 45 years. Neither do we learn anything definite about the period for which the loan is to be unredeemed or about the period of final redemption. Another puzzling point is that whereas 8 million sterling have hitherto been supposed necessary to take the loan out of the hands of the Belgian Syndicate which originally financed it, 5 millions would now seem to be sufficient for that purpose according to the telegrams. The line is not to be mortgaged as security for the loan, and it is expected that most of the Belgians who have hitherto been employed on the operating staff will continue to hold their positions.

The autumn meeting of the Matsudo Race Club was held on Oct. 2nd and 3rd. The programmes were successfully carried out. On the first day, most of the horses were country bred excepting those in the 4th, 7th and 9th races. Mangetsu (Japanese), Shime (Australian), and Sawatari (Japanese) had excellent races in which the pari mutuel paid yen 134.50 67.50 and 136 respectively. The second day's programme consisted of ten races of country bred and three of foreign griffins.

HORSE RACING.

Friday, October 2.

There is a great deal of talk about the pari-mutuel in Japan. The general opinion seems to be that the pari-mutuel is distinctly a lottery under the terms of the new Criminal Code, and that consequently any magistrate or judge administering that Code would be obliged to punish all persons connected with the sale or purchase of baken. That view is said to be taken by the Judiciary. The Executive thinks, however, that the pari-mutuel ought to be regarded as exempt from the veto of the Code. The line of reasoning taken is that race clubs are essential to the improvement of the breed of horses, and that without the pari-mutuel they would come to an immediate end. But the Executive and the Judiciary are two distinct bodies, and the latter is bound to interpret the laws of the land according to its own intelligence without any reference whatever to the former. Something like a panic was recently caused by the arrest of some persons connected with the pari-mutuel at the Naruo Races. It was generally reported that the arrest had been made at the instance of a public procurator who was determined to assert the majesty of the law against what he considered a flagrant violation of its provisions. Naturally the various race clubs fell into something like a panic, which was allayed only on discovering that the Naruo folks were to be arraigned on a charge of fraud, not of gambling. On the other hand, it remains to be seen whether the court before which the case comes will agree to consider that a fraud can be committed in connexion with an act itself illegal. If a law court extends its protection to the procedure in connexion with the pari-mutuel it evidently recognises de facto that the pari-mutuel is entitled to be judicially safeguarded. A meeting was held at the Prime Minister's official residence on the 1st inst. and was attended by the Premier, the Ministers of Home Affairs and of Justice and other high officials, to discuss this question. It is evidently the general impression that the Judiciary and the Executive are at variance, and that to reconcile their views will be a difficult matter. Nothing is known as to the decision arrived at by the conference on the 1st instant. Therefore considerable interest attached to the race meeting which was to be held yesterday at Matsudo in Chiba Prefecture. If the pari-mutuel was allowed full swing at Matsudo, then the fair inference would be that the Judiciary had been placated. Our own opinion is that the pari-mutuel can not now be interdicted. It has been virtually recognised as a lawful enterprise ever since the race clubs were organised, and the only question that can now be rationally considered is how to devise some means of correcting its most flagrant abuses.

Saturday, October 3.

A deputation representing the race clubs was received by the Prime Minister on the 2nd inst. and elicited from his Excellency a declaration that the Government has no intention of abolishing the pari-mutuel, but that some steps for its better regulation will be adopted. It appears, however, that there may be some difficulty in inducing the Judiciary to follow the Executive in this matter. The Fiji Shimpō quotes Mr. Matsumuro, Chief Public Procurator, as saying that although he is not at liberty to express any definite opinion at the present stage concerning the attitude that the Judiciary will assume, he does not think that laws should be enacted merely for the purpose of becoming dead letters, nor does he think that the pari-mutuel is essential to the existence of race clubs.

It will thus be seen that Mr. Matsumuro, while professing reticence, does not require the public even to read between the lines in search of his meaning. The difficulty is that the pari-mutuel is nothing more or less than betting. It can scarcely be called a lottery, because each subscriber chooses the horse he wishes to back, and all that the pari-mutuel does is to hold the stakes and levy a fee for its trouble. Now the 185th article of the new Criminal Code is capable of being interpreted as imposing a veto upon all betting, since it provides that anyone who stakes money on a chance eventuality shall be liable to a fine of from 1 to 1,000 yen. Some jurists may argue that betting on a horse race is staking money on a pure chance, and certainly the common form of lottery as carried out often at races falls under this definition. But if a man backs a horse when he has good reason to think that it will win, and when he has been at more or less pains to ascertain its qualities as compared with those of his competitors, can it be explicitly stated that he is betting on a chance? There is unquestionably a difference in this respect between the pari-mutuel and the ordinary lottery, nor can we see why, if the pari-mutuel is considered to be illegal, the same may not be said of marginal transactions on the Stock Exchange. It will depend upon the Lower Court's interpretation of the word guzen of the 185th article of the new Code.

Meanwhile the state of uncertainty in which this question is enveloped produced a sensible effect upon the Matsudo Race Meeting which began on the 2nd inst. The office of the pari-mutuel, hitherto the most animated part of the course, was practically deserted, people not knowing whether the purchase of a ticket might not be followed by a tap on the shoulder from a police constable.

The Asahi Shimbun gives a most amusing account of the races, but its story does not altogether agree with the reports published by other newspapers as to the patronage of the pari-mutuel. That the finicking regulations enacted by the Basei-Kyoku for controlling the demeanour and the social quality of people frequenting the pari-mutuel proved completely abortive, is a result which might have been foreseen, though it is permissible to doubt whether things were quite so bad as the witty reporter of our Tokyo contemporary describes them to have been. We suspect that if this same correspondent were planted at Epsom on a Derby day he would find more to shock his sense of propriety that he did at Matsudo. The Asahi itself, which is nothing if not thorough, insists that the pari-mutuel should be abolished root and branch. Estimating from the receipts recorded to have been obtained at race meetings during the past year, our contemporary concludes that tens of millions of yen must change hands in these affairs, and that just that amount of money is withdrawn from the sum of the nation's productive capital. The picture published by our contemporary is most entertaining. It shows a procession of horses—the foremost ridden by a jockey in a tall hat represents the racing animals; following it are two of the sorriest steeds imaginable ridden by frightfully ugly equestrians whose mounts trample under their feet pebbles which bear the inscriptions "diligence," "morality," "economy," "reputation" and "law," while the rear of the procession is brought up by imbecile constable on a decrepit steed. This is evidently destined to become a very interesting question.

Monday, October 5.

Tokyo journals announce with confidence that the Cabinet has determined that the pari-mutuel must be abolished. There is talk of the adoption of gradual measures, but what that can mean we do not perceive.

Meanwhile it seems not unlikely that the manner of operating the new Code will give rise to much discontent. Already two instances are cited of sentences quite out of proportion to the pettiness of the offences punished.

Tuesday, October 6.

Quite a commotion is being caused by the pari-mutuel question. On the 5th inst. the Government definitely intimated to the Basei-kyoku that the pari-mutuel would be no longer allowed and on the following day the officials of the Basei-kyoku resigned en masse. It is stated that when the special committee of the Diet in its last session was considering the new Penal Code, the Government delegate was openly questioned as to whether the pari-mutuel would not become illegal after the promulgation of the Code. The answer having been distinctly in the affirmative, there ought to have been no doubt in the minds of the Basei-kyoku officials. Nevertheless they appear to have proceeded just as though the Code had no existence, for they are said to have recently intimated to the race clubs that the pari-mutuel might be continued. We gather that to this action on the part of the Basei-kyoku is due the decision now publicly announced by the Authorities, and we further gather that the pari-mutuel will be illegal on the Negishi Race Course as well as everywhere else in Japan. It will be remembered that the race clubs came into existence in the days of the first Katsura Cabinet; that races were considered essential to improving the breed of horses, and that the pari-mutuel was believed to be necessary to the prosperity of race clubs. Shortly after the Saionji Cabinet came into office, it became apparent that this system was liable to great abuses, and by way of a remedial measure it was decided to raise the price of a pari-mutuel ticket from 5 yen to 10, the idea being to exclude the lower orders. This, however, proved quite ineffectual, and the abuses threatened to increase indefinitely. Then occurred the incident at Naruo, when the law asserted itself with a strong hand by making an incursion into the realm of the pari-mutuel, seizing the apparatus and apprehending all those concerned. It is said that before taking this step the Public Procurator of the Kobe Court applied to the Department of Justice for instructions and acted with the Department's complete approval. In fact, the Judiciary seems to have been wholly opposed to the pari-mutuel from the outset, and that it will enforce the new Code in that sense can not be doubted. On the other hand, the Cabinet now in office must be regarded as the original promoter of the race clubs and as the sanctioner of the pari-mutuel. The race clubs claim that their existence will become worse than precarious if the pari-mutuel be vetoed, and that they would never have put up money for the purpose of organisation had they not been officially encouraged to count upon the pari-mutuel as a source of income. The problem is certainly very troublesome, and our Japanese contemporaries think that there will be special difficulty in applying the veto to the Nippon Race Club, inasmuch as the pari mutuel has existed at Negishi ever since the days of consular jurisdiction, and must therefore be said to have received the cachet of all the foreign Representatives, in other words, of all the Western Powers. Of course this argument does not hold in its entirety. Under consular jurisdiction more than one thing was permitted which would never have been allowed had the treaty Powers been able to combine for the purposes of municipal government in the Settlement. The sale of intoxicating liquors by unlicensed publicans may be quoted as among these tolerated abuses, and it does not follow that because an administrative defect has been bequeathed by the extra-territorial system, it should permanently survive the decares of the system. We do not mean, however, that the pari mutuel is to be classed with such an abuse as the unlicensed sale of intoxicating liquors, especially the pari mutuel at Negishi, where, during all the years of its operation, the system has not been disfigured by any abuses whatever. Our own idea is that the pari mutuel is nothing more than betting pure and simple, it being solely a mechanism for collecting and paying out the amounts staked on the different horses; in other words, a stakeholder. If the pari mutuel be forbidden, all betting becomes illegal. There are now ten race clubs actually established in Japan and two have applied for permission to organise. These, it is expected, will all go to the wall. Then the owners of horses will suffer heavy losses. The Yorozu Choho gives a list of the principal owners, of the horses owned by them, and of their prices, the latter ranging from 60,000 yen downwards. "Hanazono," the property of Mr. Sonoda Sanenari, heads the list. Tokyo newspapers are unanimous in thinking that this will prove the death blow of the race clubs, that several of the owners of race horses will be ruined; that banks which have accommodated the clubs will be embarrassed, and that the printers of pari mutuel tickets will have to put up their shutters. Meanwhile the proverbial ill wind is expected to become a favourable breeze for the Stock Exchanges, as the great sums hitherto devoted to the pari mutuel will be diverted to transactions on 'Change.' Mr. Sonoda Sanenari is quoted by the Mainichi Dempo as saying that the public takes an altogether exaggerated view of the profits accruing from the pari mutuel. Thus, if at a race meeting, the pari mutuel sells 1½ million yen worth of tickets and takes in 150,000 yen, it has to pay out 50,000 yen in prizes, 35,000 for one class of expenses and 20,000 yen for another class, so that there only remains 45,000 yen for salaries of officials and for dividend.

Wednesday, October 7.

The commotion about the pari mutuel question continues unabated. Viscount Sone, chief of the Basei-kyoku, who was originally represented as approving of the abolition measure, is now said to be strongly opposed to it. The gist of his views appears to be that some sacrifice must be made to the urgent necessity of obtaining a good supply of horses for military purposes, and that if the pari mutuel be ruled out of existence, the race-clubs can not be maintained, and thus whatever assistance races give to improving the breed of horses will cease to be available. The Viscount is further quoted as stating that if betting be thus prohibited on the course, it will be carried on outside the course as much as, if not more than, ever. There will be simply a change of place, not of system.

The present expectation is that the Basei-kyoku will be abolished and that its duties will be taken over by a bureau in the War Department. It need scarcely be said that the judicial authorities are very resolute. They declare that even if the question lies between national morality and the possession of fine horses, there can not be a moment's hesitation in choosing.

Meanwhile the Naruo offenders have been all released and their money restored to them, the view taken by the judicial authorities being that, as the Government has now definitely abolished the pari mutuel, there is no occasion to enforce the penalties of the law against persons who did not believe that they were violating it.

With regard to the Tokyo press, the Asahi, the Nichi Nichi and the Kokumin frankly approve of the Government's principles and practice alike, but the Iji Shimpō, the Mainichi Dempo, the Chuo and the Nippon all condemn the method though applauding the morality. It is scarcely necessary to say that the line of argument adopted by this second group of journals is that the Government, having itself encouraged the race-clubs of which the pari mutuel was an essential feature, should not have been so precipitate in its change of face towards this institution. They agree that the abuses developed called for drastic measures, but they contend that some consideration was due to vested interests.

With regard to this latter point, we may note that the shares of the Omori Race Club have fallen from 500 yen to 100 and do not find purchasers even at the latter price; the 50 yen paid up shares of the Kawasaki Club are going a-begging at 5 yen, and the 16 50 yen paid up shares of the Meguro Club are at zero. In fact nobody can be found to take over the scrip of the principal race clubs at any figure whatever.

Thursday, October 8.

The latest news about the pari mutuel agitation is that the Basei Kyoku is not to be abolished as an organization but that it will be placed under the control of the Minister of War. Its Chief, Viscount Sone, has resigned, his view being that although some modification in the pari mutuel system may have been desirable, its complete and sudden abolition can not be approved. Unfortunately Viscount Sone does not give any clue as to the modifications which would be at once practicable and satisfactory. Meanwhile, on the 7th inst., the Government definitely notified the various race-clubs that the pari mutuel would henceforth be considered unlawful. The members of the clubs held a meeting in the Geographical Society's building on the 7th inst. and decided that the autumn race meetings should be abandoned. A committee was appointed to approach the Government with reference to the general question of horse-racing, and it was further decided to invite the attendance in Tokyo of members of the Diet representing districts where horse-races are held or where paddocks exist, in order to consult as to the wisest course in the premises.

As for the Nippon Race Club, it has certainly more reason to complain of the suddenness of this measure than any of the clubs which have sprung into existence since the War. The Nippon Race Club is not in any sense a money-making enterprise.

All the proceeds of the gate money, the pari mutuel and the entrance fees are devoted to the purposes of the Club and not a sen is paid to the members in the form of dividend. The Club has been in existence for a great number of years, and its proceedings have never been disfigured by any irregularity of any kind. Many of its members have purchased valuable horses, never dreaming of the possibility of a sudden step like that now taken by the Government, and the Club has been from first to last a good exponent of the sport of racing in its highest sense. These are in the main the considerations advanced in support of exceptional treatment being extended to the Club on this occasion. But we greatly fear that exceptional treatment, however desirable, may prove difficult. The pari mutuel on the Negishi race course has never degenerated into an abuse, but that is mainly, if not altogether, because the number of those patronising it has been comparatively small, being limited to foreigners, mostly of the better classes. Nevertheless it is a pari mutuel, and as such falls within the purview of the legal veto. We can not for one moment condone the want of respect for the rights of property which has been displayed by the action of the Japanese authorities in this matter. All that can be said is that they have themselves been taken more or less by surprise.

AUSTRALIA AND AMERICA.

It appears that an American newspaper correspondent who accompanied the Battleship Fleet has sent a curious telegram to San Francisco and has been the means of resuscitating the tired bogey which, it was hoped, had been laid aside for a long rest. This correspondent says that the visit of the Fleet to Australia has produced a strong effect upon the feelings of the Australians. They are convinced that it will be impossible for them to avoid a conflict with Japan, and that when that day comes, America's sea power will alone and with difficulty be able to preserve Australia for the white races.

That such a telegram should have been sent is scarcely less complimentary to its sender's intelligence than it is insulting to Great Britain. We need not say much about the renewed public attribution of aggressive designs to Japan. It is impossible for any fair minded man to put his finger upon a solitary tangible evidence of those designs. They exist solely in the imagination of the agitators who send these telegrams. But in the meanwhile it must not be forgotten that even the most pacific person may, at some time or other become bellicose, if other people continue perpetually to shake their fists in his face. That, however, is too obvious to need elaboration. What seems more notable about this telegram is that it is said to have aroused a large share of public attention in America, and that it altogether ignores England's sea power. What can be more thoughtless than to depict England's greatest colony attacked by England's ally and barely escaping the loss of independence by succour from America's sea power? Where does England come into this account? Has she ceased to be an appreciable quantity in the affairs of the nations? We strongly suspect that the San Francisco telegram was concocted at the bar of some Australian hotel when the wine was in and the wit out.

KOREA.

Friday, October 2.

It appears that no such thing as a national survey of land has ever been made in Korea. What hand to mouth process has been followed in assessing the land for purposes of taxation, we do not know, but probably each local assessor had his own methods and his own measures. The necessity of a cadastral survey has of course been fully recognised, but its great expense has hitherto proved deterrent. We now read, however, in the Jiji Shinbun and the Kokumin Shinbun that it has been decided to commence the work next year, making Pyongyang the starting point, and that the total outlay required is estimated at 360,000 yen.

There is a good deal of talk about the visit which the Emperor of Korea was to make yesterday to the tombs of his ancestors at Suwon. This act of worship has always been regarded as the imperative duty of every Korean Sovereign after ascending the Throne, and in the old days, when Imperial and aristocratic appearance was everything and the people's welfare nothing, a sum of as much as 250,000 yen used to be spent on the affair. In the more reasonable circumstances of to-day one fifth of the above amount is considered sufficient. Nevertheless Seoul is said to have been in quite a ferment on the eve of the ceremony, and the journey to Suwon will be a distinct episode in His Majesty's life as it will be his first journey by rail. The ex-Emperor could never be induced to trust himself in a train. His Majesty's idea was that if he once got behind a locomotive, he would be whisked off to Japan. Perhaps when his successor returns safely from Suwon, the retired Sovereign will begin to have a yearning to make the acquaintance of the railway at first hand.

Saturday, October 3.

More or less enthusiastic accounts are given as to the doings and sayings of the Emperor of Korea when he paid his visit to Suwon on the 2nd inst. The public is so much perplexed about the mental and physical condition of this Monarch that people will be inclined to regard as apocryphal any very sapient sayings attributed to him. It will be safe to allege, however, that His Majesty was much pleased by his first ride in a railway train; that he visited the Model Industrial Station, where the rearing of silk worms and the carrying on of other agricultural pursuits were displayed for his edification, and that he assented to the proposition that agriculture must be considered the basis of Korea's prosperity.

We take from the columns of the Seoul Press the text of the judgment delivered in the Yang case:—

"The accused Yang shall be acquitted of the charge.

"REASON.

"The charge against the accused is that, while attending to the business of the Tai Han Mai-il Shinpo, extra No. 5, K Chung Dong, West Ward, Seoul, in the capacity of General Manager, he, with the consent of one Bethell, a British subject and the then proprietor of the said newspaper, organised a project to receive at the said newspaper office subscriptions for the ostensible object of paying off the national debt of Korea; That to this end he published a special Notice in the Tai Han Mai-il Shinpo during the third month of the eleventh year of Kwangmu; That he has since been continually receiving subscriptions coming to the said newspaper office from different parts of the country; That, apart from this, the accused, in conjunction with the said Bethell and others, established the National Debt Redemption Central Society, with a view to collecting together the subscriptions received for the same purpose at quarters other than the said newspaper office; That the accused, as a principal controller of the affairs of the said Central Society, received there up to February, this year, a sum of yen 10,560.01 from quarters other than the said newspaper office; That in addition to the above sum, there are other sums with which the accused is concerned, namely, yen 27,500 lent by the said Bethell to one Martin, a French citizen, in September last year, and still remaining unpaid, yen 25,000 paid to the Collbran-Bostwick Company as the price of shares of a gold mining company on the 16th of January this year, yen 30,000 which was transferred from the Collbran-Bostwick Bank to the Chemulpo Agency of the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation at the beginning of February this year, and which was withdrawn from the said Agency between the above date and sometime in April this year for purposes not known, and yen 61,042.332 which was advertised in the Tai Han Mai-il Shinpo of April 30 this year as being deposited in the Collbran-Bostwick Company; That, as all these sums belong to the National Debt Redemption Fund, the total amount of money received by the accused to the account of the said Fund must have reached at least yen 143,542.33; That deducting from this total the above mentioned sum, yen 10,560.01, collected at the Central Society, the money which the accused received at the Tai Han Mai-il Shinpo office from the general public up to April 30 this year must have amounted at least to yen 132,982.32; That the accused, notwithstanding the above facts, made an untrue statement in the advertisement printed in the Tai Han Mai-il Shinpo that the money received at the said newspaper office up to April 30 this year only amounted to yen 61,042.332; and that by means of this untrue advertisement the accused had fraudulently appropriated to himself the balance of yen 71,939.988.

"The above facts adduced in the charge are not proved by evidence, and consequently the accused shall be acquitted, as stated in the sentence.

"Judge YU TONGCHAK.

The above certainly exonerates Mr. Yang, but it shows also that had not his position been defined on oath to be that of a mere subordinate the Court's judgment must have been different.

Sunday, October 4.

The Korean members of the Establishment Committee of the Oriental Development Company have left Tokyo for Kyoto, and after a short stay at Kyoto will continue their journey to Korea by the notable places in the Inland Sea. Interviewed on the eve of their departure by a representative of the Asahi Shinbun, they expressed themselves much gratified at the reception given to them in Japan, and at the kindness they had experienced from Japanese of all classes. But they had something more to say, and, coming from men in their position, it should carry great weight. They said that the Japanese in Korea are radically different from the Japanese with whom they came in contact in Japan. The Japanese of Japan are all courtesy and kindness; the Japanese of Korea, just the opposite. Not only do the latter assume a lecturing demeanour, but also they freely take Korean property, paying only petty compensation for it, and if the Koreans complain to the police, no notice is taken of them, while if they carry the case to the higher officials they are apt to fare even worse. This is practically what has been said by several foreign observers with the difference that these foreign critics, not being familiar with the Japanese at home, are disposed to take the Japanese abroad as a fair sample of the nation. It is a most unfortunate state of affairs, and certainly it can not have the approval of the Residency-General for a moment. The Korean members of the Committee express a hope that the operations of the Development Company will have a good effect, but it appears to us that such a remedy must be at best very partial. If these grievances really exist, and the fact can scarcely be altogether doubted, we imagine that the only effective course is to appoint a commission and empower it to visit the various localities for the purpose of considering and adjudicating all complaints preferred by Koreans against Japanese subjects. Unquestionably something ought to be done.

Tuesday, October 6.

The Hochi Shinbun has a telegram saying that although people have grown tired of the present Cabinet, it is not likely that any reconstruction will take place immediately. Nevertheless the various elements of the anti-Japanese party are working for the overthrow of the Ministry. The Cabinet's lease of life has certainly not been long enough to justify this tired feeling from a Western point of view. But the Koreans may well feel weary, considering that for quite two years their favourite pastime of political intrigue has been stopped.

The Mainichi Dempo continues to publish (under the heading of "the Residency-General as it appears to foreign eyes") a series of interviews with prominent foreigners in Korea. In our last issue we gave a précis of the opinions expressed by Dr. Scranton and Mr. Bethell, and we now do the same by an interview with Mr. Gale, author of the Anglo-Korean Dictionary, who has been 20 years in Korea, and who is well known for his work in connexion with the Young Men's Christian Association. He is represented as saying that since the establishment of the Residency-General the fact can not be denied that much greater uniformity has been effected in the Korean Administration. This is specially noticeable with regard to education. Before the days of the Residency-General there was nothing like systematised and connected work in this field, but now very marked improvements in that respect have been achieved. The Missionary schools, besides teaching the Bible, give instruction on the educational lines indicated by the Residency-General. "I have no hesitation in declaring openly that I consider the administration of the Residency-General highly beneficial for the Korean nation." Prince Ito's words and acts have given rise to more or less expression of discontent among the Koreans. But the fact is that the people of the Peninsula had fallen into a purely mechanical groove: their habit was to receive the office or the business handed down to them from their forefathers, and to discharge its duties in a purely perfunctory way, quite content if they satisfied the requirements of tradition, and altogether indifferent to improvement or progress. The Resident-General's administration has been directed towards rousing the people from this state of fatal lethargy; and it is inevitable that some dissatisfaction and discontent should be caused by such a change. But it is safe to say that a great reform is in process of being effected. At this point the interview becomes a little obscure, for Mr. Gale is made to say that the Koreans are not without initiative ability, but in proof of that fact he adduces the testimony of Mr. Taylor to the effect that Koreans make good workmen in mines, a line of argument which is scarcely consequential. He confirms Dr. Scranton's dictum, however, that if the Koreans are well taught they make good pupils. It is not to be denied, Mr. Gale continues, that many Koreans embraced the Christian faith for political reasons, but they are carefully taught by the missionaries that religion and politics are entirely distinct, except in so far as the former inculcates submission to the powers that be. It results that some of them turn their backs upon the faith or even become hostile to it. At a recent meeting of the missionaries of the various sects it was unanimously decided to give all legitimate support to the work of the Residency-General in the cause of reform and enlightened progress.

Wednesday, October 7.

The Mainichi Dempo continues to publish views obtained direct from foreigners in Korea on the subject of the Residency-General. Mr. Colbran is the last interviewed. He is quoted as saying that he has been 12 years in Korea, during which time he has devoted his energies to electric enterprises, waterworks and mines. He considers, that speaking broadly, the administration of the Residency-General in Korea is accomplishing good results. It is not too much to say that the antipathy entertained by some sections of the Korean people towards the Japanese is limited to the lower orders of the latter. Even the most anti-Japanese Koreans regard the Residency-General with respect and confidence. It is a common saying among foreign observers that Koreans are indolent, but whatever truth there may be in the statement, the blame is not to be laid at the door of Korean character but rather at the door of the evil Government under which the people have laboured for many generations. No people in the world could have failed to become indolent when subjected to such an administration. The speaker himself employs some 2000 Koreans, and has found that under the influence of due incentives they develop very useful qualities of mind and body. About 10 or 12 years ago the foreign engineers at one of the mines made an estimate that the work of ten Koreans was about equal to that of one Englishman or American. The latest estimates are that, at the worst, two Koreans accomplish as much as one foreigner, and sometimes seven may be reckoned equal to five foreigners. This is very good evidence of the capacity which the Koreans really possess. As for the insurgents still infesting some of the provinces, they have come to be mere bandits and robbers. The patriotic element among them has disappeared altogether. Mr. Colbran concludes by saying that he fully believes in the ultimate success of the Residency-General's administration.

There is a curious incident in connexion with the sum of 950,000 yen which was entrusted by the ex-Emperor in the year 1904 to a certain Mr. Min for the purpose of building a palace at Pyong-yang. Mr. Min went to Shanghai taking the money with him, and rumour had it that this large sum was intended to be devoted to some purpose other than the building of a palace. However that may have been, the ex-Emperor is now said to be anxious to get his coin back, and he has accordingly sent a Mr. Yi to Shanghai for that purpose. But Mr. Min refuses to hand over any of the money without an autograph order from the ex-Emperor.

Thursday, October 8.

Mr. Min Yonghwi, a member of the Privy Council and formerly Minister of State for Finance, has been nominated Vice-President of the Eastern Development Company.

The reigning Sovereign has paid a visit to the ex-Emperor to report events relating to the pilgrimage to the Imperial Tombs at Suwon on the 2nd inst. One seems to have travelled a long way beyond the times when a meeting between these two Poten-tates was regarded as something like a political calamity.

A law has been enacted in Korea for the better regulation of political parties and associations. Its provisions are said to closely resemble those of its Japanese predecessor, and Mr. Sun, Minister of Home Affairs, has been influential in getting it drafted.

MANCHURIA.

Saturday, October 3.

At the ceremonial opening of the Yalu Timber Felling Company's existence as a joint enterprise a spirit of friendly co-operation seems to have been displayed. The Company, it is stated, intends to largely extend the range of its operations and to seek new markets for its timber. The ceremony took place on the 25th ultimo.

It is stated by Japanese newspapers that the returns of the Customs House at Dairen amount to over 5 million yen for the past year, and are expected to increase as trade revives. This is very satisfactory, but the figure requires confirmation.

There is a rumour that the officials of the Supplies Department of the South Manchuria Railway have been trading on their own account, and selling Japanese tobacco and cigarettes at a lower rate than that ruling in the open market. The business men, having investigated this matter, are said to have found the rumour true, and are taking steps to check the abuse.

It is stated that, although the crops in Manchuria promised originally to be exceptionally fine this year, the heavy rains of early autumn have greatly marred the prospect, and the yield will not be more than 80 per cent. of the average. Inasmuch, however, as the area of cultivation has been extended, the actual quantity of cereals harvested will not be below the average. There have been such large exports of millet to the inundated districts in Southern China that the price of this cereal has risen some 40 per cent.

The Sungari River is reported to be falling without having done any serious damage.

Wednesday, October 7.

There appears to be quite a commotion in Mukden about the house-tax. It having been reported that the Peking Government had resolved to abandon the idea of levying such a tax, but at the same to punish those who had led the agitation against it, the Chinese Chamber of Commerce at Mukden is said to have issued a circular promising that the protection of the Chamber would be afforded to any households whose heads were subjected to punishment on this account. On the other hand Viceroy Hsu has made proclamation that as in all countries the expenses of keeping up a police force are defrayed by a tax levied upon households, which derived most advantage from the protection thus afforded, there shall be no exception to the rule in Mukden, and anyone attempting to obstruct its operation shall be treated as a malefactor. The Police Bureau also has issued a similar announcement. Thus the local authorities and the Chamber of Commerce are brought into direct conflict, but we may be pretty sure that some via media will be found, as the Chinese have always been noted for sensible compromises.

The traffic receipts of the South Manchuria Railway for the first half of the current year are said to have been 4,480,000 yen being an increase of 390,000 yen as compared with the corresponding period of last year. It is not stated whether the former sum represents gross income or net profits.

Thursday, October 8.

There is to be a meeting soon in Mukden of the commissioners of customs at various places in Manchuria opened to foreign trade. The object appears to be to make a final draft of regulations applicable for customs purposes to the most recently opened ports, namely, Dairen, Antung, Harbin and Manchuria. We do not clearly understand this classification but we give it as telegraphed.

It is stated that the smuggling of salt across the Russian frontier in the Amur region has assumed large dimensions, and that protests made by the Chinese authorities have hitherto received little attention at Russia's hands. A delegate is therefore to be sent to Vladivostok for the purpose of collecting facts preparatory to making still stronger representations.

Mr. Hashiguchi, Chief Managing Director of the new Sino Japanese Yalu Timber Company, is about to proceed to Mukden for the purpose of entering into arrangements to open the market for the staple in the Three Eastern Provinces. He will also negotiate terms of cheap transport for the timber over the South Manchuria Railway. He will then visit Peking, Tientsin, Shanghai and other important centres of trade in China to establish agencies, and he will finally come to Japan for the same purpose.

The floods in the valley of the Amur River and at Tsitsihar are said to be of disastrous dimensions. Viceroy Hsu has telegraphed to the Central Government asking for assistance, but his appeal does not appear to have elicited anything more practical than an instruction to get rid of the floods as soon as possible and to succour the people.

THE AMERICAN BATTLESHIP FLEET.

It is perplexing to know whether the great naval force now approaching these shores is to be designated "the American Fleet" or the "American Battleship Squadron." The former is the title chosen by the Naval Department in Tokyo, at the suggestion, it is said, of the United States Embassy, but inasmuch as only a portion of the American Fleet is in question we should have thought the latter appellation more appropriate.

One of the officers of the Kumano Maru, which has just arrived from Australia, gives some valuable information about the procedure adopted there in welcoming the Fleet. He says that only one half of each ship's company was allowed on shore at the same time. Nevertheless that meant over 5,000 men, and the stores, which do not appear to have made provision against such a contingency, were soon cleared out. This officer recommends that the stores in Yokohama and Tokyo should be more provident. He further says that the reception in Sydney erred on the side of too much ceremonial. Both officers and men would have been glad to receive more homely hospitality. In fact a great deal depends upon individual effort. If 2000 households make preparations each to receive 2 or 3 of the sailors, the men would be much better pleased, but how this kind of division could be effected the officer does not state. One valuable piece of news brought by him is that the Reception Committee paid the expenses incurred by the wives and daughters of the officers during the ladies' stay in Australia. There are, we believe, some 18 of these ladies now in Japan, and it would certainly be a graceful compliment to regard them as the guests of the nation.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

Friday, October 2.

The Asahi's telegrams say that on the 29th ultimo Mr. Bryan issued his answer to President Roosevelt's attack. It will be remembered that this answer has been somewhat deferred, and that the delay gave rise to many perplexities. He sets out by exposing the baselessness of the charges preferred against Mr. Haskell, and he denies that the Trusts are desirous of seeing him elected. If he be elected, his attitude towards the Trusts will not be one of throwing dust in the nation's eyes. He will deal with them in a spirit of partiality and equity. He goes on to say that at the last elections the sum spent by the Republican Party in one section of the field was larger than the sum spent in the whole field by the Democratic Party, and the employment of such a large amount renders very suspicious the relations between the Republicans and the Trusts. "If I lose one friend because of your attacks I shall feel that life is no longer worth living." (We translate this literally from our contemporary's telegrams, but it seems unlikely that Mr. Bryan should have made use of such a statement.)

The above telegram is from San Francisco. The same journal's New York telegrams say that President Roosevelt is about to carry out his intention of stumping the country in Taft's interest. Many influential Republican politicians are, however, opposed to this step. They say that Mr. Taft's merits and his popularity are quite sufficient for the contest against Mr. Bryan, and that if the President took the field as Mr. Taft's champion, it would only be a reflection on the latter's competence to stand alone. This view is largely supported and is attracting much public attention. The telegram from which we quote adds that the reply made on the 29th ultimo by Mr. Bryan to President Roosevelt is mainly abusive, and that the contest between the two has become an abortive wrangle. It is thought, however, that Mr. Bryan will be found to have gained strength from the fact that he has forced the President himself to enter the arena.

The above is the sum total of the latest information. Other Tokyo journals do not publish any telegrams on the subject.

Saturday, October 3.

President Roosevelt is said to have declared that Mr. Bryan's last open letter is not worthy of reply, being merely a string of abuse and personalities. It is said to be thought that this reticent attitude on the President's part has been prompted by the fact that public opinion was beginning to be more and more loudly expressed against lowering the dignity of the President's high office by engaging in such contests, and that the advice of Mr. Roosevelt's friends was tendered in the same sense. (We are quoting from the Fiji Shimpō's telegrams.)

Another view said to be making itself prominent is that the injury done to Mr. Taft's prospects of election by Mr. Hearst's disclosures is not calculated to be at all so severe as the suspicion suggested by the President's procedure that he is essaying to force a successor on the Electorate. Mr. Taft himself is said to be somewhat anxious lest the President's incursions into the field should be resented by the Republican Party as tending to impair the dignity of the Presidential office. It is therefore uncertain whether the President will carry out his half-announced intention of stumping the country in Mr. Taft's behalf.

he does decide to do so, his speeches will probably be impartial in tone, will avoid all reference to persons and will deal solely with political topics.

It must be confessed that to outsiders, whatever may be their reverence for the principle of popular representation which forms the keynote of the American polity, these quadrennial disputes about the election of the Chief Magistrate, with their collateral effect of disturbing the whole world of business, seem very little creditable to the system which begets them.

Sunday, October 4.

The latest intelligence is that Mr. Haskell has been as good as his word, and that he has instituted a suit for libel in one of the Oklahoma courts against President Roosevelt. This appears to be regarded in the States as a huge joke. The telegrams (Nichi Nichi Shinbun) add that Mr. Taft has reached Nebraska, which is the headquarters of the Democratic party, and has received most hearty welcome, to the no small annoyance of the Democratic leaders. The people have thus been given an opportunity of contrasting the clear and closely argued statements of the Republican candidate with those of the Democratic candidate. It is further said that President Roosevelt has decided to remove Mr. Hitchcock from the position of leader of the campaign, but no suitable substitute for him has yet been found. Meanwhile rumour has it that there are among the Republicans strong expressions of disapproval with regard to the President's attitude towards the Party.

Monday, October 4.

The Asahi as usual has long telegrams from New York describing the situation in the United States. As the date for the Presidential election approaches, the two Parties are naturally exerting themselves with ever increasing zeal. But each Party is said to be in great difficulty for funds. The expenses of elections hitherto have averaged about 2½ million yen for each Party, but not more than ½ of that amount has been obtained on the present occasion. In the election of 1904 the Republican Party is said to have spent 5 millions, and in that way it carried the day without difficulty. But on the present occasion it has only five or six hundred thousand dollars at its command, and naturally it is much embarrassed. This paucity of subscriptions is due of course to the attacks made by both Parties on the Trusts. The Republican Party has been particularly prominent in this respect, and naturally the Trusts are not going to put their hands in their pockets to secure the election of men avowedly inimical to them. This is the most important period of the election campaign, and where funds are to be found to meet the outlays during the next four weeks is a question which attracts much attention. The telegram goes on to speak of the removal of Messrs. Foraker and Hitchcock from their respective positions as chairmen of the Republican Committees, but this part of the message is somewhat obscure. It seems to indicate merely that the above removals are interpreted as plain evidence that the Party is determined to have nothing to do with the Trusts.

THE RAILWAY NATIONALIZATION QUESTION.

It appears that the audience given to five leading bankers by the Prime Minister on the 5th inst. was at the request of the bankers, not by desire of the Minister. The purpose of the bankers was to submit two propositions: first, that whereas the bonds hitherto paid over to the nationalised railways have been calculated at a minimum value of 90 yen, and whereas, although the market has improved of late, these bonds are still quoted in the eighties, the Government is invited to adopt some compensatory measure; secondly, that in order to guard against similar depreciation in the case of future issues of railway bonds, the Treasury shall record their specie value upon the back of the bonds. On both these points the railway companies desire to reach a satisfactory settlement with the Government. The gist of the Prime Minister's reply, in his capacity as Minister of Finance, is said to have been that, as the Government's financial policy has now been clearly elaborated and adopted, and as it provides not only that no loans shall be made by the Treasury during the next few years, but also that the sum devoted to redeeming the national debts shall be increased to 50 million yen, there can be no question that the bonds will appreciate steadily in the course of time. As to specially endorsing the specie value of these securities, that proposition can not be entertained, inasmuch as the bonds belong to the rank of consols, and can not properly be differentiated from other securities in their class. Seeing, however, that under the present financial programme the whole of the State's indebtedness will be wiped out in 37 or 38 years, there is little cause for uneasiness as to the price these securities will soon command in the open market. No country in the world is without a national debt, and, provided that the terms of re-payment be clearly understood and carefully complied with, the bonds representing such a debt never fail to have full value. One very important concession made by the Minister, if he is rightly reported by the Tokyo newspapers, is that instead of receiving the railway bonds at their market price for purposes of security they shall hereafter be received by the State at their face value. This, we presume, applies also to the State's bonds in general, and if so it is an announcement of much significance.

THE EXHIBITION.

Mr. Loomis, Chief of the Commission sent by America to Japan in connexion with the Exhibition, has been interviewed by a representative of the Mainichi Dempo at Yokohama. He said that as the news of the postponement of the Exhibition reached him only two days before his departure from San Francisco he was unable to form any definite opinion about the effect produced by the intelligence in America. It was possible, of course, that in the long interval between this and 1917 some other country might step in and organise an international exhibition, which would be an inconvenient incident for Japan. The United States, however, might be trusted to lend all possible assistance to the Japanese project. Mr. Loomis is quoted as saying that he considered the election of Mr. Taft to be beyond doubt, and that, as Mr. Taft and President Roosevelt are conspicuously pro-Japanese, the relations between the United States and this Empire can not fail to be of the most amicable character while such men are in office. Mr. Loomis naturally ridiculed as quite preposterous the idea of a rupture of friendly relations between Japan and America.

DR. SCRANTON ON KOREA.

Dr. Scranton, who has been for over 20 years in Korea, and whose profession has given him large opportunities of collecting material for sound opinions, has been interviewed by a representative of the Mainichi Dempo. He says that the Koreans are curiously backward in adopting foreign civilization. Happily there have been no serious epidemics of late years in the Peninsula, but that has not been due to hygienic measures, for of such things the average Korean has no perception whatever. It is a common thing for a Korean to mortgage for 50 or 60 yen a house and property worth 500. Then when the time comes for paying the debt, he is not prepared to do so, and he thinks that he has been robbed by the creditor forecloses. That is the true explanation of the charges so often preferred against the Japanese that they forcibly acquire Korean property at prices representing not a tithe of its value. Your Korean thinks that any monetary obligation can be met by merely assuming a supplicatory attitude, and if there is any country where two and two do not make four, but rather three or five, that country is Korea. The cunning of the Korean is something quite beyond the reach of the average Japanese or the average Occidental. In nearly all the cases which have hitherto occurred where a Japanese was accused of dishonest dealing, a Korean was to be found in the background. Prince Ito's utterances are invariably fair and liberal. If some of the Japanese officials do not live up to the standard set by their chief, that is practically inevitable. Speaking broadly, the effects of Japanese control have been vast improvements in sanitation, education and administration. Dr. Scranton is altogether optimistic as to the future of the Residency General. Of course some time and trouble will be needed before the goal is reached, and all the more importance attaches to reforms and progress. The Korean, through crafty and deceitful, is not unteachable. If he be well instructed, he repays the teacher's care. It is reported that many Koreans embrace Christianity for political reasons. That is probably true. But it is true also of United States citizens that they sometimes take to missionary work for the sake of its pecuniary results. Different men have different motives. The only thing to be done is that the missionaries should spare no pains to disabuse converts' minds of the notion that politics and Christianity have any connexion.

The same journal has interviewed Mr. Bethell and has found him altogether hostile to the methods of the Residency-General. He thinks that all trouble as to an insurrection might have been avoided had the disbanding of the troops been effected gradually, instead of being carried through at one coup. He compares the doings of Japan in Korea with those of England in Ireland, and he arrives at the conclusion that the Koreans are not unlike the Irish, strongly resentful of foreign interference and ready to rebel against it by every means. The average Korean is certainly inferior to the Japanese in progressive ideas, but in intellectual endowments he is not inferior. A great deal of talk has been heard about bribery among Korean officials, but if they accept bribes, they also treat the people with the utmost consideration in times of difficulty, whereas the Japanese adhere to the strict letter of the law in all eventualities. The Japanese troops are too careless in their operations. They do not distinguish properly between peaceful folks and rebels, but slaughter both indiscriminately, and the consequence is that for one enemy disposed of, they make two new foes. Another great fault of the Japanese is employing too many of their own people as officials in Korea. The main object should be to utilize the services of competent Koreans as far as possible. Mr. Bethell also compares Japan in Korea with England in India. He thinks that Japan in behaving is the Peninsula much as England behaved in Asia, but there is this to be taken into account, namely, that the Koreans of to-day are not such an inferior race as were the Indians of that time.

MR. LOOMIS.

Mr. Loomis, the Chief of the Commission which has arrived in Japan in connexion with the Exhibition of 1912, invited all the newspaper editors of Tokyo to the Imperial Hotel on the 4th inst. and delivered a speech of which a translation is given by the Japanese papers. He said that it gave him supreme pleasure to meet the representatives of the Japanese press. He himself had been closely connected with the press in former years, and during the time of his service in the Department of State it had been his duty to meet newspaper-men twice a day and exchange views with them. In the course of his journey from New York to San Francisco he had taken the opportunity to visit all the centres of commerce and industry in the States, and he had everywhere found strong approval of his mission and earnest hope that it would not only tend to develop commerce between the two countries but also to still further cement their friendship. Frequently since his arrival in Japan he has been asked his opinion as to the prospect of war between Japan and the United States. To such a question he had only one answer to make, namely, the thing was quite impossible. Everybody of position and everybody possessing common sense throughout the length and breadth of the United States laughed at the idea of such a combat, and he was able to affirm positively that the notion found currency solely in the columns of two or three insensate yellow journals and in the brains of their irresponsible clientele. America had been Japan's firm friend for the past 40 or 50 years, and sensible men in the United States did not grudge success and prosperity to any foreign country, still less to Japan, which they regarded with such amicable eyes. On the contrary, they rejoiced in the successes she had achieved and in the ability she had shown. To all inquiries as to the nature of the relations between the United States and Japan in the future, he did not hesitate to say that they would be at least as friendly as they had been in the past. When the project of Japan's International Exhibition was announced to the President, he had immediately expressed his sympathy and had caused to be laid before Congress a bill which received the unanimous approval of the 500 representatives of the American nation. In addition to this, the President had consulted Mr. Millet, a well known authority on art subjects, and Mr. Skieff whose knowledge of exhibition affairs was matter of public ken, and these two gentlemen had consented to be members of the Committee.

In answer to one of his guests, Mr. Loomis explained that while the Exhibition was the principal object of his visit, he would also observe Japanese commercial and industrial conditions, and if any of his hearers desired to consult with him on these subjects, he would be always at their disposal.

His Excellency Baron Oura, Minister of State for Agriculture and Commerce, entertained Mr. Loomis and the members of the Exhibition Committee at the Hama Detached Palace on the 6th inst. In welcoming his guests, the Baron alluded in warm terms to the friendly willingness shown by the United States to take part in the projected Japanese Exhibition, and more especially to the Washington Government's ready appreciation of the considerations which had dictated postponement. Mr. Loomis, in replying, dwelt, in very strong terms, upon the methods pursued by President Roosevelt, and, while apologising for a eulogy of the Chief Magistrate of his own country, he said he could not but declare his conviction that President Roosevelt's policy was uniformly animated by the noble precept of peace on earth and good will among men. If the action of the President in proposing the allotment of a large sum of money for the purposes of the Exhibition and the alacrity shown by Congress in voting the money had been exceptional, the fact must be taken as a proof that the friendship which had existed for 50 years between the two countries was still an active power, as solid and as well assured as ever. It was a traditional friendship, a historical friendship, and a sentimental friendship, and it held the two peoples together in indissoluble bonds.

THE BALKAN PENINSULA.

Numerous telegrams are reaching Tokyo about the important question now agitating Europe, but the situation appears to have reached a tolerably clear stage. Great Britain definitely refuses to recognise Austria's annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and Bulgaria's declaration of independence without the united consent of the Powers who originally pledged themselves to maintain the present status. This decision of the British Government is said to have received the support of all political parties without distinction. France and Russia are also of the same mind, and Turkey seems willing to entrust the case to the management of these three Powers. It is evident that if international agreements are not to be treated as waste paper, the line taken by England is the only one consistent with the terms of the Berlin Treaty. We find difficulty in deciphering Germany's attitude, but every one must appreciate the extreme difficulty of her position. Berlin telegrams speak as though Russia were likely to take this opportunity of raising the question of the Dardanelles and as though the French press were writing in a strain sympathetic with Austria. Probably a solution of the crisis will be found in another international congress, for it is not to be supposed that Europe would convert itself into a battlefield about such a matter.

TWO ENORMOUS LINERS will shortly be commenced at the shipbuilding yard of Messrs. Harland and Wolff, Belfast, for the White Star Company. To these the big Cunarders will have to yield the palm for size, though no attempt will be made to rival them in speed. The tonnage of the new vessels will approximate to 50,000—30 per cent. bigger than the Lusitania—they will have a length of 850 ft., and a speed of 20 knots,

MR. W. T. R. PRESTON.

Mr. Preston's second article in the National Review is, in the main, an eloquent protest against the tendency so commonly displayed to judge Japan by standards which her judges are not willing to apply to themselves. He deprecates the criticisms pronounced on the assistance given by the State to commercial, industrial and maritime development, and in earnest words he denounces the attempts made in some quarters to excite prejudice against this Far Eastern people, of whose pacific aspirations he is well assured so far as his opportunities warrant him in forming an opinion. He also reminds his readers that the desire of the Japanese to get their over-sea trade entirely into their own hands is not only natural but also would be felt by any nation, and while we (Japan Mail) are persuaded that this country's best interests would not be served by eliminating the foreign middleman, we can not for a moment deny that the desire to eliminate him is in no sense morally blameworthy. At any rate, the best way to secure him in his useful place is to cultivate friendship with the Japanese, and to remove as far as possible the wall that separates alien and native. Mr. Preston's article ends thus:—

I would conclude by appealing to those who may read this paper for justice to Japan. It is our duty as a nation and an Empire to leave nothing undone to silence the unjust prejudices that are being aroused against Great Britain's staunch ally in the Far East. It is certain that retribution in some signal form will overtake those responsible for these persistent efforts to create ill-will between the East and the West. There is a Nemesis that follows on the track of every wrong doing, whether the act is individual or national. No statesman can ward off the hour of that settlement. The question of the future is whether Japan, having accepted the ideas and institutions of the West, shall be allowed to remain the friend of the West, or be forced into bitter antagonism. The Christian world has too much at stake to survey with indifference the acts of any section of the community which may give occasion of an unfriendly spirit on the part of the East towards the West. We can ill afford to ignore the teachings of our own messenger—"Peace on earth and good will toward men."

Let us as a people, brought up in an atmosphere of British fair play, be loyal to the highest ideals of life in our attitude towards this Far Eastern ally. Until Japan abandons the high honour that so far has marked her dealings with the Christian West, we should courageously oppose the concert of interested forces which are so persistently endeavouring to place her institutions in a false light before the world.

From every standpoint, it seems to me, the paramount duty of the West lies in cultivating a spirit of generosity and appreciation towards Japan. As a race we shall then justify the claim that our Christian civilisation is founded on the principles of kindness, justice and honour. In doing so we may hope that the influence of this ancient nation, under its new conditions, shall not decline, but rather widen and increase, and believe that the Empire in its progress to the highest form of national life, may prove a brilliant example which Eastern Asia shall accept.

If I wished to enter the realm of prophecy, impressed as I am with the result of nearly a year's personal study of the conditions in the East, I would say that less than fifty years hence Japan will have a population of seventy millions; she will be in the receipt of a larger revenue than that of Great Britain to-day; her manufactured products will be finding a market everywhere throughout the globe, and the industrious masses of her people will be better fed and clothed than the same classes in many Western nations; her scientific institutions will be taking place with the best anywhere, and her students will be among the most attractive in existence; her people will be welcomed as the equals of any Western nation, and the motherhood of the nation will be acknowledged as the secret source of national greatness. From the national standpoint an individual Japan will be taking rank as one of the wealthiest countries in the world. Long before that period shall have been reached, the Western public will wonder that it ever listened to pessimistic forebodings concerning the future of Japan. The optimist will be justified—Japan will win. This is the nation that the West now can well afford to treat with magnanimity.

As to Mr. Preston's optimistic forecast, we should rejoice to endorse it, but, speaking frankly, it seems to us somewhat excessive. Nevertheless as we pen these words we can not but recall the fact that, if any publicist writing 50 years ago had ventured to predict for Japan to-day the place in the world she now occupies, he would have been treated with scorn—with much more scorn, indeed, than the most pessimistic observer can measure out to Mr. Preston's prophecy. Which of us will be rash enough to deny that the next cycle of Japan's career may not be productive of results as signal as those of the past cycle have been? Neither the prophet of evil, nor the profit of good has any exclusive claim to the divine afflatus. For the rest, Mr. Preston is to be sincerely thanked for utterances permeated by a noble spirit of English fairness and liberality, and calculated to help to stem the current of foolish anti-Japanese sentiment which finds unfortunate expression to-day in the columns of sensational journals.

We observe that the Japan Gazette reproduces the above article and criticizes it thus:

If any further evidence is required of this gentleman's incompetence to represent the Dominion Government, other than that afforded by his previous utterances, we beg to refer readers to this extravagant article. We may comment upon it in detail later, but in the meantime can only regret that Ottawa has been so misguided as to father an alleged trade representative with by such absurd expressions has brought down ridicule upon his honourable sponsors.

Mr. Preston will read this tirade with amusement. He will say:—"If any further evidence is required of the truth of my statement as to the anti-Japanese bias of certain English newspapers published in Japan, I refer to the Japan Gazette's extravagant animosity. The cap has certainly been put on by those it fitted."

JAPANESE POLITENESS TOWARDS FOREIGNERS.

We take the following from a leading article in the N.-C. Daily News, being persuaded that the advice of a generally friendly newspaper will be much more likely to receive attention in Japan than the strictures of a dozen publicists whose alleged good will comes out in infinitesimally small spots on a broad field of habitual detraction:—

Simultaneously with the desire for national peace with the world at large, we may hope to see the Japanese cultivating individually, whether abroad or on their own soil, the equally necessary habits of peaceful behaviour towards foreigners. With the close of the holiday season many people are returning from the picturesque land of Nippon, and it is regrettable to hear on every side tales of the marked deterioration within recent years in Japanese manners, as far as they affect those who seek the country's hospitality. No one wishes to magnify the rudeness of a single rishia coolie into a national failing, but the combined experiences of foreigners cannot be entirely ignored. The feeling that foreigners can with impunity be insulted or treated with scant ceremony appears to be growing in Japan, and is likely to assume uncomfortable proportions, until a few exemplary sentences in Court check the tendency among the lower classes. Some light is thrown on the extent of the evil by the fact that the Governor of one province has found it necessary to issue instructions regarding the behaviour to be observed towards foreigners in Japan. Many of the regulations are quaint and reflect much credit on the chivalrous instinct prompting them; but it is not difficult to understand the past experiences of foreign travellers when it is ordered "That foreigners are not to be hindered at play or when cycling, by throwing fragments of tile, stone or stick, or by arraying many children in the street." "That it is not to be supposed that a foreigner is bound to pay as much as is demanded." Fortunately Japan has given ample proof of her practical nature, and it should only require that existing shortcomings should be generally realized to secure their speedy elimination.

If visitors are to be regularly subjected to unpleasantness, there will eventually be a diminution of their numbers and a consequent falling off in the floating capital that they introduce into the country. The commercial elements in Japan would hardly contemplate this possibility with equanimity, and we may hope that the efforts of the Welcome Society will be directed to remove the impression that civilization is exercising an injurious effect upon Japanese chivalry.

This is a subject which has been discussed more than once in our own columns. We have not observed any loss of their wonted courtesy and politeness on the part of the Japanese as a whole, but neither have we observed any diminution in the number of children who greet the passing stranger with more or less insulting epithets, and who, when they are grown up, will probably translate into acts the spirit which animates their now thoughtless pastime. It is in the schools, we are fully persuaded, that the sole and the immediately effective remedy exists. If children were taught at school that politeness towards foreigners is an honour to Japan, has won for her very wide esteem and would, if replaced by comparative rudeness, reflect injuriously upon her reputation, there would soon be an end of all cause of complaint, and Japan would quickly recover the applause which she is now threatened with losing.

THE RUSSO-JAPANESE SOCIETY.

The Russo-Japanese Society entertained the new Russian Ambassador at the Koyokan on the afternoon of the 7th inst. Their Excellencies Count Komura and Baron Goto were among the members present. The chair was taken by Viscount Hanabusa, in the absence of Viscount Enomoto, who was too ill to attend. The Viscount made a short but eloquent speech in which he spoke of the tempest which recently obscured the firmament of Russo-Japanese relations and which had now been replaced by a brilliant blue sky. The advent of his Excellency, M. Malevitch, would impart greater effulgence to the sun of peace which now happily warmed the two Empires by its rays and would promote the development of amity and commerce. The Russian Ambassador, in replying, said that he most heartily sympathised with the noble purpose animating this Society, and that he felt it a great privilege to be elected an honorary member of it. The more fully the guiding principle of the Society, namely, the economic and moral rapprochement of the two countries, found expression in action, the greater would be the benefits derived by each, and the greater would be their respect for each other, as well as the smoothness of their political relations. This would lead to an interchange of products and manufactures, in other words to the growth of mutual advantage, by which means the Russo-Japanese Treaty would become a living reality. Therefore the aims of this Society might justly be described as patriotic. He understood that another object kept in view by the Society was to cultivate in Japan a knowledge of the Russian language and in Russia a knowledge of the Japanese language. Nothing could better conduce to the removal of misapprehensions. He regretted to say that whatever might be alleged as to Russian affairs not being understood in Japan, the case was worse with Japanese affairs in Russia. Doubtless the cause was to be found in the difficulties presented by the two languages. Nothing could be more desirable, therefore, than the growth of this Society and the attainment of the objects it had in view. In conclusion he wished to say how much it pleased him to have been welcomed that evening in Japanese fashion and how greatly during his short stay of three months in Japan he had learned to admire the natural charms of the country and the beauties of its ancient civilization. He concluded with an expression of much regret at the absence of Viscount Enomoto on account of illness.

"JAPAN IN MANCHURIA."

Mr. K. Arakawa, Instructor in the History of Japanese civilization in Yale University, has contributed to the Yale Review the first of two essays under the above heading. It is at once an interesting and an opportune publication. The learned author, who writes in a lucid style and marshalls his arguments skilfully, prefaces his main thesis by a clear explanation of the two fundamental conditions which have governed China's relations with foreign Powers; namely, first, a condition of unrestrained expansion in the interests of Western Powers and without regard to China's sovereignty; and, secondly, a condition of restriction when the Western Powers, "after more than 50 years' scramble among themselves at the expense of China," awoke to the necessity of confining each other's ambitions and preserving the status quo, for which purpose the principle of maintaining China's sovereignty and asserting the doctrine of the open door was elaborated. Mr. Arakawa writes in a very moderate tone, but he does not attempt to conceal his conviction that altruism had no appreciable share in bringing about this latter state of affairs. The United States, when she became an Oriental Power, was naturally anxious to secure a wide field for her commercial expansion, and consequently desired to introduce a regimen which, while restraining the creation or extension of spheres of influence exploitable only by their creators, would at the same time recognise the doctrine of the open door, to the great advantage of all newcomers. A Power not disqualified by any taint of previous aggression in the East was evidently best fitted to be the exponent of the fair-sounding new principle, and the other Powers welcomed it for the sake of its conservatism, which enabled them to keep what they had got. Out of these conditions was born Mr. Hay's "open-door" appeal in 1899, and there resulted a mixed state of affairs wherein some of the results of the old era of scramble survived amid the new era of self-restraint. Mr. Arakawa tells how Russia successfully insisted that Manchuria should be excluded from the regions affected by the new arrangement, but he does not mention the fact that Germany coöperated with her to effect this ear-marking process, the application of the open-door dogma to Shantung being at that time eminently undesirable from a German point of view. England, it may be added, essayed similarly to draw a ring-fence round her Yangtze-Valley reservation, and did in fact show by her treatment of Japanese steamers at Hankow that she meant to assert her exclusive titles without any silly sentimentality whatever about open doors or equal opportunities. Manchuria thus became, in the end, a specially interesting arena where the old and the new stood side by side simultaneously, and where there resulted a decidedly complicated situation. Mr. Arakawa expounds all this with mature knowledge and ample reference to records, so that to any one seeking an intelligent conception of the affairs of the Far East, his brochure is indispensable. We quote some of the concluding paragraphs:—

The coexistence of the new principles and old privileges appears nowhere in the Empire so incongruous, and in no other region attracts so much attention and causes so much misunderstanding, as in Manchuria. Events far more glaring, though they are continually taking place in China Proper, do not arouse half as much interest as minor rumours of similar import from Southern Manchuria instantly do. Consequently, Japan finds greater difficulties here than does any other Power elsewhere in the exercise of her treaty rights. Whence comes this remarkable difference between two parts of the same State? Without a doubt, one important reason is the singular notoriety which Southern Manchuria has acquired since 1900. It was concerning this region that a striking diplomatic struggle took place between Russia on the one side, and Japan, assisted by Great Britain and the United States, on the other, over the issue of the two principles of the new diplomacy. It was here that there took place the greatest war of modern times, which with all its stirring incidents, enthralled the world's attention for eighteen months. It was mainly the status of this region which the dramatic peace conference at Portsmouth discussed, and in connection with which the Japanese envoy succeeded in securing Russia's submission to the two principles. It was here that the Chinese Government effected a radical official reorganization, appointed unusually able governors, and opened many new ports to foreign trade. These and other great events of worldwide interest have followed one another within the space of eight short years, so that it is little wonder that Southern Manchuria has come to occupy a much larger perspective in the vision of the world than any other part of China.

Be it remembered, above all, that the interest of the intelligent public in this region is centered in the question of the principles of China's sovereignty and of the "open door," for all the large events which have been enumerated have revolved about them. And it is Japan that has exerted the greatest influence in inculcating these principles in relation to Manchuria, by insistence, sacrifice, victory and subsequent diplomacy. The result is that she has invited upon herself in Manchuria the most attentive scrutiny of the peoples of the world; it is here that they eagerly look for the realization of the principles so gallantly championed. Not being familiar with similar conditions which once characterized nearly the whole of Chinese diplomacy, and which even now form the main features of the practical foreign relations in China Proper, these people are chagrined to hear stories systematically misrepresentative of the modifying conditions in Manchuria which now control Japan as well as Russia. It is certain that the world's knowledge of Manchuria will become more accurate than it is; for the light which Japan, by her brilliant acts, has thrown upon this region and upon her own conduct therein, cannot now be dimmed, but will and must grow brighter.

Still another potent reason, among others, for Japan's difficult position, is not far to seek. Anyone in the place of some local foreign merchants in Niuchwang would probably act precisely as they have done; he would resent his own commercial loss, the cause of which he finds in Japan's policy, much more than he would appreciate any gain accruing from the same policy to his neighbors or to his nation. He would see no reason to speak of the latter, where he would proclaim the former. When, for a series of just and unjust reasons, he becomes a bitter opponent of the Japanese policy, he might even habitually misunderstand the situation, or else will fully misrepresent it. He might well be but little familiar with the complex relations existing between China and other nations, and hence his views would often be incomplete or perverted. To the material interest colouring his vision may be added his natural race feeling toward the Japanese, which becomes particularly strong in a person of his position. As was the case with the foreign merchants in Yokohama before the revision of the Japanese treaties in 1894, the Niuchwang merchant, instead of being the nearest and most reliable source of information, might be interested in disseminating systematically misleading reports about Manchuria. If Japan remains silent, as she actually does, and China encourages such reports for her own ends, they would become the only—though dangerous—source of information for the general public of the West. The result would be the singular spectacle of a few self-interested men and their friends guiding the opinion of the outside world on an important international situation.

All these circumstances have tended to create in Manchuria a situation of extreme delicacy for Japan. She failed, I am constrained to think, quickly to adjust herself to it, but sought to pursue a policy which, though entirely natural in her position, though it would be tolerated if it were in another part of China, and though it would have been considered even too hesitant in the days of the old diplomacy, was yet rather ill-timed for the Manchuria of to-day. In other words, after having inspired China with a keen consciousness of her sovereign rights in Manchuria, and having educated the world to look for the consummation of the two principles in this region, Japan found herself, after the Treaty of Portsmouth, in the presence of conditions inevitably modifying these principles; and, what is more, became involved in the administration of a policy which was framed as much in the spirit of these modifications as in that of the principles. Thereby she has likewise exposed herself to the interested criticisms of local merchants, who, knowing the foibles of her Manchuria policy, and under the encouragement of the Chinese authorities, employ every means to propagate news unfavourable to Japan. In a subsequent article we shall examine some of her conduct in the leased territory and along her railways in Southern Manchuria, and the anomalous situation in which it resulted.

A TRAVELLER'S STORY.

Mr. E. S. Little, "who has recently been on an extended tour in Manchuria and North China," contributes to the N.-C. Daily News some of his observations and from them we take the following:—

From Harbin there is a journey of about ten hours by rail to Kwangchengtze. The Russians pay practically no attention to this part of the railway system, and the accommodation is of the worst possible description. The second and third class compartments are absolutely impossible. No self-respecting man would consign his dogs to travel on the cars in which I made the journey. I took the night express, leaving Harbin at 9 p.m. and reaching Kwangchengtze at 7 a.m. next day, and reserved an entire first-class coupe in order to enjoy as much comfort as possible. There were no lamps in my compartment, and a wretched dip showed up the darkness for about three quarters of an hour and then spluttered out.

The Japanese Station at Kwangchengtze is about one third of a mile distant from the Russian terminus, but trains from both lines enter each station on a schedule arranged to fit in with each other. From this junction to Mukden the Japanese have put on a comfortable service of cars, though as yet there are no sleeping compartments. The first-class carriages are fitted with comfortably upholstered arm chairs, and I understand sleeping and dining cars are to be introduced shortly.

The city of Mukden has wonderfully improved during the past two years. Fine macadamized roads have been laid out, and they are traversed by trams and carriages, which, if they do not compare favourably with Shanghai, at any rate are far ahead of anything to be seen in Vladivostok. Japanese women of the demi monde class are not nearly as evident as a few years ago, and apparently have almost entirely disappeared. Moreover, Japanese troops and uniforms are seldom to be seen now, whereas a couple of years ago they were ubiquitous. It struck me forcibly that both Japanese and Russians are faithfully carrying out their engagements. Everywhere Chinese police and troops are in evidence as never before, and there seems every indication that the Chinese are now successfully exercising their authority. At Mukden there are several camps prepared on modern lines for the accommodation of foreign-drilled Chinese troops.

As far as food is concerned, on this portion of the line one might be travelling through a foreign country. The only food I could obtain was a piece of dirty black Russian bread, fished out by a peasant woman from a fly-ridden cupboard, and a bottle of beer.

One cannot speak in too high praise of the civility and attention shown by the Japanese employees to the traveller throughout the length of this line.

Although Russia has made good her agreement as to linking up the East-China and South-Manchuria Railways, it is always possible for her to effectually "head off" the through-passenger traffic by the latter. Nothing is needed except to make the Harbin-Kwangchengtze part of the journey so uncomfortable that no one will think of choosing the Manchuria route. In preference to the Vladivostok. That is what seems to be now going on, but, of course, there may be some special and temporary reason for what Mr. Little experienced.

A GALE was experienced in Shidzuoka on Oct. 1st. Seven boats in the harbour were destroyed.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, October 2.

The Department of Agriculture and Commerce has published its second estimate of the rice crop for this season. The figures are these:—

	Koku.
First estimate .....	53,561,287
Second estimate .....	52,315,636

It will thus be seen that the reduction due to the gold snap which succeeded the 210th day is very small. This second estimate carries us down to the 23rd of last month. Last year, which was considered a bumper season, had a crop of 49,052,065 koku, being thus 6.6 per cent smaller than the estimated crop for this year; and as the yield of an average year is 45,382,977 koku, this year's promises to be 15.2 per cent above the average.

We read in the Nichi Nichi Shinbun that the visit of Mr. Hiraoka, Chief of the Saghalien Administration, to Tokyo is for the purpose of submitting to the Government plans and estimates aiming at the organization of a company, after the manner of the South Manchuria Railway Company, for the development of the northern island. The Governor is accompanied by Mr. Ozaki, a well known engineer, and the plan is to raise a sum of 20 million yen for three objects, all connected with coal mining; namely, some 4 millions for the construction and improvement of two harbours—Korsakoff and Tomariro—and the remainder for acquiring a fleet of ocean carriers and for working the mines and building the railways. A statement which we recently reproduced from the Japanese press that Maula on the south-west coast, is not accessible by railway, though it is the only perennially ice-free harbour in the island, seems to be contradicted by the above project. Mr. Hiraoka thinks that if the Government can not assist this project, it is well worthy of being taken up by private enterprise alone.

Saturday, October 3.

A Tokyo journal says that the reforms made in the organization of the Tokyo Railway Company represent a saving of only 60,000 or 70,000 yen yearly. One of the Directors is quoted as advocating the sectional system in determining the new fares. He points out that a uniform fare is rational only in places where the distances to be covered are small, or where the least valuable unit of exchange does not permit sectional charges. The latter is the case in America, where the smallest coin is the 5-cent (10-sen) piece, which obviously could not be employed for fixing tram-fares by distance. This Director, Mr. Nezu, recalls the days of the horse-trams in Tokyo, when the system was sectional. It was then shown by experience that one half of the customers of the line were short-distance riders. Consequently it seems probable that if the Company, in adopting the sectional system, reduced the fare for the first section, it might find itself a loser instead of a gainer. Mr. Nezu appears to think that the Company will nevertheless try the experiment, and then, should the result be unsatisfactory, seek permission to make another revision. We are of the opinion that such a course would not be well advised. Every possible effort should now be made to reach finality at once.

Sunday, October 4.

The Shoko-konwa-kai (Society for Friendly Discussion of Commercial and Industrial Affairs) held its usual meeting in Tokyo on the 3rd inst., and among those present were their Excellencies Marquis Katsura and Barons Goto and Oura. Mr. Hamaguchi, President of the Toyokuni Bank, expressed the great satisfaction of the Society in being honoured by the presence of three members of the Cabinet, and in thus obtaining an opportunity for a free interchange of views between the business men and officialdom. Marquis Katsura replied briefly that, although he had previously been present on several occasions at meetings of financiers, and although he had had much intercourse with individual men of affairs, this was the first time of meeting the latter in their collective capacity. The reports do not state whether any further speeches were delivered, and we infer that significance attaches to the meeting chiefly as an indication of the close relations established between the present Cabinet and the business men.

Baron Takahashi is quoted as saying that the emergence of the country from the period of depression is a natural result of the facts (1) that money has become comparatively easy, the banks having abandoned their attitude of extreme caution; (2) that the rice crop is plentiful; (3) that the boycott in South China is practically at an end; (4) that trade conditions throughout the world seem to be improving, and (5) that in a few weeks that great disturber of commerce and industry, the Presidential election in America, will be over. Referring to the talk heard in some circles about a reduction in the bank rate of interest, Baron Takahashi says that as the depression disappears the demand for money will grow more pressing, and therefore the banks would not be justified in immediately granting large accommodation at low rates. The tendency of the Japanese people is to run to extremes. When things look well, speculators yield to the impulse of exultation, and when a cloud appears on the horizon, they at once interpret it as the harbinger of a hurricane. It is the duty of the banks not to minister to this tendency.

The Shogyo Shimpo has a leading article on this subject. On the whole it endorses Baron Takahashi's view that it would be premature on the part of the Bank of Japan to lower its rate of discount yet. The Bank is still, as its accounts show, obliged to issue 20 or 30 million yen at the end of every month over the legal figure, and the balance of trade can not yet be said to have swung in the right direction. As for the various banks, though most of them have reduced their rate by one or two rin daily, they still charge from 2.4 sen to 2.5 sen, and they anticipate a large demand for money when better times come, as seems now likely.

Mr. Nakanokoji, Vice-Minister of the Department of Communications, speaks of a reform in the present system of telephones, namely, limiting the number of messages which one subscriber may send in a day, and reducing the fixed monthly charge. It is thought that under the present system the wires are monopolised largely by people who treat them as a sort of toy, and discuss patterns with milliners or exchange compliments with friends. The telephones are bad enough as it is, and if, in addition, restrictions are to be imposed upon their free use, their last state will be worse than their first.

Everything goes to show that the feeble agitation fomented by some members of the Municipal Assembly and by persons directly interested in the Exhibition question will soon subside. It is obvious that the citizens of Tokyo appreciate the inexpediency of attempting to hold two exhibitions in the same place within such a short interval.

The Hochi Shinbun says that the engineers of the Home Department have just concluded a minute inspection of the roadways, rails, rolling-stock, power stations and other accessories of the Tokyo Railway and have handed in a minute report. This is supposed to be connected with the Company's pending application for a revised schedule of fares.

Tuesday, October 6.

On the 5th inst. the Prime Minister invited to the official residence five of the leading bankers, namely, Baron Shibusawa and Messrs. Sonoda, Hayakawa, Toyokawa, and Hara, and informed them that the Government had decided to hand over the nationalization railway bonds during the years 1909—1910. In carrying out this operation the greatest care will be exercised to utilise favourable opportunities. The bonds will not be handed over en masse, but in installments suitable to the occasion, and the National Debt Redemption Fund will be always available for buying up the bonds should they be offered for sale in such quantities as to depress the market. By adopting such a system the Cabinet does not think it necessary to specially endorse the bonds, since that would place them in a category by themselves, and it is not advisable thus to distinguish one class of State securities as compared with the others. The Premier is said to have entered into very minute explanations of the Government's programme, and Baron Shibusawa, representing the banks, is reported to have expressed himself as satisfied with the project. The Kokumin Shinbun in publishing this intelligence is much gratified to think that the troublesome problem of the railways must now be dismissed from the realm of controversy.

The Kokumin has an article quoting the views expressed in connexion with Japan's new financial programme by The Times, the Nation, the Statist, the London and China Express and the San Francisco Chronicle. The last mentioned paper observes that Japan has given a good many surprises to the world, and this latest is not the least striking.

Tokyo newspapers state that the Government has decided to change the system of uniform charges for telephones into a system based upon the frequency or infrequency of the instrument's use by households where a machine is installed. This is no doubt in accordance with strict justice, but it will add very largely to the inconvenience of the present imperfect system. The habit to-day is that people who are without a telephone utilise the instrument installed in the house of some accommodating neighbour, and thus the effects of the Government's dilatoriness in extending the installations are more or less mitigated. But when the system of proportional charges comes into vogue, people will naturally seal their telephones against use by any except the members of their own household.

Thursday, October 8.

Judging by the records of the Tokyo Clearing House, trade is certainly beginning to revive. Last April seems to have been the point of greatest depression. The operations of the Clearing House in that month fell to 211 millions, whereas the average for previous months had been 230 millions. Of late, however, there has been a marked recovery, as the following figures indicate:—

	This year.	Last year.	Difference.
July.....	287,045,000	275,831,000	+11,214,000
August....	251,027,000	239,575,000	+11,452,000
September.	242,171,000	230,208,000	+11,963,000

Baron Matsuo, President of the Bank of Japan, has been interviewed by a representative of the Chuo Shimbun, and has expressed himself in much the same terms as those recently used by Baron Takahashi with reference to the economic situation. He thinks that the winter is over and that the spring has fairly set in.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Monday, October 4.

The upward movement on the Stock Exchange was somewhat checked on the 3rd inst. owing doubtless to profit-taking sales. Even supposing that the tendency is destined to be of long duration—a questionable hypothesis in view of the general situation—it is natural that there should be pauses from time to time owing not only to profit-taking sales but also to selling short by speculators who seek to catch these periodical fluctuations. It will be observed, however, that the shares of the Tokyo Stock Exchange continue to leap upward. This is an infallible sign of the briskness of the market, and in point of fact no less than 100,000 shares changed hands on the 5th inst., which is almost a record.

Tuesday, October 6.

The Tokyo Stock Exchange opened weak on Monday, but in the afternoon session an improved tone was created by a marked appreciation of the Exchange's shares and by a substantial rise in the quotation for the Tanko Kisen's scrip. Prices were irregular at closing, but the tendency seems to be in favour of buying.

Wednesday, October 7.

The 6th instant was a day of veritable debacle on the Tokyo Stock Exchange. All quotations tumbled down in a marked degree, the shares of the Exchange itself falling no less than 6.9 points. The only explanation is that profit-taking sellers were numerous, the rapid appreciation of the previous few days offering a chance too tempting to be resisted. The speculators for a fall were also very strong. A big fight is expected soon between the bulls and the bears, but no one predicts how it will eventuate. What is certain is that transactions have become much more numerous than they were last month, and that the reasonable inference is in favour of appreciation.

Thursday, October 8.

The debacle continued on the 7th instant, though not in such a marked degree as on the preceding day. No reason is perceptible except anxiety to gather a small profit by selling shares bought before the recent rise. During the past few months the market followed a three-day rule, namely, one day of appreciation, one of suspense and one of decline. This rule seems to be now maintained with, however, a lengthening of the epochs from one day to three. To-day should therefore see the end of the debacle. All transactions—or at any rate the great bulk of the transactions—since last fall have been of the saya-tori description, namely, buying for a rise or selling for a fall on extremely small margins, the smallness of the latter being a measure of speculators' confidence. The margin is now increased, but the timid habit remains en evidence. A feature of yesterday's debacle was a drop of some 7 points in the price of Takarada shares.

Friday, October 9.

The fall of prices continued on the 8th instant. A very sharp decline in the Tanko's quotations set the example, and things would have been worse had not news arrived that Osaka was firm. There appears to be a general feeling of uneasiness, owing to the European complication and the shock given by the abolition of the pari-mutuel. It is felt that if the race-clubs go under, losses will be suffered so heavy as to re-create a season of depression. There is no distinct impression that the Balkan question will lead to war, but its bad effect on public securities is inevitable. Moreover the banks are said to have adopted an attitude of increased caution in view of the too sudden rise which recently took place on the Exchange. All these things combine to force the hands of weak holders, and selling is the order of the day. We append the quotations for December delivery:—

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

A German Prince, whose name we can not clearly decipher, is reported (Hochi Shimbun's telegrams) to have published a lengthy statement in Berlin, urging that as the trade and manufacturing interests of Germany, Russia and England in the Far East find their chief competitor in Japan, a union should be formed between the three Powers. Presumably he defines what kind of union is contemplated and how it could possibly be operated, but the telegram is silent as to these vital questions. He further complicates the matter by saying that a collision between German and Russian interests in Shantung is inevitable. We, at this end of the world, have not yet been able to recognise the existence of any special Russian interest in Shantung. Kiaochow and Port Arthur were once not unconnected, but that is a thing of the past.

It has hitherto been very difficult to find exact figures for the losses of life incurred by Japan during the war. One perplexing element is the casualties among troops at home. Taking all these into account, and including Formosa in the list, the following numbers are now given:—

Killed in battle .....	48,428
Died of wounds.....	37,218
Total .....	85,646
Wounded and recovered.....	142,108
Sick " " .....	210,696
Total recovered.....	352,788
Grand total.....	438,434

His Excellency the German Governor of Kiaochow has arrived at Port Arthur and inspected 203 Metre Hill, East Keekwan-chang and the other places made celebrated by the War. In the absence of the Japanese Governor-General, who is now in Japan, Herr Truppel was received by the Japanese Civil Governor, Mr. Ouchi, who gave a banquet that evening, 5th inst., in his honour.

For some days past there has been an undercurrent of excitement in Tokyo with reference to the relations between Japan and the United States. It will be remembered that before Viscount Aoki's recall from Washington, he was believed to have proposed an agreement by which the United States was to grant the right of naturalization to Japanese subjects, and Japan in return was to consent to the imposition of restrictions upon the going of her people to the States. On the evening of the 30th ultimo a rumour reached the Japanese capital to the effect that this agreement had been concluded, and it was even believed that this story had some influence in driving up stocks on the following day. Yesterday morning, however, the Nichi Nichi Shimbun very justly pointed out that the privilege of naturalization in a foreign country is not by any means a boon to be desired by a loyal Japanese subject. Naturalization in America means denaturalization in Japan. In other words, a Japanese abandons his allegiance to his own country for the sake of taking on him the duty of allegiance to a foreign country, than which no act can be less patriotic. It does not consist with the dignity of the Japanese Government to consent for such a privilege.

Our readers will learn with profound satisfaction that Marquis Inouye has so far recovered as to be contemplating return to Tokyo towards the middle of the month.

The Tokyo Municipality has decided that no geishas shall be employed as waitresses at the reception given to the officers and men of the Battleship Squadron. Dances by geishas will form a feature of the entertainments, but the waiting will be entrusted entirely to the hands of men-servants, and thus the unsightly spectacles witnessed in the Hibiya Park on the occasion of a previous reception will be avoided. This will be a terrible blow to the geishas, and will of course greatly lessen the enjoyment of the guests, but that the Tokyo Municipality is wisely advised there can, we think, be no second opinion.

On the other hand, the condition of Field-Marshal Marquis Nodzu shows no sign of improvement. He has been visited by the Emperor's chief physician, Dr. Saigo, whose report is very discouraging.

We regret to say that Marquis Nozu's condition has become very serious and that the end may be expected at any moment. The Emperor has conferred on him the Grand Order of Merit.

YACHTING.

Local yachtsmen attempted to sail races on Saturday afternoon but the weather flatly negated their plans. The wind was light about easterly, when they started but it soon dropped and at length a stark calm prevailed so that none of the yachts could possibly finish in time. Most of them were towed home.

Of the yachts over 22 rating, Mary, Namua, Asagao, and Aborigine started; and of the 22 raters Elsa, Pele, Winsome, Edna, the first to go over the long and the other the short Widow Booy course; and eleven Larks went out, only to be hung up with the rest of the fleet.

THE DEBT REDEMPTION CASE.

THE acquittal of Mr. YANG KI TAK by the Seoul Court has evoked public comments calling for a word of reference. There is no occasion to dwell long on the case itself. It is very simple. The accused, in his capacity of assistant manager of the newspaper, Dai Han Mai Il Sinpo, took part in publishing in that journal an advertisement declaring the paper's willingness to receive subscriptions to a fund intended for the discharge of Korea's debt to Japan, and promising that, in conjunction with a bank or company enjoying public credit, the money thus received should be dealt with in a suitable manner. Subsequently the Public Procurator of the Seoul Court obtained information which led him to believe that a part of this money had been either embezzled or diverted to purposes not contemplated in the original scheme and not having the sanction of the subscribers. Proceedings were therefore instituted against YANG, and the preliminary tribunal remanded him for trial. It transpired, however, in the public proceedings, that Mr. YANG had acted under orders and that he had neither responsibility for, nor even cognizance of, the measures taken by his employer for the disposal of the subscribed money. He was therefore acquitted.

The comments which this case has provoked can not be dismissed thus briefly. They are to be found in a criticism published by the Japan Chronicle, which the German organ of Yokohama reproduces with the prefatory remark, "a leading article every word of which we cordially endorse." The article, having set out by announcing "the triumphant acquittal" of Mr. YANG, turns to Mr. BETHELL, who was editor and proprietor of the Dai Han Mai Il Sinpo at the time of the Debt Redemption project. Any advocate of Mr. BETHELL must at once devote himself to furnishing some explanation of the strange fact that he, Mr. BETHELL, became the voluntary depository of money subscribed for a purpose obviously doomed to failure. The Japan Chronicle addresses itself at once to this phase of the story. It alleges that, "as in despite of Mr. BETHELL's views on the policy or probability of the scheme, contributions still continued to come in, he was perforce practically compelled to become a trustee of the fund." Where were these views expressed by Mr. BETHELL? Certainly not at the trial in open court. What passed there was this:—

Judge.—For what reason had the Dai Han Mai Il Sinpo joined the movement?

Mr. Bethell.—Because money had been sent to it without any solicitation.

Judge.—The Court had been led to understand that the paper had at first refused to receive subscriptions, but that it had afterwards joined the movement. Was that so?

Mr. Bethell.—The paper had not joined anything. Only people had sent money to it.

Judge.—Had the witness thought that the project was practicable? What ideas had he had on this subject?

Mr. Bethell.—Didn't know.

Judge.—No idea?

Mr. Bethell.—Didn't know.

The record of this very marked reticence on Mr. BETHELL's part was lying before the editor of the Japan Chronicle when the latter wrote:—"As in despite of Mr. BETHELL's views on the policy or possibility of the scheme, contributions still continued to come in, he was perforce practically compelled to become a trustee of the fund." There has not been one jot of evidence as to Mr. BETHELL's views on this subject. He studiously refrained from stating them in Court. All that is publicly known is that he advertised his willingness to receive funds for a purpose which he must have well understood to be futile. No one is so shallow as to imagine that had the Dai Han Mai Il Sinpo, instead of announcing its readiness to become the depository of money, advertised its resolve not to receive subscriptions, it would have been troubled with any further inflow of funds. The Japan Chronicle, in its anxiety to whitewash Mr. BETHELL, not only ascribes to him sentiments which he himself declined to acknowledge, but also depicts him in the ridiculous light of publicly advertising his willingness to assist in a scheme which he knew to be chimerical.

The Japan Chronicle, with the "cordial endorsement" of its German colleague, further writes:—"The preliminary Court decided that Mr. YANG was guilty. On what grounds did it base this decision? The Court before which the public trial was held, which presumably had under investigation all the evidence produced in the preliminary Court, decided that Mr. YANG was innocent." The Editor of the Japan Chronicle ought to know, and must know, that preliminary tribunals do not pronounce men "guilty." They determine merely whether a prima facie case exists. Moreover, when the editor of the Japan Chronicle wrote the above, he had lying on his desk a record showing that to Mr. BETHELL's evidence alone the accused owed his acquittal, and that Mr. BETHELL's evidence was not given at the preliminary examination.

The Japan Chronicle, with the "cordial endorsement" of its German colleague, further writes:—"The trial has resulted in the complete clearing of Mr. YANG and of Mr. BETHELL from the charge which directly or indirectly was preferred against them. * * * We have no doubt that Mr. BETHELL's business training was of considerable service to the central body raising the fund in preventing irregularities such as might otherwise have occurred with inexperienced persons." When the editor of the Japan Chronicle penned these statements he had before him a record showing that of the funds entrusted to Mr. BETHELL, the latter had invested 25,000 yen in mining shares and had lent 27,500 yen to a hotel-keeper on bonds not specifying any security, which money the borrower had used to construct a concert room, to buy a cinematograph, to extend the premises, to build a bathroom, to set up a heating engine and to procure furniture. Grown-up men are actually invited by the Japan Chronicle to agree that such an employment of trust funds was legitimate, and that "the business training" of the person so employing them "was of considerable service to the central body in preventing irregularities which might otherwise have occurred with inexperienced persons."

CHINA AND JAPAN.

SHANGHAI continues to publish telegrams from London giving the gist of leading articles in British journals about the Fakumen affair. We can not but speculate with curiosity as to the source whence comes the periodical impulse that sets our English contemporaries' pens moving. There has not been any incident within the past week or ten days such as should have re-directed London's attention to this problem—no interchange of views between Peking and Tokyo, so far as the public know, nor any abnormal happening of any kind. It looks as if the British and Chinese Corporation had some self-acting mechanism which develops a sudden access of activity at fixed intervals. The Asahi Shimbun is amused by the spectacle of two groups of British capitalists contending with one another; the group which, having lent several tens of millions of yen on the security of the South-Manchuria Railway, must naturally be averse to the depreciation of the security by severe competition, and the group which is struggling to earn a profit by financing and building the Hsinmintun-Fakumen road. That is a phase of the problem which has already been alluded to in these columns. It is certainly interesting, but not so interesting, we think, as China's attitude at the present moment. The public know that fully three months have elapsed since the Japanese Government made to Peking a proposal which would have served the double purpose of equipping the Fakumen region with railway facilities and saving China from the reproach of violating her international agreements. But Peking has made no move either of consent or of dissent. It has hung up the question completely. Why? No one can have any difficulty in answering the question. By maintaining an absolutely quiescent attitude China stands to win in every case. If Japan loses the day and consents to allow the line to be built, then China will gain both materially and diplomatically. Materially, because the competition of the Hsinmintun-Fakumen road, subsequently to be carried on to Tsitsihar, would largely diminish the value of the South Manchuria Railway. After a fixed term of years China becomes entitled to buy back the South-Manchuria Railway at a reasonable price. It is a property of great importance. The Japanese Government has put 100 million yen into the enterprise; the Japanese public have subscribed 20 millions, and foreign capitalists will by and by have lent 80 millions. Here then are 200 millions, and, if the line be yielding good returns when the date arrives for repurchase, China must either put her hand deeply into her pocket, or choose the unwelcome alternative of leaving the property in Japanese possession. Every thing that tends to impair the line's prospects makes therefore for China's advantage, and she naturally desires to see the British and Chinese Corporation successful, her purpose being to push the road on to Tsitsihar so soon as the Fakumen difficulty is removed. Diplomatically she would gain because the binding effect of all her engagements with foreign States would be lessened from the moment of running a coach and four through the Peking Treaty of 1905, and because she would have won a victory over Japan. If, however, Japan holds firmly to her rights, and if the railway is not built, then a decidedly sore feeling will be created in England, where the agents of the British and Chinese Corporation have so cleverly manipulated the press. China, therefore, stands to win in all eventualities. She has only to sit quiet and watch others pull the chesnuts out of the fire for her. Of course, we do not intend to suggest that she wants to see trouble between Japan and England. But she would assuredly like to see a rupture of the bond which holds them so closely together at present. During more than half a century China has successfully protected herself by taking advantage of the mutual jealousies of the Western Powers. Nothing accords less with her convenience than the alliances and ententes that have become the fashion of late years. She does not believe in the sincerity of the allies towards herself, and she would greatly prefer to revert to the status quo ante. Thus a rift in the lute of Anglo-Japanese friendship would suit her excellently, and accordingly she watches this Fakumen struggle with calm eyes, appreciating fully that inaction is her shrewdest course in the circumstances. It is well, therefore, to remember that responsibility for the delay rests solely with her, and that she has pigeon-holed Tokyo's proposals submitted three months ago, her game being to let others do the fighting for her.

CONSTITUTIONAL.

THE editor of the Japan Financial and Economic Monthly, in his issue for July, which number, as usual, contains much valuable information and many useful statistics, writes:—"It is indeed a strange phenomenon in a constitutional country that the fate of a Cabinet regarded favourably by members of both Houses should be decided by the attitude of the so called Elder Statesmen." This criticism suggests the question, what is a constitutional country? Where is the universally recognized model to be found? Constitutional ideals as followed in Germany do not elicit unqualified approval in England, and British constitutional ideals fall somewhat short of American. There is no hard and fast rule, no fixed standard. The editor whose language we have quoted is very well acquainted with his country's history, and he therefore knows that Japan, throughout her whole career, has been remarkable for eclectic discernment. She has never hesitated to borrow freely from foreign States, but she has seldom failed to improve upon what she took. Her position is now unique with regard to this question of a constitutional system. Before introducing it, she called into existence organizations previously unknown among her people, namely, political parties. It would, however, have been a violation of all prudence and all reason to at once entrust the administration of State affairs to those parties, consisting, as they did for the most part, of men wholly without the experience needed for discharging official duties. A period of probation was evidently necessary, and to ensure that the period should be sufficiently long, the statesmen who had steered the country through all the vicissitudes—domestic and foreign—of the Meiji era, had to assume towards political parties an attitude of apparent hostility. It was thus that the terms Seifu-to and Min-to came to be used, the object of their coiners being to produce an impression that the Government, in its anxiety to retain control of the sweets of office, treated as enemies the representatives of the people (min), and it was thus that a gulf gradually grew between the Meiji statesmen and the political parties, so that instead of a polity like that of Great Britain, where three elements alone are apparent, namely the throne and two political parties, Japan's body politic came to have four elements, namely, the above three plus a small coterie of Elder Statesmen known as the Genro. No one will venture to contend, we presume, that any individuals in Japan to-day can claim to be regarded as greater administrators than these Genro, and no one will be disposed to deny that the loss of their counsels would be a heavy blow to the country. Speaking from the foreign standpoint, we do not hesitate to assert that confidence in the conduct of this Empire's affairs is greatly strengthened by knowing that the Throne and the Cabinet have access to the advice of a body of grey-headed statesmen whose ability has been proved in many important crises. Does it follow that Japan's interests would be better served by the elimination of this unique band of councillors and by entrusting her affairs solely to the Seiyu-kai, the Shimpo-to and the other political sections? We are inclined to think that Japan might safely have courage to modify her copy of Occidental Constitutions by introducing an element of her own creation, the Genro.

JOURNALISTIC JUGGLERY.

THAT devotee of truth, the Japan Chronicle, has been delivering itself, in its own peculiar fashion, of sundry side-issues alleged to arise out of a recent criticism in these columns of Dr.

WALLACE's article on the ideals furnished by the nations of the world. That article amounts, in effect, to the proposed dismemberment of the British Empire for the benefit of Germany and any other Powers who may possess what is legitimate for them but not for England—a desire for expansion. The Japan Chronicle, with its usual intent to mislead, describes it as an article "to show the folly of those who are now endeavouring to bring on a war between England and Germany." It is a simple matter thus to describe an article for the gulling of those who have not read it. But that is the Japan Chronicle's mi-tier. The Kobe journal is perfectly aware, as are all who have read Dr. WALLACE's article in full, the Japan Herald's misrepresentation of the same, and our criticism of both, that with Dr. WALLACE's (or anybody else's) efforts to avert a war between England and Germany we are in the fullest sympathy. It is Dr. WALLACE's method for averting such a war, coupled with his unjust aspersions on the integrity and intelligence of his own countrymen, and his equally unjust discrimination against British wars as compared with those waged by other nations, to which we take exception. No Englishman worthy the name could read Dr. WALLACE's article without being moved either to indignation or to mirth—according to the degree of weight he considered might attach to the writer's opinions.

Dr. WALLACE's method of avoiding war with Germany is, in brief, to give away the British Empire. The recipients of this free gift are Germany, in the main, and any other Powers "with a legitimate desire for expansion." In this way, according to Dr. WALLACE, what he is pleased to call the "censure" of other Powers might be allayed. 'Censure,' we submit, is both ludicrous and offensive. Ludicrous, because on Dr. WALLACE's own showing it is a case of the proverbial pot and kettle: offensive, because Dr. WALLACE, an Englishman, is representing other nations, exalted on pedestals of righteousness, as passing condemnation on one of themselves for actions which all alike have done. This is after setting out to describe the ideals of nations, including territorial expansion, as false! We, the citizens of the British Empire, are to give away our vast possessions—bought with a price, bought with blood, governed as never an Empire was since the world began—to gratify the 'false ideals' of other nations! Charming is it not, logic and all? Dr. WALLACE is quite captivated by the idea: so is the Japan Herald (a German organ) and so is the Editor of the Japan Chronicle (hitherto supposed to be an English paper) who now turns out to be like Dr. WALLACE—(1) a man of prejudice (2) a little Englishman—but alas! without the scientific attainments of the latter to be set on his credit side;—and who undoubtedly also has (3) "an axe to grind."

We are profoundly grateful to our contemporary for having reminded us, (after a turn at its reference shelves) that Dr. WALLACE is now in his eighty-fifth year, and that he has a distinguished scientific record. Oh that all the columns of all newspapers might be filled with such priceless pearls of knowledge! And have they not, in this particular case, a peculiar purpose to serve—to wit, that of the Chronicle's red herrings? Is it not desirable to draw the reader's attention from the main issue? Do they not resemble the special pleading of the counsel for a defendant who has no case, and do they not illustrate our remark that the belittlers of England will not argue "straight?" What has Dr. WALLACE's age to do with what he has just written? He will be judged by what he has written—irrespective alike of his age or his past attainments. If a man of eighty-five, with all the weight of experience and knowledge of life, enters the political arena with such a sheet of folly, the only excuse his age can give him is that of a dimmed intellect, a mind that has lost its original vigour. And if a man of his scientific attainments pens such folly, the greater his self-stultification.

In that stultification the Japan Chronicle shares, to its shame. An English journal is found in company with a German organ upholding the maligners of its own country and joining in the cry for the partition of the British Empire. So be it. The British Empire will be none the worse for its new foe, and the public will know what to expect from the Japan Chronicle. Nor will this disgraceful partisanship be obscured in the minds of all clear-visioned men by that journal's priggish drivel about "the language that is used among educated people," or its absurd contention that to lay bare the real intent and meaning of a writer is to impute to him a mercenary motive. That is journalistic jugglery as exemplified by the Japan Chronicle. Anti-Japanese to-day, anti-English to-morrow, what does it matter how or what contortions are made so long as the Japan Mail can be misrepresented in the eyes of those who are not in possession of the facts of the case?

FISHING IN RUSSIAN WATERS.

(ISSUED BY THE FOREIGN OFFICE.)

Any one desiring to take part this year in the bidding for fishing stations in the waters of Russia's Maritime Provinces, must send in, by the 1st of the 12th month, Russian calendar (14th December), to the National Finance Bureau of the Maritime Provinces, an application containing an accurate statement of the station or stations in question.

DIPLOMATIC CHANGES.

Mr. Adachi, Secretary of the Department of State for Foreign Affairs, has been appointed Councillor to the Japanese Embassy in Paris.

Mr. Omai, Secretary of the Department of State for Foreign Affairs, has been appointed Councillor to the Japanese Embassy in Vienna.

THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

The Privy Council, at a meeting held at 10 a.m. on the 7th instant, which was attended by Count Higashi-kuzo, President, and by their Excellencies Count Komura and Baron Goto, discussed the treaty of commerce concluded between Japan and Columbia and the amendments of the Pareels Post Convention between Great Britain and Japan.

FAIR NAGASAKI.

Fair, yes; if that city can be called fair "where every prospect pleases and only man is vile." An uncalled for inditement, it will be said; the vitreous effusion of a gratuitous pessimism. Yet who that knows Nagasaki will affirm the verdict to be unjust? But even verdicts must be tempered with at least a modicum of charity, and this is freely extended to this abused old city when I say that Nagasaki, like Naples, has for her environment the fairest and most entrancing natural scenery of any city in the world; and her population: well, it is, perhaps, less reprehensible than that of the Italian city, in its attitude to the foreign visitor, though of its effect upon his morals as a resident, one hesitates to say as much.

Nagasaki is a port, and the proverbial contention is that all ports, more especially those of the East, are hopelessly bad. Indeed Nagasaki has had little opportunity to be anything else. For centuries she has been the Mecca of the foreign adventurer: Spanish Jesuits, Portuguese pirates, Dutch traders, shipwrecked mariners, stranded subjects of all nations, these were the best that for three hundred years the world gave to Japan; and yet the West has wondered why the country was at last and for so long hermetically sealed against the foreign intruder. Even to-day, after the doors of commerce and religion have been forced open, can we say that we are giving Nagasaki of our best? Let it be duly remembered that no attempt is here made in any way to belittle or even to reflect upon the many exemplary members of the foreign community at Nagasaki, amongst whom are to be found as many worthy citizens as in any community of like proportions in Japan. But I think it may be said without hesitation, that when the immense native population of the city, looks, as it has a right to do, to the foreign residents for some proof that they represent a higher social and spiritual development than the natives, there is a remarkable lack of evidence. I am accustomed to hear the Japanese blamed for that supreme conceit which presumes to suggest that their morals and ideals are not absolutely inferior to those of Christendom. Without venturing any opinion in the matter, may I ask what other inference could the Japanese draw from those who leave upon them the most permanent impression they ever receive from foreigners; in short, the most persistent example of foreign life in Nagasaki is least representative of what has made Christendom the benign and civilizing power that it is believed to be by the world's most enlightened people. What I say of the foreign population of Nagasaki is true of the foreign community in most of the Japanese centres of residence.

The most constant and mysterious enigma that the Japanese have to solve is that the people who represent Christendom, in the vast majority of cases, take no account of Christianity, nor even religion of any kind. I here make no contention that a man's religion is a good test of what he is, though there is good evidence for believing it, but I do say that he knows very little about the world of human society who has not found out for himself that the majority of the sincere believers in religion are more exemplary in morals and ideals than the majority of those who avoid the churches. The greater number of the intelligent Japanese cannot have studied and learned this fact of sociology in vain, but the question they have to settle is, how to make it fit in with the ideals of the present representatives of Christendom sojourning amongst them.

There is in Nagasaki but one foreign church in which a service is held, in English, every Sunday morning, besides which there is an afternoon service by a union of denominations in the assembly room of a mission school in the afternoon; and out of a foreign population of something over 500, there is an average of no more than 30 or 40 at either of these services. The Japanese naturally conclude that if the representatives of Christendom have no use for that which had its origin with themselves, why should the Japanese? There are wealthy firms here which not only exhibit no reverence for Christian institutions, but who bring young men out from home and ruthlessly exercise over them the same baneful influence. This is why the missionaries say that the greatest obstacle to the spread of Christian morals in Japan is the foreign community; and this is why the average foreigner engaged in business here has no use for the missionary. A man must be of the most genuine moral fibre before he can live untarnished in an environment like this; at home he has the moral stamina of Christian association to keep him afloat, even though he may be in little sympathy with it; but when he comes to live among a people of other morals, he has nothing to prevent him sinking to their level, yes even lower, for the Pagan, even the lowest, has some traditions to live up to; but the foreign Pagan, isolated from the buoying influence of his native surroundings, has nothing to live up to but himself. Around me on these beautiful hills in view of which I write, are strewn the graves of many a fair youth swallowed in the vortex of weltering vice that runs riot in a place like this.

Another blot on the name of fair Nagasaki is the large number of soldiers and sailors from transports and ships of war that call at the port from week to week. This ever increasing current of foreign representation is that with which the average Japanese citizen comes closest in contact; and what impression can he receive as he sees those rowdy specimens of Western and European civilization loitering along the streets to and from the places of ill-reputed pleasure? How does the behaviour on shore of the crews of foreign warships visiting Japanese waters compare morally and socially with that of the Japanese sailors calling at the ports of Europe and America? Witness the convivial recreations and ungallant antics of the British sailors fêted in Tokyo last year, in contrast with the dignified bearing and conduct of the Japanese crews when received in England. Moreover, the only street fights ever seen in this Japanese city are caused by those representing the flags of other nations. The only saloons in Nagasaki, and for that matter in all Japan, and they of the lowest type, are owned, patronized, and conducted by foreigners. One cannot wonder that Japan is hastening on with a breathless impetuosity to that longed-for day when she can do without the foreigner. Commercially and industrially she has made vast strides in this direction, and socially the movement has already well set in. In the meantime it is surely the duty of foreign governments to see to it that when their representatives are let loose upon a place like this, they shall be in charge of an officer whom they are bound to obey. In the case of the last escapade which it was my misfortune to witness, a sailor from a French warship, behaving abominably in a Japanese restaurant, was arrested by a Japanese policeman; and while conducting him to prison, the officer was set upon by more than 50 of the prisoner's comrades who freed the culprit by main force, and defied the police. Nothing could be done save to call out the whole police force or the militia, which the Japanese were too solicitous of international amity to do. May I again suggest that the Japanese have some show of reason for the utter contempt they entertain for the average foreigner, and that not without cause are the more thoughtful of the upper classes gravely doubtful whether Japan cannot herself produce in time something better than Christendom.

And yet happily Nagasaki has another side, a phase of life that may indeed be called fair. Even among the least representative of her foreign visitors are sometimes found those who truly stand for the manhood that has made the West.

I recall a case I know of wherein are involved the trials of an American woman and the honour of the American flag. The woman arrived in port penniless. Stranded in Nagasaki! What more awful predicament could befall anyone; much more a woman of untravelled experience and tender sensibilities. Yet this was the condition which the women, whom we shall call Mrs. Allanson, wife of a private in the Philippines, had to face here recently. Two weeks previously Mrs. Allanson had reached Nagasaki, where she expected in a few days to meet her husband who was to arrive by the next transport. The latter came into port in due time, but Allanson did not turn up; he had got to Manila late and missed the sailing. His wife now owed two weeks' board and lodging at the saloon where she had taken a room for its cheapness. As there appeared no prospects of getting his money, the landlord seized her scanty possessions and told her to go. There was nothing to do but acquiesce.

In Nagasaki there is an American lady doctor much beloved of the Japanese, and the unfailing friend of all her fellow countrymen in need; and there are more such cases here than might be imagined. Fortunately Mrs. Allanson heard of the good doctor and went to her for assistance. The doctor, seeing that the case was one of honest distress, collected enough money among her friends to provide the poor woman with a ticket to San Francisco.

"My husband will arrive by the next transport," Mrs. Allanson said, "and he will then pay up my board bill and redeem my trunk; the only thing that troubles me now is that I don't like to go away without my mother's bible; she gave it to me at her death, and I cannot be happy if I go without it."

"And won't he let you have it?" asked the doctor.

"Well, no!" said Mrs. Allanson, "I went to him for it, but he received me rudely and refused."

"I'm only a woman too," said the doctor, "but I'll go to him myself and see if I can't do something for you."

The doctor entered the bar. The saloon-keeper was behind it, as he usually was. The counter was covered with glasses ready to be filled for the crowd that stood around, most of whom were soldiers from the transport just in; and one of them was an officer. When the doctor entered the saloon the men instinctively drew back to make room; but all were surprised and puzzled to know what such a person could want in a bar-room.

"There's an American woman," the doctor began, addressing the bar-keeper, "who has been staying at your place for the last two weeks, waiting for her husband to arrive by this transport. For some reason or other he has not come, and she could not pay her board bill and you have taken her trunk; she does not complain of that, for her husband will be on here by the next transport and redeem the trunk; but in that trunk is her mother's bible and she does not want to go without that."

"Well, I guess she will," said the bar-keeper rather abruptly.

"What did that fellow say to you?" inquired the young American officer.

"He says this woman can't have her mother's bible," said the doctor.

The officer brought his first down on the bar with a thump that made every glass dance a jig two inches high, as he exclaimed in a very determined tone:

"Is there a man in this town that won't give an American woman her bible? If there is I'd like to see him. I'll give you three minutes to deliver that bible or I'll clean the place out," and taking out his watch he held it before him.

The bar-keeper looked a bit terrified; a pale sickly grin came over his face. Even the doctor was somewhat taken back; things looked like a row. About a minute had passed when the bar-keeper said to the doctor: "The bible's in the trunk there in that room; you can go and get it if you want it; here's the key."

"Please go," said the young officer, "and we'll see that no one interferes with you."

The doctor bowing, disappeared into the room; in a few moments she returned with the book, showed the officer the name written inside the cover, thanked him and took her departure.

"Attention!" rang out from the officer. Instantly every man of the dozen or more came to order, and the old bible passed out to the salute of the American flag.

In all that I have said of Nagasaki I have not been unkindful that I speak of that of which I myself form a part; I am in it, and I love it, not only for many of its people but for its superabundant beauty. For situation and scenery Nagasaki is indeed among the fairest of the many picturesque places in old Nippon. The land-locked harbour, sweetly environed by glorious hills of ever-varying green, never tires the eye. Their lower ridges are so densely inhabited that at night I look down from my bungalow on a reversed firmament of myriad twinkling lights; and at the season of the Bon Matsuri recently over, when every one of countless groves along the hill sides is gaily lighted, the scene is incomparably beautiful. These lights are to welcome back the spirits of the dead who once a year return to visit the places of their former habitation; alas that from their chief point of vision they should have to look down on the best part of their old city still given to vice; albeit with many of them, that was doubtless the means of sending them to their present abode among the silent ones.

The missionaries are doing what they can, but what are they among so many, a voice crying in the night, and with no language but a cry. Emaciated by climate and carelessness of the scientific care of the human constitution, they are labouring feebly, long and late; but in many cases their methods seem too foreign or too unpretensive to be effective; and then, as we have said, the most powerful of all agencies, the example and sympathy of the foreigner, is against them.

A Russian population is now crowding in here in ever increasing numbers. Nagasaki has become the chief centre of the revolutionary movement of Eastern Russia, but the daily paper devoted to lashing and lampooning the Czar which was published here, and sent secretly into Siberia has, I believe, proved a hopeless enterprise. I stop sometimes to make a distinct effort toward self-consciousness as I find myself from day to day a part of all this strange conglomeration of races, creeds and characters. Yet over all the fair hills look smilingly down in benediction, and a mellow sunlight kindly shines. The hoary cliffs from which the martyrs of the Jesuit days were hurled to a lacerating death, no longer frown; and the tombs of these martyrs all along the hill suggest that somehow, after all, blood may be the seed of brotherhood.

"CITIZEN."

THE IMPERIAL COURT.

The Empress visited the Imperial Botanical Garden at Shinjuku, on Oct. 6th, leaving the Palace at 10 a.m. Her Majesty spent the day there.

Oct. 17th being a national holiday, the festival for dedicating the new crop of rice to the Imperial ancestors, the Emperor has appointed Mr. Maeta, an official of the Department of the Imperial Household, to worship at the Ise Shrine on behalf of His Majesty.

A poetry party was held on Oct. 5th in the Palace before the presence of the Emperor. The themes on the occasion were "boats in a river" and "autumn rain."

The Prince Imperial, now on tour in the north-eastern provinces, will return to Tokyo on Oct. 10th arriving at the Ueno Station at 4.45 p.m.

CUSTOMS PROTEST.

Mr. S. Yamazaki, Director of the Yokohama Customs, gave a decision on Oct. 5th on a protest instituted by Messrs L. J. Healing & Co. The firm imported "intersection boxes," "saddles," and "crampets" on which the appraisers imposed 30 per cent. ad val duty in accordance with No. 406 of the statutory tariff. The importers contended that the articles were to be regarded as simple pipes manufactured of metal, and should be dealt with under No. 367 of the same tariff, which provides for 10 per cent. ad val duty. The Director dismissed the protest on the ground that the materials were made of metal, but should not be included among the goods classified under article No. 367.

THE LAW COURTS.

A SHIPPING CASE.

In the Yokohama District Court, judgment was passed on Oct. 3rd in a case in which Tsuji and Goto jointly claimed yen 941.66 from the British India Steamship Navigation Company for a portion of sheep-skins brought to Yokohama by a steamer belonging to defendants which goods are alleged to be missing. Plaintiffs' claim was dismissed with costs.

CLAIM AGAINST A TRANSPORTATION AGENCY.

The hearing of a case instituted by Messrs. Lane, Crawford and Co. Ltd., against the Mantu-Sha, a transportation agency of which Setsu Oi is the proprietress with the assistance of her husband named Y. Oi, claiming yen 2,154.78 and interest, began on Oct. 7th in the Yokohama District Court before Judge Miyake.

Plaintiffs were represented by Mr. S. Sawada and defendants by Mr. Y. Fujiwara.

Plaintiffs' Counsel stated that on Jan. 29th, this year, Messrs. Lane, Crawford and Co., instructed Defendants to carry 7 chairs valued at yen 180.88 to Mr. Y. Odawara, living in Sumiyoshi, Hyogo, prefecture, and on Feb. 3rd, a lot of dishes and sundry goods valued at yen 1,973.90 also to carry to the same person. At the same time, Plaintiffs instructed Defendants to collect the foregoing amounts from the consignees. Later, Plaintiffs found that T. Muroi, the banto of Defendants, had made drafts at the First Bank, on which documents, he drew the whole amount at that bank. The drafts were duly sent to the consignee of the goods in Hyogo, by the bank. Muroi misappropriated the money which he obtained at the bank. Subsequently Plaintiffs transferred the affair to the criminal section in the Yokohama District Court. On July 22nd, this year, Muroi was sentenced to 4 months' imprisonment with hard labour. Counsel added that Defendants, the employers of the dishonest banto, should be liable for the money embezzled by him.

Defendants' Counsel contended that the Yokohama office of the Mantu-Sha belonged to Muroi in a different account from the business of the Defendants. Sei Oi was only nominal proprietress so far as she was registered at the Local Court as the representative of the office. Even supposing that the transportation office was under her actual management, she should be free from responsibility in connexion with any dishonest action committed by Muroi. According to Art. 715 of the Civil Code, she should be free from any damage caused to a third person by her employee while engaged in business.

Plaintiffs' Counsel referred to Art. 337 of the Commercial Code and stated that a transportation agent should not be allowed to escape from responsibility with regard to any damage caused to goods in his charge unless he gave sufficient evidence showing that he or his employees were not negligent in receiving, delivering, keeping and transporting the goods assigned to him. Counsel asked the Judge to take in the record of the criminal section with regard to the case of Muroi, and also asked for leave to examine Mr. Sato, a bailiff belonging to the Tokyo Local Court, and Nakamura, a private detective. Mr. Sato, at the request of Plaintiff, seized the property belonging to Defendants at their house in Tokyo, and Nakamura, after investigation, found that Muroi was an employee of Defendants.

The Judge decided to take in the Court record of the criminal case, and reserved other motions of Plaintiffs' Counsel as to the witnesses.

The case was then adjourned till Oct. 14th.

ALLEGED TREASON.

Sentence was passed in the Tokyo District Court on Oct. 6th on S. Ishiyama, a lawyer of Hakodate, and K. Kushitani, formerly a civil engineer of the Hakodate Harbour Office, who were charged with having tried to sell a photograph of a naval station to a Russian officer. The accused were sentenced to six years' penal servitude.

YOKOHAMA LITERARY SOCIETY.

The annual general meeting of the members of the Yokohama Literary Society was held in the Van Schaick Hall on Friday evening. There was a fairly good attendance and the chair was occupied by Mr. A. W. Sherriff, Vice-President. The usual formal preliminary business having been transacted.

The CHAIRMAN moved the adoption of the report and accounts, which have already appeared in these columns. He said their membership had been gradually increasing and their accounts were in a very satisfactory condition. They closed the year with a balance of yen 274.10, but the Committee had decided to purchase a new lantern for the illustration of the lectures to be given during the year, and it was estimated that the cost of this would be about yen 250. After deducting the amount they would have a balance of about yen 25 to carry forward. During the past year the society had lost the valued services of the President, Mr. A. Bellamy Brown. They would all endorse and support the sentiments expressed in the report as to the great loss they had sustained by his removal. The members would be pleased to hear that in Hongkong Mr. Brown had already identified himself with the work of the Literary Society there, for from the syllabus of that Society's meetings he (the Chairman) saw that Mr. Brown was to lecture before the Hongkong Literary Society in a few weeks. The syllabus presented by the Yokohama Literary Society during the past session had been a very successful one. They had had a lecture by Baron Kikuchi and the meeting at which he was present was one of the most successful of the whole session. Several other gentlemen also favoured them by renewing their acquaintance with the Society, and to them and their own members who had given lectures he wished to express the Society's thanks for the services they had rendered. There was one item in the report to which they would expect reference to be made. It was the question which had come up at meetings of another organization in the community, the amalgamation of the Subscription Library with the Literary Society. Those who had followed the local press would have seen the reports of the discussion which had taken place and naturally the members of the Literary Society would expect to hear something of the negotiations which had taken place. The result of the negotiations was tersely stated in the report presented by the Committee. The Committee were approached in June with a request to consider the question of amalgamation. No definite plan was laid before them but they discussed the matter from the standpoint of the Literary Society and in view of the fact that at that meeting they received the resignation of the President they did not feel justified in entering upon negotiations at that time. The Honorary Secretary was instructed to reply to that effect and as far as the Committee was concerned the matter rested there. The question had been included in the report to enable the members to give an expression of their opinion on the question. The temporary decision given by the Committee could not be regarded as a final settlement of the question. It would be in order, during the discussion of the report and accounts for the members to discuss the advisability or otherwise of negotiating with the Subscription Library with a view to amalgamation. With reference to other matters mentioned in the report he could only express the hope that during the coming year the members of the Society would give to the officers to be elected on that occasion the cordial co-operation they had extended to those who were now resigning office.

Mr. J. P. MOLLISON seconded the adoption of the report and accounts.

Mr. CYRIL ALLEN, referring to the paragraph in the report as to amalgamation with the Yokohama Subscription Library, suggested that the Committee to be elected that evening be instructed to take into consideration the advisability of adding a library to the other attractions of the Literary Society. He thought such a step would be eminently suitable. Literary Societies in other parts of the world were similarly equipped, and he thought there was room for such an addition to the work of the Yokohama Literary Society. The details regarding the management could be carried out by the Library Committee, and would involve very little additional cost to the members of the Society. In Yokohama they had for a few years a series of lectures and entertainments that were fully worth four or five times the amount charged, and he (the speaker) thought no member would object to the slight additional cost involved in the increased work. Such work would be thoroughly in accord with the title of the Literary Society. As the matter had come before the members of the Literary Society for the first time that evening he thought it would be well to request the new Committee to enter into details, and to report to an extraordinary general meeting, at which some definite action could be taken.

Rev. E. S. BOOTH thought the matter of the amalgamation was one that called for careful consideration. He was of opinion that the large amount of work involved by the extension of the sphere of the Society would require the appointment of a permanent secretary. If the Society thought of amalgamation they must be prepared to devote to the work the large amount of energy that would be required to make it a success.

Mr. J. P. MOLLISON also urged careful consideration and spoke of the large amount of work that would be involved by the new venture.

No further discussion took place and the report and accounts were adopted, no action being taken with regard to the suggested amalgamation.

The CHAIRMAN then moved that the title of the Society be changed to the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society. He said in bringing this question forward he did so at the request of his colleagues on the Committee on whose suggestion the question was raised. It had been felt for some considerable time that the term "Yokohama Literary Society" was not sufficiently comprehensive to cover all their work, seeing that their fortnightly programmes included a considerable amount of music each evening. The first part of the ordinary programme consisted of a lecture and the second part was devoted to music. He had referred to the records, which showed that nineteen years ago the Society assumed its present title. It was formerly known as the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society, but an amendment was proposed by Mr. C. V. Sale and seconded by Mrs. Van Patten that the name be the Yokohama Literary Society, and that amendment was carried by a small majority. Under that title the Society had continued up to the present time. The Committee now felt that as the work of the Society had been enlarged they should also enlarge and extend the title of the Society, and in the name of the Committee he formally moved that the title of the Society should be changed to the Yokohama Literary and Musical Society.

Mr. S. H. SOMERTON seconded and the resolution was carried unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN then, on behalf of the Committee, moved that Rule VI be amended to read—

"The Regular Meetings of the Society shall be held every alternate Friday from October 1st to May 1st, power being reserved to the Committee to change the day or dates, or to appoint supplementary or special meetings.

"(a) Meetings shall be called for 8.30 p.m.

"(b) The first meeting in October shall be the Annual General Meeting. At this meeting: (1) the Annual Report and Statement of Accounts shall be presented; (2) the officers and Committees for the ensuing year shall be elected; (3) any new business shall be taken; (4) and any remaining time shall be spent as the out-going Committee shall have directed.

"(c) All resident members shall receive from the Secretary due notice of each meeting by post-card.

"(d) Any member may bring a friend or friends to the fortnightly meeting of the Society (provided that the number at any time shall not exceed two), without giving previous notice to the Executive Officers, but members so introducing visitors must enter the name of each friend in the Visitors' Book which shall lie open for that purpose on nights of meeting in the lower vestibule of Van Schaick Hall.

"(e) No one shall be admitted as a visitor more than three times in one season.

"(f) This rule does not apply to the Christmas Entertainment, for which special arrangements may be made at the discretion of the Committee."

The principal alteration referred to section "d" with regard to the admission of visitors. The question came up for discussion at the last annual general meeting and it was decided to abandon the practice of issuing special invitations and to provide a visitors' book to be placed in the vestibule. It was also decided that no resident of Yokohama should be considered a visitor. While partially agreeing with that view the Committee felt that this rule was somewhat harsh. The rule operated adversely in regard to members of the Society. It not infrequently happened that members were entertaining guests on the evenings of the Society's entertainments and if those guests were residents and not members of the Society they were debarred from taking them to the entertainments.

Miss HALL seconded the resolution.

Rev. E. S. BOOTH moved as an amendment that residents of Yokohama be not considered as visitors for the operation of the rule but that resident non members be admitted to the meetings of the Society upon payment of 50 yen per meeting, tickets admission to be obtained only by members. No member, he urged, would object to pay such a small fee for the meetings of the Society. He thought the adoption of the amendment would simplify the matter and take away all ambiguity, at the same time adding to the income of the Society. They proposed admitting resident non members solely as a benefit to the members. They should not legislate in favour of the resident non members of Yokohama.

The CHAIRMAN thought that no resident of Yokohama who came to three meetings of the Society would fail to join the Society and become an active member.

Mr. CYRIL ALLEN seconded the amendment.

Mr. F. G. SALE asked if it was intended to issue the tickets solely to members and Mr. BOOTH replied that that was the purpose of the amendment. He would not suggest a limit to the number of tickets a member might take.

The amendment was then put and carried, and the revision of the rules with this amendment was approved.

Eleven new members were then elected to the Society.

In connexion with the election of officers,

The CHAIRMAN said it was now his duty on behalf of his colleagues and himself to tender their resignations. They had come to the close of a year's work and he trusted that work had been done to the satisfaction of the members generally. As they were aware there was no president to tender his resignation. He was sorry to say that Mr. Gray was unable to stand for nomination again for the post of honorary secretary. He had served the Society for three years and those who had worked with him knew the multifarious duties he had carried on. It was only when members undertook the work that they realized what it meant, and Mr. Gray was fully entitled to the rest which that relief from the duties of secretary would give him. He tendered the special thanks of the Committee to Miss Blundell, Miss Booth and Mr. Somerton for the valuable and ready service they had rendered in connection with the musical programmes.

Mr. S. H. SOMERTON said when the Committee were preparing for that meeting they felt it was necessary to bring some nominee for the position of president before the meeting. A deputation accordingly waited upon Mr. J. P. Mollison and they would be gratified to hear that he had kindly consented to act as president. (Applause.) It was not necessary to introduce Mr. Mollison. He was one of those whom they termed the old residents and he was looked upon by the members as a sincere friend of the Society. He had many qualities that fitted him for the post of president. He was essentially genial, he had tact and, moreover, he possessed a keen sense of humour. His many valuable qualities were well known to the members, and he (Mr. Somerton) would content himself with proposing his election as president. (Lord applause.)

Mr. W. K. VINCENT seconded and the resolution was warmly carried.

On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Macbeth, Mr. W. K. Vincent was elected vice-president. In moving his election the Chairman reminded the members that Mr. Vincent was their former vice-president, but had been unable to accept the office last year though he had rendered valuable service in connection with the programmes.

Mr. A. E. Pawsey was elected honorary secretary on the motion of Mr. Macbeth seconded by Mr. Vincent, and on the proposition of Mr. Somerton seconded by Rev. E. S. Booth, Mr. T. G. Kenderdine was re-elected treasurer.

A Literary Committee consisting of officers of the society with Mr. Sherriff and Rev. E. S. Booth was then appointed, and a Musical Committee was elected consisting of Mrs. Brockhurst, Mrs. Mollison, Miss Blundell, Miss Hall, Mr. S. H. Somerton and Mr. D. Maas.

On the motion of Mr. Mollison a vote of thanks was accorded to the retiring officers.

Mr. J. P. MOLLISON then took the chair and the following musical programme was rendered:

Pianoforte Solo....."Martha".....Sidney Smith.
Mrs. R. J. Ward.
Song....."Lied".....von W. Baumgartner.
Mr. D. Maas.
Song.....(a) "I cannot tell what you say, green leaves".....A. C. Mackenzie.
(b) "Damon".....Stange.
Miss de Courcy.
Song....."On the River".....G. Pressel.
Mr. D. Maas.

The following is the Report of the Committee of the Yokohama Literary Society for the Session 1907-8.

The Committee of the Yokohama Literary Society have much pleasure in presenting herewith the Annual Report and Accounts for the Session 1907-8, this being the twenty-third year of the Society's work.

MEMBERSHIP.—The Committee are pleased to note a steady strengthening of the roll of membership, 47 new members having been enrolled during the past session, namely 30 ladies and 17 gentlemen. The following statistics show the membership of the Society for the past four sessions:—

	1904-5.	1905-6.	1906-7.	1907-8.
Lady Members.....	121	110	138	168
Gentlemen Members...	156	155	165	182
Family Tickets.....	20	21	23	21

ACCOUNTS.—The Accounts for the year show very satisfactory results. Commencing with a balance of yen 195.00 brought forward from last session, we close the present session with a balance at the Bank of yen 274.10. During the year the sum of yen 112 has been contributed towards the purchase of rubber-treads for the passage and stairway at Van Schaick Hall. In previous sessions the noise created in the Hall by late-comers has been the source of considerable annoyance to lecturers and musicians. The Trustees of Van Schaick Hall were approached on the matter of providing a remedy, and a joint arrangement was made for purchasing rubber-treads. These were obtained and were in use on several evenings at the close of last Session.

LANTERN.—The lantern hitherto in use for illustrating lectures being in a somewhat dilapidated condition, a Sub-Committee was appointed to ascertain whether it could be repaired and guaranteed for further use. It being found that several parts of the lantern were beyond repair, it was decided to replace it, and a first-class lantern has been ordered from a well known London firm. It is hoped to have the lantern in Yokohama in the course of a few weeks. The cost, including carriage, Customs dues, etc., is estimated at about yen 250.

LECTURES.—The papers read before the Society last Session were as follows:—(We omit the list.)

APPRECIATION.—To the ladies and gentlemen who so generously assisted in the above programme, as well as to the many ladies and gentlemen, both within and without the ranks of the Society, who contributed to the musical programmes during the session and to the Christmas Entertainment the Committee tender their sincere thanks. They wish especially to acknowledge the invaluable co-operation of Mr. W. Karl Vincent, without whose ready and willing help the success achieved in several musical programmes would have been impossible. The thanks of the Society are also tendered the members of the Bijou Orchestra for assistance rendered at the Christmas meeting, and to the Yokohama Amateur Dramatic Club for the loan of scenery on that occasion.

AMALGAMATION WITH SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY.—In June your Committee were approached by the Committee of the Yokohama Subscription Library on the question of amalgamation of the two Societies. In view of the fact that the present Committee's term of office expired within a few months and that any decision arrived at would need confirmation at the annual general meeting, the Secretary was instructed to reply that the Committee could not see their way to enter upon negotiations at that time.

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT.—The Committee cannot close this report without placing on record their sense of the loss sustained by the departure from Yokohama of the late President of the Society, Mr. A. Bellamy Brown, who for six consecutive years directed the affairs of the organisation with conspicuous ability and success. To mark their appreciation of Mr. Brown's services, the Committee invited the members to subscribe to a testimonial as a parting gift, and this, in the form of a silver tea service, was presented at a reception given in honour of Mr. and Mrs. Brown at Van Schaick Hall on July 11th.

To all who contributed to the success of that evening, both in the musical programme and in the supervision of affairs connected with the reception, as well as to Mr. J. P. Mollison, who kindly consented to make the presentation, the Committee tender their hearty thanks.

THE COMING SESSION.—The outgoing Committee, on behalf of the incoming officers, venture to make an appeal to the general body of members for a little more co-operation in connection with the work of the Society. As far as the arrangement of lectures was concerned the Committee last Session experienced little difficulty in securing assistance, but in arranging musical programmes the task was by no means an easy one. While gratefully acknowledging and appreciating the valuable assistance of outside friends, your Committee feel that the members themselves should bear a larger share of this work. There must be many among the members—especially the young members—who are able to render some assistance, and it is hoped the incoming Committee will be able to secure their co-operation in the Session now about to commence.

APPEAL TO MEMBERS.—The Committee again repeat the request made to members in the last annual report, namely, to kindly notify the Honorary Secretary of any change in address, or departure from or return to Yokohama. Such notices would greatly facilitate the work of the Executive officers, besides removing all annoyances to members caused by cards going to an old address or to members who are temporarily absent from Yokohama.

OUTGOING OFFICERS.—The Officers and Committees during the past year were as follows:—

President.....Mr. A. Bellamy Brown.
(Resigned June 1908)
Vice-President.....Mr. A. W. Sherriff.
Hon. Treasurer.....Mr. T. Gordon Kenderdine.
Hon. Secretary.....Mr. J. E. Gray.

LITERARY COMMITTEE.—Rev. J. L. Dearing, D.D., Mr. A. W. Sherriff, Mr. J. E. Gray, Mr. W. M. Squire.

MUSICAL COMMITTEE.—Mrs. J. Macbeth, Miss Blundell, Miss Booth, Miss Hall, McCallum, and Mr. S. H. Somerton.

ANNUAL MEETING.—The Committee make a special appeal for a large attendance at the annual meeting on October 2nd. Several vacancies on the Executive require to be filled, owing to resignations received, while business of an important nature will be brought forward for discussion.

For the Committee,
J. E. GRAY,
Hon. Secretary.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE FORMOSAN NATIVES.

It is estimated, says a Japanese contemporary, that the Seibans, or the Formosan natives, now living outside the sphere of legal administration number about 110,000. They are divided into 732 large and small tribes, occupying a region of 1,200 square ri, or 7,500 square miles. Each tribe has its own territory and a sort of assembly-hall, where they hold meetings for the discussion and management of their affairs.

Among these savage tribes, the Ataiyaru are the fiercest and most obstinate of all, and consider belabouring most honourable. But, apart from this tribe and some of the Vonumu and Tsarisen near Mt. Morrison who are occasionally guilty of brutality, the majority of the Seibans are comparatively mild, nor is the standard of their knowledge very low. If, therefore, the authorities carry out their intentions, these people might probably be taught at least to be farmers.

Although the lines of policy taken by the authorities in dealing with these natives differ from one another owing to their own customs and characteristics, one may classify them briefly under two heads—the evolutionary principle of force, and its opposite.

The iron wire entanglements constructed by the Japanese as a means of defence and guard against the natives, are like those used by a force acting on the defensive in war, with an electric current capable of being passed through every wire, while on the saddles of mountains and elevated places are placed field and mountain guns for the purpose of holding the Seibans in check.

Two lines of these entanglements have already been made, their total extent being in fact over 180 ri, or 450 miles. One of them begins at the coast of Giran-cho (cho=prefecture) in the east, and on reaching Hachiiika and Nanko in the west, turning northwards and passing through the Kushaku districts of Shinko-cho in a round-about way, terminates in the Horisha districts in Nanto-cho; while the other is constructed in the vicinity of Kwanrenko in Taito-cho. It is stated, however, that the authorities are contemplating the gradual advancement and extension of these lines.

Incapable of withstanding these cunningly-devised obstacles, the Seibans are forced back more and more towards the interior mountain ranges, with the result that they have lost all their cultivated fields and are only able to get their food by growing millet and lie plants upon steep mountain slopes. It is expected, now that they have no means of obtaining either arms, ammunition, or salt (which is absolutely necessary for life), that they will before long abandon their obstinacy and pledge allegiance to the Sovereign Power.

BASEBALL.

The Washington Baseball team were successful on Saturday in their third game with the Waseda University Nine. After a well contested game, distinguished by some good pitching and fielding on both sides, the Seattle men won with a score of 4 to 1.

The third baseball game between teams of the Washington University and the Keio Gijiku took place on Sunday afternoon on the ground of the Waseda College. The final score was 3 to 2 in favour of the Japanese.

The Washington College Team added another to their series of victories at the expense of the Yokohama Commercial School, whom they defeated to-day after a good game by 4 runs to 1.

YOKOHAMA CHESS CLUB.

The Annual General Meeting of the Yokohama Chess Club was held at the Phoenix Hotel yesterday afternoon. There were present Messrs. J. Griffin (President of the Club), W. B. Mason, E. Geiser (Hon. Sec.), W. A. de Havilland, A. E. Pawsey, Cyril Allen, C. E. Bruce Mitford, L. Russell and others. A letter was read from Mr. E. C. Fox regretting his inability to attend.

Mr. John Griffin presiding, the minutes of the last meeting were taken as read.

The lapse of the Club during the 1907-8 session was humorously alluded to by the Chairman in his opening remarks. It was the way of Yokohama to give things a rest occasionally. The only things that flourished all the time were Bridge and the Pari Mutuel. They (the Chess Club) had had a rest—it was an involuntary one, due to the difficulties of finding a suitable place for meeting; but there was now every reason to hope for a successful season.

A vote of thanks was then passed, at the instance of the Chairman, to Mr. L. Russell, who kindly took charge of the furniture of the Club during its dormant condition.

Mr. Mason moved, and Mr. Bruce Mitford seconded, that the accounts as published should be passed.

Mr. GRIFFIN then placed his resignation of the Presidency of the Club before the meeting, and suggested that Mr. Mason would make a better President. To this Mr. Mason demurred, whereupon Mr. Bruce Mitford moved, and Mr. E. Geiser seconded, that Mr. Griffin be requested to withdraw his resignation and continue to act as President of the Club, which he had done from its inception.

The motion being carried with acclamation, the election of officers was proceeded with, with the following result—Hon. Secretary, Mr. A. E. Pawsey; Committee, Mr. W. B. Mason, Mr. E. Geiser and Mr. Bruce Mitford.

The Committee were then deputed to make the necessary arrangements for the housing of the Club. The meetings will take place on Monday and Thursday from 5 to 11. Among the features of the season to which members may look forward are a Tokyo-Yokohama Match (Mr. de Havilland undertaking to bring a team from the capital) and encounters by correspondence with Nagasaki and other ports.

A vote of thanks to the proprietor of the Phoenix Hotel concluded the proceedings.

The last Report was issued 30th September, 1906. The session which then commenced was held at the Club Hotel, but the attendance of members was not large and interest poorly sustained.

The usual contests were held. Mr. de Havilland became Champion of the Club after a sharp tussle with D. E. Pawsey, the previous holder of the Trophy. The handicap Tournament was won by Baron Taabe, Mr. Hamann taking the second prize.

The Treasurer's Account herewith shows in hand yen 39.62.

The Club has now been dormant for a year. The Club Hotel found it inconvenient to give us accommodation for our meetings; and the Committee were unable to find a suitable location. Now we believe that the time has come for a good revival of interest in Chess and the outgoing Committee believes that the Club may again enter upon a prosperous career.

E. GEISER, Hon. Sec. Y.C.C.

CRICKET.

ON THE EVE OF THE INTERPORT.

A match between sides captained respectively by Mr. A. P. Scott and Mr. B. C. Foster took place in ideal weather at the Cricket Ground on Saturday. Some importance attached to the game as being the last before the Interport, shortly to be played at Kobe. The majority of the Interport players were arranged on Mr. Scott's side, and in consequence the issue of the game was never in doubt from the beginning. The difference between the two sides is further borne out by the fact that while over 200 balls were required to get rid of seven men of the former team, 99 proved sufficient to dismiss the whole of the latter. It should be noted, however, that all the credit does not devolve on the bowlers, for the weaker team threw away some of their opponents' wickets by loose fielding and some of their own by attempting impossible runs. No team should have three of its men run out in a single innings. There were good exceptions to the generally poor fielding of the defeated eleven, in the performances of White (W. J.) and Hearne (V.).

The feature of the first innings was the stand made by Mollison and Scott for the fifth wicket. This realized 97 runs and produced some good hitting. Mollison made a remarkably fine drive to leg off Foster, out of the ground and into the road for 6, a feat which was shortly afterwards repeated by Read.

With an hour and a half for play Mr. Foster's side went in to face a total of 182. Wickets fell fast, however, the score with half the side dismissed standing at 22 only. Squire and Cox then raised the total to 52, before the former was unluckily run out for a very useful 22. Hearne and Foster put on 21 for the ninth wicket, but apart from these two stands, little resistance was offered to the generally excellent bowling and fielding of Mr. Scott's eleven, who were left victorious by 103 runs.

TO SHOJI IN ONE DAY.

To reach the delightful resort of Shoji in one day from Yokohama is a desideratum long sighed for by many a jaded resident of this port. The opening of the Hachioji Railway now renders this possible. Leaving the Higashi Kanagawa Station by the 4.55 a.m. train, the Kofu railway can be availed of from Hachioji to Otsuki, whence Yoshida can be reached by horse-tram between 1 and 2 p.m. If then the traveller takes the direct route (walking or riding—one hour shorter than by the lakes) he can reach Shoji in four hours, viz. by 6 p.m.

The reverse journey, Shoji to Yokohama, was always possible of accomplishment in a single day, but the Otsuki-Hachioji route is to be recommended in preference to the Gotemba one, for not only can it be covered in less time, but the dreary tram ride of 5½ hours from Yoshida to Gotemba through somewhat barren and uninteresting country can be avoided. From the point of view both of scenery and of interest the Yoshida-Otsuki run is much to be preferred, as is also the route followed by the Hachioji line compared with the already too familiar Tokaido.

OUR Kobe evening contemporary says: It will be observed with sincere regret by many of our readers that it has been decided to have a Cricket match here next Sunday. The idea of having a public match or game of the kind on the one Day of Rest the week affords has been mooted before, but it has always been voted down hitherto. Now it seems to have won the day. THE TENDENCY of the amateur fisherman to "yarn" is proverbial. According to one of these, it would seem that a good deal of miscellaneous sport can be obtained from the end of a certain English pier. His list, as set forth in one of the morning papers runs thus: "caught in succession a sea-anemone, a whelk, a crab, an eel, a whiting, a sole, and a lobster." Another steamer, the Hitaka Maru of the N.Y.K. which ran on a rock off Hokkaido, was also refloated by the same company on Sept. 30th and has just been brought to the port of Masage. The same firm is now working on the wreck of the unfortunate steamer Dakota.

MR. STARKE, of the Deutsche Apotheke, came within an ace of being killed at the Ikuta crossing of the Railway this morning, said the Kobe Herald of Friday. Approaching the crossing at about 9 o'clock from the road immediately north of and running parallel with the railroad, and finding the gate wide open, his kurumaya attempted to cross the line.

He had reached the up line when suddenly the down express dashed by. Mr. Starke's feelings may be imagined more easily than they can be described. On getting somewhat the better of the shock of such a terrible experience Mr. Starke turned to the negligent gate-keeper, but the only satisfaction he obtained, he assures us, was a smile. Nor did the Police who were standing at the Box close by remonstrate with the man. It is passing strange that these crossings cannot be properly looked after.

A STORY of feminine exclusiveness is given in the Manchester Guardian. It was on a voyage, and in the ladies' cabin "all were sick except one lady and a cat, which wandered uneasily about. Obeying an impulse natural to her sex, the lady ventured to stroke the cat, remarking, 'Poor pussy,' or words to that effect. The cat seemed inclined to respond, and elevated its tail in token of tentative goodwill, when from a neighbouring berth came in choking tones the solemn warning: 'Excuse me, that is a private cat!'"

A SERIOUS accident occurred at 8.15 p.m. on Oct. 5th at the Shimbashi Railway Station. LORD Northcote, formerly Governor-General of Australia, and Lady Northcote arrived at Nagasaki by the steamer Kumano Maru on Oct. 4th. They left the same evening for Kobe. The distinguished visitors will extend their trip to Hakone, Nikko, etc. About Oct. 23rd they will leave Yokohama by the Empress of India for Vancouver on their way home. In the British Supreme Court at Shanghai, on Sept. 24th, T. J. Stephenson, aged 41, described as a mining engineer, was sentenced to one year's imprisonment with hard labour for the manslaughter of a Chinese jinrikisha coolie. There was applause in court when the jury brought in the verdict, as Stephenson was being tried for wilful murder. The jury recommended the prisoner to mercy.

RECOGNITION of the Empire's debt to the Navy is always gratifying. Mr. Deakin, speaking at the Yacht Club's dinner given in honour of the American officers, said that but for the British Navy there would be no Australia. That did not mean that Australia should sit still under the shelter of the Navy. "Those who say we should sit still," he added, "are not worthy of the name of Briton. We can add to the squadron in these seas from our own blood and intelligence something that will launch us on the beginning of a naval career and may, in time, create a force which shall rank among the defences of the Empire."

DETAILS as to the seizure of the fishing vessel Kinsei Maru by an American warship near Alaska are given by the Tara Maru, which arrived at Tsukiji, Tokyo, on the morning of Sept. 30th. The Kinsei, says the Yorodsu Choho, left Shinagawa on March 28th for Alaska, which she reached after about a month. Some 250 seals were caught at sea. On the night of July 22nd, she anchored about 15 miles off St. Paul Island. On the following morning there was a dense fog and consequently the crew were quite ignorant that the vessel had drifted to a part where fishing by foreigners is prohibited. The crew, however, resumed hunting as they heard barking of seals. Later the fog cleared, when the change in the ship's position was discovered and also three American warships coming toward them. While the Japanese were struggling to escape from the prohibited zone, one of the American patrols seized the vessel. The Sulka Maru, which was also fishing in the same sea, is reported to have met with a similar fate.

LORD DUDLEY the new Governor-General of the Commonwealth made his official landing at Sydney on Sept. 9th, in the presence of twenty thousand spectators. He was welcomed by Mr. Deakin and other Ministers. The barge conveying Lord Dudley ashore was rowed through two continuous lines of men-of-war's boats.

A WEALTHY merchant of Tokyo, named M. Yamaguchi, was found murdered on Oct. 6th in the village of Futamiya, Chiba prefecture. Recently he had visited a merchant in that village from whom he received yen 500. On the evening before the day when he was found dead, he started from the place for the Tsudanuma Railway Station on his way to Tokyo. The money which is believed to have been in his possession was missing.

THE Treasury has approved of the Admiralty's proposal to present to the Royal Engineers stationed at Fort Victoria, Isle of Wight, the old gig of the cruiser Gladiator. It will have a plate affixed, suitably inscribed, in recognition of the services in saving life rendered by Lieutenant Wright and the non-commissioned officers and men on the occasion of the wreck of the Gladiator in April last. A piece of silver plate, also suitably inscribed, will be presented on behalf of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty by the Naval Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth.

THE death is announced of Capt. James Kirk, which occurred on Sept. 26th on board the Shanghai Tug and Lighter Co.'s tow-boat Fuh-lee. Capt. Kirk was one of the best known skippers of the China coast and an experienced master-mariner. He was for many years in the service of the China Merchants' Steam Navigation Company and when in charge of the C. N. S. Irene did excellent service in standing by and rendering assistance to the P. and O. S. S. Sobraon, when she became a total loss at Tung-ping near Foochow, on April 24, 1901, in recognition of which he was presented with a testimonial and other mementoes of the occasion.

ONE of the most cold-blooded murders that could be planned, says a Shanghai contemporary, has taken place on the Canton-Hankow railway line. It was in this wise. Two clans quarrelled. Two men of the one clan were murdered by those of the other. The younger members of the clan of the murdered men wished to have their revenge on the clan of the murderers. They learnt that there were three men of this clan at work on the Canton-Hankow line. They went and arrested them in the evening and carried them off. When the opportunity came they beat their brains out in cold blood in revenge for the insult done not by them, but by the members of their clan. This is Chinese justice.

A CHINKIANG correspondent wrote on September 21st:—The Chinkiang community was saddened on Saturday morning by the sudden death of Mr. William Henry Brennan of the indoor Customs' staff of this place. He was not very well, but when he retired for the night, there was no apprehension of any serious trouble. He died in the night and was found dead about five hours afterwards. He has been in Chinkiang only about two months. Mr. Brennan was almost forty years old, and was born in China. His wife is in San Francisco. He was buried in Chinkiang about five o'clock on Sunday evening, the services being conducted by Mr. Paxton of the Presbyterian Mission. It is supposed that he died of heart failure.

BEACHY HEAD was the scene of a remarkable adventure which befell a young lady, Miss Winifred Spiers by name. She was reading on the cliffs the other evening when, through slipping or the wind catching her clothes, she fell 70 ft. to a patch of turf about a quarter of an acre in extent, below which there is a further descent of 400 ft. to the beach. There she remained all night. At 8 o'clock in the morning a gardener named Woodhatch was prawning on the foreshore below the cliffs when his attention was drawn to Miss Spiers, who was waving her handkerchief. Woodhatch gave information to the coastguard, who proceeded to the spot, and rescued Miss Spiers from her perilous position. The wind blew hard during the night, but there was no rain, and the lady appeared to be none the worse for her adventure.

The Nippon Horse Improvement Company, the proprietors of the course and buildings of the Keihin Keiba Club, at Kawasaki, held a general meeting on Sept. 30th at their office in Tokyo. Accounts for the business done during the first half of this year were submitted to the shareholders. Some hot questions were put by the shareholders, as to the "special payment," amounting to yen 70,000 and the "special income" of yen 30,445.90. After an explanation by one of the directors, the shareholders appointed a committee of nine to examine the two special accounts. The general meeting was then adjourned until the examination is completed.

It is alleged that the directors of the association lent yen 50,000 to the Tokyo Jockey Club at Itabashi, and yen 20,000 to the Kyoto Race Club and received from the borrowers interest which was described in the accounts as special income.

A LARGE and apparently delighted crowd of Chinese, says the N. C. Daily News, assembled on the banks of the Soochow Creek, near Szechuen Road, yesterday afternoon, to watch a fight between two Chinese on separate boats passing down stream. It seems that one boat checked the passage of the other; the boatmen soon passed beyond the ordinary procedure of vituperation and began a contest with their poles. After a few passes one man received a nasty stab on the thigh from the iron-shod pole, and was then given a heavy blow on the forehead that sent a stream of blood over his face. A Chinese constable and a Sikh on crossing duty watched the proceedings, but were, of course, unable to interfere, while the contestants remained on their boats. The injured man understood the difficulty and rammed his antagonist's boat until it reached the shore. The aggressor then, evidently feeling the moral obliquity of his conduct, tamely allowed his wife and himself to be marched ashore and handed over to the police by the wounded man. The latter then distributed the blood well over his body and accompanied the party, carrying the pole that was used so effectively upon him.

HUGH C. WER writes in the Technical World Magazine that "10,000 pairs of shoes are produced daily from a single eastern factory. Every twenty-four hours it uses the hides and skins of 7,800 kids, 300 horses and colts, 300 calves and 425 steers. In one of the largest American factories, with a force of more than 3,000 workmen, the average wage is over $15 weekly, and from this sum the schedule ranges all the way upward to as high as $300. From the six largest American shoe factories, over 25,000,000 pairs of shoes were produced last year. Deducting the annual boot and shoe exports of this country—amounting to something over $10,000,000—from the total national product for 1906, the American people spent more than $340,000,000 for footwear during the year. Allowing an average value of $2, over 170,000,000 pairs of shoes were purchased in this country during the twelve months. More than $10,000,000 was spent before the chronic process for the tanning of upper shoe leather was mastered. It remained for the French chemist, Schultz, to hit upon the secret. In a visit to a dye-shop the chronic formula for coloring feathers caught his attention, and he dropped a section of calfskin into the mixture. When it was withdrawn it was dyed perfectly. Foederer, of Philadelphia, experimenting in the same direction with kid skins, produced a perfectly tanned strip of leather from the vat, with the vigorous exclamation: 'Vici! Vici!' The 'vici kid' to which the name was thus given has made more millionaires than any other branch of the shoe industry."

CORRESPONDENCE.

F. SCHROEDER v. DE SILVA.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—I learn from your valuable paper that my case against De Silva was dismissed as I was not present in person nor represented by counsel. To avoid misapprehensions I beg you will kindly give me space for the following explanation. On June the 4th I addressed the following letter to the presiding judge in the case:—

"Yokohama, June 4th, 1908.

"In the Yokohama Chiho Saibansho

To the Presiding Judge in the case of

"F. Schroeder v. De Silva.

"Sir,—At the hearing of the case on the 25th of May last, the presiding judge took the witness Neary out of my hands and refused to let me interrogate him, in spite of my protest against that action, which I can only look upon as a denial of justice. Under the circumstances I can only consider any further assertion of my rights as useless and have consequently cancelled my power-of-attorney given to Mr. Fujiwara to represent me in the case. I shall therefore not be represented by counsel nor in person at the hearing of the case to-morrow, the 5th instant, nor at any future hearing, and have only to add the request that a copy of the judgment, when it is given, be made out at my expense and sent to me.

"I am, Sir, Yours truly,

"F. SCHROEDER.

That is the reason why I did not appear, and I also did not wish to do anything that would have tended to still further drag out the case, in which there had been already nearly a dozen hearings. The time of salaried people like judges, is worth nothing to them; my time is worth a great deal to me, and in another possible dozen of hearings, in which, moreover, I would have had to fight for my right to be heard, whilst anything the defendant alleged was accepted without proof or question, my loss of time and expenses would have amounted to more than I could have possibly recovered. The cheapest way for me, therefore, was to let things go as they might. I shall endeavour to get a copy of the judgment. A protest will be lodged against it, so that the case may come before judges who acknowledge the duty to accord the same rights to both parties, which was not done in this case.

Thanking you for the courtesy of your columns,

I am, Sir, Yours very truly,

F. SCHROEDER.

POLICE PROMPTNESS.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—Through your courtesy I beg to tender publicly my sincere thanks to Mr. Ikanyama, Chief of the Kagacho Police Station, Nakajima, Police Constable in charge of the Detectives Section of that Station, and his colleagues for their promptness at duty's call even in trifling matters.

The fact is this that on the 2nd inst., an umbrella was stolen by a thief from an office in Main Street, and within only 5 days the same was returned to its owner.

Yours truly,

R. OZAWA.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

(TO THE EDITOR OF THE "JAPAN MAIL.")

SIR,—At the present juncture when Japan's home and foreign trade is extremely hampered by the prevailing business depression at home and abroad, and the authorities concerned are much puzzled how to manage her finances, I should consider it a great favor if you would kindly publish in your valuable columns my views on the situation, consisting of two parts, namely, its causes and methods of relief, some of which seem, to my great satisfaction, to be now on the point of being realised in the hands of the responsible financiers.

Thanking you in anticipation for allowing me your valuable space, I remain,

Yours very truly,

N. HADA.

Moji, Sept. 1908.

CAUSES.

The factors which have brought about the existing stringency in the money market may be many and various. In the following paragraphs, however, the discussion is limited to those of much importance and these five in number.

1.—Great increase in postal savings:—

The effect of the above upon the money market is small in comparison with Causes Nos. 3 and 4. Still, the rapid augmentation of postal savings in recent years is in itself one remarkable feature that our money market has lately presented, and it must have undoubtedly contributed in some way or other towards creating the existing depression now prevalent throughout business circles. The rate of increase in postal savings in several past years may be seen from the following table:—

No. of depositors.	Amount in yen.
1900 .....	1,883,262
1901 .....	24,015,000
1902 .....	2,271,799
1903 .....	27,009,000
1904 .....	2,707,118
1905 .....	28,804,000
1906 .....	3,227,658
1907 .....	31,478,000
1908 .....	4,583,355
1909 .....	38,778,000
1910 .....	3,685,551
1911 .....	52,836,000
1912 .....	7,414,430
1913 .....	81,939,000
1914 .....	7,689,608
1915 .....	91,094,000
1916 (June) .....	8,217,112
	100,163,069

The accountable cause of the steady growth of postal savings as shown above, is the encouragement given by the Government in the form of repeated raising of interest, together with the method of postal savings remittances adopted in March, 1906.

When the system of postal savings was first introduced into Japan in 1885, the interest allowed was no more than 3 per cent., which after gradual increases, stands at 5.05 per cent. to-day. In addition to the system above alluded to, the postal savings remittance method, a gigantic Government undertaking of facilitating remittances without commission, has evidently had much to do with the great increase in postal savings.

That an increase in the amount of postal savings does not only in itself not constitute any source of anxiety, but also serves to form a forecast of a nation's future development on the side of wealth, is a matter of course.

However, this fact alone would be enough to determine whether the phenomenon is a matter of congratulation or not, that the increase in postal savings has created a decrease in other deposits, which indicates the flow of funds from the banks into the treasury, where money is of little avail for the relief of the situation.

II.—Nationalization of railways:—

This may be counted among other elements which have caused the existing financial situation, though its effect thereon might not have been great as compared with those following, Nos. 3 and 4. The railway nationalization in question has brought about the result that the net profit of the seventeen lines, yearly amounting to tens of millions of yen, is now locked up in the treasury of the Government; the funds might, otherwise, have been used for the relief of the situation in the hands of bankers who would have kept them as deposits.

III.—Mismanagement of national finances:—

The mismanagement of our national finances on the part of the Government constitutes one of the principal causes which have created the existing stringency in the money market.

(a) The great suppression of industrial and commercial capital at home as well as the levying of almost unendurably heavy taxes as consequences of the extraordinary augmentation in national expenditure in recent years.

The following table will show the rate of increase of national expenditure during the past fifteen years, which are, for convenience, divided into three terms. The 1st term, 5 years, from the 27th Yen. year to the 31st year of Meiji ..... 775,738,743

The 2nd term, 5 years, from the 32nd year to the 36th year of Meiji ..... 1,352,595,283

The 3rd term, 5 years, from the 37th year to the 41st year of Meiji ..... 2,458,446,937

(In the above table the outlays for the 40th and 41st years are represented by the figures in the budgets.)

In investigating the table, though not a little increase is noticeable in the expenditure for the 2nd term as compared with the 1st, yet the outlays for the whole term do not exceed yen 1,360,000,000, whereas those for the last term, after the late Russo-Japanese war, reach the considerably large sum of more than yen 2,400,000,000, which is indeed an amount more than three times greater than that of the 1st term.

In the Japan-China war, yen 200,000,000 was consumed as war funds, for which, in return there was an income of yen 300,000,000 as indemnity. In the late Russo-Japanese war, the funds expended on the war reached yen 1,460,000,000, as indemnity for which nothing was obtained except yen 40,000,000, which our Government had actually spent in connection with the Russian prisoners. When the above yen 1,460,000,000 is added, the whole figures for the last term would reach the enormous sum of yen 4,000,000,000.

When, about ten years ago, our government expenditures amounted to yen 700,000,000 or yen 1,300,000,000, there were already clamorous against heavy taxation and the consequent outcry of grievances among the people at large, which aroused men of intelligence at the time. Since then, no doubt, our national wealth has been much increased. Nevertheless, it is not surprising that the enormous amount of yen 4,000,000,000, after the considerable augmentations, should at last be reached in our national outlays?

The causes which have brought about the startling condition above alluded to, are no other than the late war and the stupendous expansion of the budgets, which together combined to create the heavy taxes, as well as the suppression of home capital and the consequent occurrence of the existing depression. (Foreign capital was introduced with the flowing out of interest thereon.)

(b) Considerable augmentation of the national debt as a result of frequent issues of national loan bonds since the war.

The rate of increase of our national debt in recent years is as may be seen from the following table:—

Period.	Amount of national loans Yen.
30th year .....	421,245,928
35th " .....	552,108,811
36th " .....	561,509,751
37th " .....	991,288,140
38th " .....	1,872,381,121
39th " .....	2,217,722,753
40th " .....	2,282,345,191
41st " (July) .....	2,254,162,332

Comparing the figures for the 39th year with those for the 36th year, the year preceding the War, an increase of about yen 1,700,000,000 is to be seen in our national debt. This enormous expansion of our national liabilities, there can be no manner of doubt, has seriously affected our money market. Of the total amount, about yen 1,000,000,000 is for the foreign loans, whereas the balance of yen 700,000,000 was raised at home.

Home loans have robbed merchants and producers of their circulating capital and placed it in the treasury of the Government, where it is of no avail for production, whereas for foreign loans, specie amounting to yen 450,000,000 is yearly flowing out as interest, with the result of a fall in our national credit and of the consequent inconvenience to be experienced therefrom in the importation of foreign capital. Such being the case, it is an undeniable fact that our home production has been seriously hampered by the increase of our national debts, which has apparently constituted one of the principal elements conducting to the existing financial depression.

IV.—Drawbacks in foreign trade:—

Trade during last year seemed at first to be very favourable, with large exports of raw silk and other articles. The great fall in silver in September and October last, however, considerably obstructed our trade with China, while, on the other hand, our export trade in general has undergone a serious blow by the prevailing business depression in Europe and America.

In imports, just the reverse condition was the case, innumerable enterprises after the war causing a great swelling in the figures for imports. In these circumstances, last year closed with the import excess of yen 62,000,000. Entering upon this year, the same tendency is still apparent, exports decreasing and imports still further increasing. The following are the comparisons of our imports and exports for the third decade of August as well as for the period from the beginning of this year until the third decade of that month.

	From the beginning of this year to the 3rd decade of August.	3rd decade of August.
Exports .....	10,982,000	237,559,000
Imports .....	11,417,000	321,244,000
Excess in import .....	435,000	83,685,000

That the import excess does not necessarily constitute a source of anxiety is beyond question, and we could hardly escape the imputation of hasty judgement if we were to entertain any pessimistic views on the situation only by observing that the balance of trade is on the side of imports. In the above case, however, even the intelligence of a three-year-old child would be enough, as a Japanese proverb says, to determine whether the existing phenomena are favourable to our country or not: inasmuch as the facts show that the import excess in question is brought about by the unfavorable state of our export trade, maladministration of national finances and other like causes.

Excess in imports caused a decrease in hard money in the country. Consequently the Government adopted the policy of restricting the number of convertible notes in the market so as to place its specie reserve on a steadier basis, with the result that the notes in circulation, amounting to yen 360,000,000 at the end of last year, have been diminished by yen 100,000,000 in value within the lapse of several months. The reduction in the number of government notes has produced the following effect, viz:

V.—The fall in prices of commodities:—

That the fall in prices of commodities is an inevitable result which always follows the decrease of currency in a country, is a truth clearly proved in any book on political economy. A decline in prices of commodities creates a decrease in business transactions, which has apparently caused the present depression in business.

METHODS OF RELIEF TO BE ADOPTED.

1.—Consolidation of national finances:—

Under the above heading, I have much pleasure in dealing with our national finances; the improvement of which would be of most importance in relieving the situation.

In treating of our national finances, the difficulties we first come in contact with, are the following two questions, which naturally arise to be solved before entering upon methods of relief.

(a) The redemption of government loans is indispensable in consolidating our national finances. Where, then, can we find the funds necessary for pursuing the above purpose at the present juncture when the stringency of the money market is still at its height?

(b) In the present state of the affairs of the world, no country can in any way be said to be too quick in promoting enterprises essential for encouraging her productions, such as water-works, extension of railways, or improvements of commercial ports. No required outlays for the realization of the above schemes, in the present circumstances of our national finances, can be procured but through the issue of loans; the large figures of which even now constitute one of the most important factors of financial disturbance.

The two difficulties above alluded to, can only be made good by the following methods being immediately adopted by responsible financiers:—

1.—A great curtailment of national expenditure; a postponement of the projected military and other unproductive enterprises.

2. Adjustments of the various existing taxes, such as the extraordinary war tax, which has proved a serious obstacle in the path of national growth.

3. Divide the present loans into two classes, according to their functions in production, that is whether they are intended for productive enterprises or otherwise.

(a) Unproductive loans are of such a nature that they must first be redeemed to relieve the situation. This can be realized as far as the diminution in national expenditure yields an increase in revenue. The scheme has already been carried out twice by the Government, which, however, to my great regret, owing to some defects in its ways of payment, has failed to satisfy the wishes of business men at home. It is to be hoped, therefore, that in the proposed redemption, more attention will be paid to the methods of refunding as well as to the attitude of the Government in this respect, which has not a little weight on the market.

(b) As for productive loans, they must be allowed to remain untouched.

To further explain what I have stated above, today, when the increase of various taxes is at its extremity, nothing but the curtailment of expenditure could procure the country the necessary revenue already referred to. As for loans, whether they are for productive enterprises or unproductive undertakings gives them a great difference in credit among people.

Loans for productive purposes are just like the shares of a joint stock company, their credit among share-holders being determined by the results of the working of the undertakings, for which they are issued. If the profit is small, stockholders will by no means be satisfied even if they were partly redeemed, whereas if the revenue is large the shares or loans are quite likely to enjoy much credit among their subscribers.

Lastly it is to be earnestly hoped that measures to the above effect should speedily be taken by the Government and our national finance be placed on a sound basis.

II.—As for the wounds our financial circles have sustained from the business depression abroad, no artificial operations would be of any avail and we must wait with hope and patience for the time of self-recovery.

It gives me great pleasure to learn that the dawn of a revival in business is now visible in the skies of Europe and America, and that our foreign trade for the 2nd decade of this month closed with favorable results as shown by the following table:

FOR THE 2ND DECADE OF SEPTEMBER.

Imports Yen	Exports Yen	Excess in exports Yen
7,418,000	9,027,000	1,609,000

III.—Improvement on the moral side of the nation: Speculative mania, which was once prevalent throughout the country, caused the disappearance of the good habits of diligence and frugality, and in place thereof, extravagance and idleness made their appearance to rule all classes of people high and low. The injuries our country has thus sustained on the side of her wealth, not to mention her morals, are indeed incalculable. Since the disappearance of this harmful derangement in the early part of last year, slight signs were noticeable for a moment that men's minds were returning to their former state of industry and economy, which, however, to our great regret, could no longer resist the overwhelming flood of profuseness and malversation now permeating every rank of the nation.

Extravagance is a dream of prosperity and an evil power of destruction. By this power, an immense amount of valuable labor and capital is daily consumed for unavailable, or rather evil, purposes. Such being the case, it is our ardent desire that first of all, men's minds should be restored to their former sobriety, which is indeed the source of every activity.

In conclusion, it is to be earnestly hoped that any measures conducive to the relief of the existing situation should speedily be taken by the Government and thus any obstacles in the path of the development of our commerce and industry be entirely removed, to the prosperity of the Empire.

CHRISTIANS AND THE AMERICAN FLEET.

The Christian forces of Tokyo and Yokohama, through the Young Men's Christian Association, the Seamen's Friend Society, and the English-speaking churches, are planning to do all in their power for the American sailors.

Even before they leave their ships they will be presented with a folder of indispensable information, telling about guides, rest tents, churches and itineraries, and giving plain advice. A more unique present will be the sheet containing the words, music and translations of the American National Hymn and the Japanese Anthem, Kimiga-Yo. This idea originated with Mr. Kobayashi of the Yokohama Y.M.C.A. Already the school-boys and girls who are to go out on the flotilla to welcome the Fleet are practising the English words of "America" so as to surprise the Americans by singing it.

The moment the sailors land at the Bund they will find the guides supplied at the request of the civic authorities by the Y.M.C.A. and the Japanese marines, waiting to give information or to accompany parties. The whole senior class of Aoyama Gakuin will be detailed for guide duty and six students will come from Tohoku Gakuin, Sendai, paying their own way, in order to manifest the gratitude of the Tohoku district for the gifts of Americans during the famine. A considerable number of American and British gentlemen will also be on hand to assist. The guides will also be on hand at the five civic tents in Yokohama and the six Bei Yu Kai tents in Tokyo, as well as at the Seamen's Mission and Y.M.C.A. tents. Not far from the landing the Seamen's Mission will keep open house all the week. Besides its two tents at the Bund, the Y.M.C.A. will have a tent at Shimbashi and will welcome the men at its Handa Hall.

On Sunday, October 18th, there will be religious services on several of the battleships under the direction of Rev. W. T. Austen, and at the Yokohama and Tokyo Union Churches, at the Episcopal Churches, and probably at the Roman Catholic Churches, to which the men of the Fleet will be especially invited. Every evening during the week special preaching and praise services are being planned for the ships. Mr. Stick of Sendai and a number of local musicians will assist.

Residents who are interested in the above plans can help by (1) volunteering to serve as guides, giving exact days and hours when they can serve; (2) contributing recent illustrated magazines to be boxed and put on the ships for use after the Fleet leaves us; these to be sent to the Y.M.C.A., 45 Suni-yoshi Cho, Sanchoue, Yokohama, or to the C.F. Society of Yokohama Union Church; (3) contributing toward the expenses, which total yen 800. Gifts may be sent to Galen M. Fisher, Kanda, Tokyo.

THE TOKYO LITERARY AND MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The opening meeting of the new session will be held at 8.30 p.m., Monday, the 12th inst. in the Assembly Hall of the Methodist Publishing House (Kyobunkwan) 1, Ginza, Shichome, for the presentation of the following report and account and the election of officers and committee for the ensuing year.

MEMBERSHIP.—Although there were many defections during the season 1907/8 due to removal from Tokyo and inability to attend the meetings, the numbers were well maintained by a considerable list of new members. The attendance however was on many occasions disappointing which is partly attributable to an impression that a personal notice of each meeting would be furnished to members. The outgoing Committee consider this a point which can be usefully taken up with a view to keeping the society's meetings more prominently before the members.

ACCOUNT.—The Treasurer's Accounts show a Bank Balance of yen 1662. Owing to the very low expenditure account it was possible to pay a further yen 275.00 on account of the piano, thus reducing the debt to the Rev. H. M. Landis to yen 469.27 including interest.

The Officers and Committee tender their hearty thanks to those ladies and gentlemen who so kindly provided the various programmes or helped at the Society's meetings.

The Treasurer's Accounts are appended.

H. ST. GEORGE TUCKER, President.

THE TRADE OF KOREA.

FOR THE YEAR 1907.

1°. GENERAL.—The year 1907 marks by far the largest advance that has ever been made in one year in the volume of the Trade of Korea. The increase in the gross trade over that of the year 1906 is over fifteen million yen and ten million yen over that of 1905, hitherto the highest year. As will be seen from the following table it is in the foreign trade that the increase arises, while the coastwise trade shows considerable decline in all items with the exception of Native Goods re-exported to Native ports, the smallest part of the trade.

Gross Total...60,368,609 54,994,701 70,209,684

The decrease in the coastwise movements of foreign goods, though small when compared with the 1906 figures, is large compared with those of 1905, and is due to the continued better steamer services with the various ports direct from Japan. The smaller demand for the exchange of cereals and cotton cloth between the northern and southern provinces accounts for the largest part of the decline in the amount of Native goods carried. Chemulpo alone received yen 1,500,000 less value than in 1906, mostly Rice from Mokpo and Kunsan, while the fall in the value of Rice and Cotton Goods imported at Wonsan amounted to 500,000 yen.

The increase in foreign goods imported is general through all the divisions; Cotton Goods more than regained their volume of 1905, and Sundries continued their advance by a lead of over six million yen. Exports abroad doubling in one year and over seven million yen above any previous year's total commences to show what resources Korea is capable of when the opportunity with sufficient encouragement to profit by it is given her people.

Steps for the gradual unifying of the coinage are still being carried on. The old Korean Nickel coins are steadily disappearing from the market and the balance pass as currency at half of the new five "chon" pieces. Cash to a small amount has been bought up by the government, and large quantities have been exported to Japan by merchants, though this latter means of removing this currency received a severe check in the middle of 1907 owing to the fall in the value of copper, whereby profit in the export transaction wholly or almost so disappeared. By all possible means and at considerable cost the government is making the people acquainted with the new coinage which is now favourably received. It takes long, however, to make the Korean merchant calculate the value of his goods according to the yen. Even in Seoul, where Japanese money has long been in use, merchants or the workmen when asked for a price on materials or labour name it in cash or "yang," or if more advanced make the exchange calculation themselves and name their price in the old Korean nickel coinage and finally in yen.

Good Spring and Autumn crops in 1907 over the whole country provided abundant supply of cereals, sufficient for all the needs of the people and leaving a larger balance than ever heretofore for export. This increased production arose rather from good harvests than from increased acreage under cultivation, though larger returns even than for the year 1907 may be expected from this reason as well as from improved methods of cultivation in the near future. In many places round the native villages, even where no Japanese have settled, ground that shows evidence of having long laid fallow, is now being broken up again and Rice, Beans, etc. cultivated. The Japanese settlers also may be depended on to take more from the ground than the Koreans have done, and gradually to teach the latter to do the same. Evidence of this is already visible in the numerous fields cultivated by natives where manure or rotten vegetation has been used for strengthening purposes.

2°. REVENUE.—With a total of 3,165,229 yen the Revenue from Import and Export Duties and Tonnage Dues has now reached a point above three million yen, and shows increase of almost one million over that of 1906. All three headings have largely increased; import duties advanced from 1,714,763 yen in 1906 to 2,319,259 yen; export duties from 397,840 yen to 758,754 yen; and tonnage dues from 77,632 yen to 87,215 yen. The collection from miscellaneous sources, as interest, storage fees, special permit fees, etc., amounted to 139,000 yen, a figure that is not included in the above revenue total. The recollection at Seoul has largely increased owing to the greatly widened use of the Seoul Bonded Warehouse and from the collection at an office opened in August whither goods imported at Chemulpo and Fusan and destined for the capital are forwarded and where examination and assessment of duty is undertaken. The amounts collected at Seoul have been 36,409,92 yen from Parcel Post service, 2,721,14 yen from the Bonded Market, (now closed), 68,798,98 yen from the Bonded Warehouse, and 24,138,64 yen from the above mentioned Branch Customs Office.

3°. FOREIGN TRADE.—(a) Imports.—The small decrease in the direct foreign trade recorded in last year's trade report has been entirely recovered and a further advance over the 1905 figures of nearly nine million yen is shown. Cotton Goods which fell in 1906 by three and a half million yen increased again in 1907 by four million three hundred thousand yen and exceed the total value of 1905 by seven hundred thousand. Japanese Yarn with 72,214 piculs equal to 2,652,994 yen compared with 44,302 piculs equal to 1,545,952 yen in 1906 is again the largest single item imported, closely followed by Japanese Sheetings 464,605 pieces valued at 2,096,199 yen compared with 312,795 pieces valued at 1,426,221 yen in 1906. These Sheetings have now taken a firm hold of the market, and the increase this year of over 600,000 yen is the largest stride made in any one year. That English and American Sheetings have also advanced 700,000 yen, though not quite recovering the amount for 1905, shows the large demand for this style of goods in the country. English Grey and White Shirtings, together with a total amount of 641,671 pieces valued at 3,107,095 yen far surpass the import of 1906 of 345,661 pieces valued at 1,723,191 yen, though not attaining the 1905 figure of 725,938 pieces valued at 3,376,861 yen.

Woollens and Miscellaneous Piece Goods continued a small and steady development. Metals advanced by 300,000 yen.

Sundries have increased by over six and a half million yen. This increase is general over nearly all the descriptions of goods but the most important items are Building Materials, increase 187,000 yen; Machinery, 429,000 yen; Railway Materials, 2,129,000 yen; Silk Piece Goods, 669,000 yen; Timber, 675,000 yen; Tobacco, 115,000 yen. As will be noticed these items that have so largely increased are, with two exceptions, not for supplying the direct wants of the people, but for aiding in developing the resources of the country, and large quantities of these were to meet the requirements of the Government buildings and new undertakings of the Residency-General with its Railway Bureau, and of the Japanese military.

(b) Exports.—That the total value of the goods exported should have more than doubled in one year shows a remarkable development in this part of the trade. The increase from 6,604,301 yen in 1905 and 8,132,844 yen in 1906 to 16,476,834 yen in 1907, which is seven million above the previous highest year, 1903, is almost wholly attained in the main articles of export. Rice, as foreshadowed in last year's report, has regained its prominent position and rose from 356,233 piculs valued at 1,603,648 yen to 1,815,144 piculs valued at 7,558,505 yen. Beans and Peas from 1,212,350 piculs valued at 3,602,703 yen to 1,197,431 piculs valued at 3,935,632 yen (an increase in value though decrease in quantity). Red Ginseng from 3,765 catties valued at 6,330 yen to 37,712 catties valued at 1,200,066 yen. Cattle, Timber and Wheat also made most noteworthy advances. Coal, Copper, Gold Ore, Cotton Raw, and Paper were the most important items that declined. As these are now receiving the attention of the government officials and endeavours are being made to aid their production it may be hoped that they also may show substantial advances in the future. High though this year's total of exports appears in comparison with previous years, there can be no doubt that it does not by any means indicate the full flood of the country's export capacity. Encouragement, or even want of discharge, to attain more than a living, if not wealth, will gradually lead the people to use their utmost endeavours to produce all their land will bear, finding as they do a ready market for their surplus stock. Arrangements for irrigation gradually introduced will help to mitigate the variability of the climate in a country so dependent on regular rains, and the combination of new, with the combination of old, capital will lead to enterprises hitherto deemed impossible. In Korea where large herds of cattle are not to be found it is surprising that so many animals are available for export, but as every homestead has two three or more animals used for tilling the fields and for carrying the produce for distribution, oxen for the market are available from all districts in the north as well as in the south. When to the value of the Live Stock exported is added that of Hides and Bones from animals slaughtered for home consumption some idea of the value to Korea of her cattle is gained. Cattle disease has frequently impoverished large districts by destroying the entire stock, at a time when only the most primitive methods were employed to check it. Now that more knowledge and rigorous means of stamping out such epidemics are brought to bear, the improvement of cattle breeding and increase of stock will pursue a more even and favourable course.

(c) Re-Exports.—A further large decline in Re-exports is put on record owing to the continued falling off in the demand for goods from Manchuria. In 1905 when the total re-exports were 1,012,270 yen the value of goods trans-shipped to China, (almost entirely Manchuria) was 774,867 yen and to Japan 224,011 yen while in 1907 with a total of 493,740 yen China took 187,566 yen and Japan 291,993 yen.

4°. COAST TRADE.—The exchange of goods between the treaty ports of Korea has declined by over two million yen when compared with 1906. Though foreign goods have almost upheld last year's figures, native goods account for the above decrease. This is almost entirely caused by the one item of Rice which instead of being shipped between the ports of Korea, where it was not required owing to the good general harvest, was exported directly abroad, and while diminishing the coastwise figures, largely swelled the export ones. In 1906 Chemulpo imported native rice to the value of 1,248,366 yen but in 1907 only of 46,446 yen, and Wonsan imported 378,172 yen in place of 823,554 in 1906.

Trade between treaty and non-treaty ports, however, shows an increase of over one million yen, from 5,080,707 yen in 1906 to 6,086,538 yen in 1907. This increase appears in all the provinces with the exception of Pyongan, where the Seoul-Wiju Railway has captured much of the transport trade with the city of Pyongyang, the most important market in the province. However the not inconsiderable amount of goods shipped to Kyemipo in Hwangha-do, up to which point steamer traffic on the Taidong River is possible, was really intended for Pyongyang, but owing to the geographical position of Kyemipo is recorded under the more southerly province. Hamkyong province on the north east coast shows as usual the largest share of this trade with a most satisfactory advance of half a million yen. Fish and Hempcloth received at Wonsan and Fusan from the ports of this province and Rice and Foreign Goods sent to them form the bulk of the trade.

5°. Shipping.—The tonnage of shipping has increased from 2,767,509 tons in 1905 to 4,088,671 in 1907, an advance of 321,162 tons. This however seems small when compared with the advance made in 1906 over 1905 of 760,000 tons, especially when it is remembered that the total volume of trade in 1907 declined by five million yen while that of 1907 has advanced by fifteen million. As, however, a large proportion of the increase is in the export trade, this demanded no extra shipping accommodation, but rather provided steamers with cargo on their return passages. Japanese steamers have increased from 4,594 entries of 2,188,181 tons to 4,741 entries of 2,569,647 tons made up by the regular steamship lines running between the Japanese and Korean ports or passing through the Korean ports on their way to Vladivostok, Tairen and Chinese ports. Korean steamers have declined to the small figure of 63,735 tons, made up of vessels of very small tonnage running on the coasts and rivers with only occasional trips to Japan. British steamers advanced from 20 entries of 40,746 tons to 35 entries of 73,010 tons. This increase is due to the more frequent and almost regular calls of the Ocean Steamship Co.'s vessels from Liverpool and by the steamers keeping up communication between Shanghai and Chemulpo. German steamers owing to the discontinuance of the Russian East Asiatic Steamship Co.'s line from Shanghai, by which they were chartered, decreased from 69 entries of 82,089 tons to 45 entries of 7,420 tons. American showed a slight decline, which is likely to be large in 1908 owing to the stoppage of the Deshler Steamers and their transfer to the Japanese flag.

6°. TREASURE.—The gold export showing a small falling off of 50,000 yen does not fulfill the hopes that were held of a large increase on account of greater activity in the mining industry. This small export should, however, be considerably increased when the mines now being developed and having plant erected are in full working order as several of the new mines show promise of good results. Owing also to the unrest in the country many of the mining concessions granted have been left untouched on account of the difficulty and even danger of access. The government has also to encourage further mining development arranged to permit the duty free entry of machinery and much of the materials required for mining, and it is hoped that hereby a wider development will rapidly take place. The import of paper money for the use of the banks in Korea takes the largest share of the import total, while the export of paper money has the largest decline. Of the 980,000 yen exported 500,000 went to Japan, 410,000 to China and 40,000 yen to Vladivostok. Silver Dollars to 750,000 yen were exported to Japan and 130,000 to China. Over a million yen worth of cash was exported, for the most part during the first quarter of the year, after which the low value of copper put a stop to the trade.

MISCELLANEOUS.—The improvement of accommodation at the harbours has been steadily carried on throughout the year, and greater facilities for the handling and storage of goods will shortly be available. At Chemulpo the reclamation to afford room for a Customs building is almost completed. At Fusan the railway has been carried to the landing jetty avoiding the former inconvenient journey by launch from steamer to train, and as the erection of station buildings proceeds the advantages of the new position will be increasingly felt. At Seoul a branch office of Customs was opened in August where imported goods may be passed as at the ports.

Six lighthouses have been completed during the year, five of them on the west coast, two at the entrance to Chinnampo, one off Chemulpo, and two at the entrance to Mokpo, and one on the east coast at Wonsan Harbour. In addition to these three beacon lights and numerous buoys and landmarks have been erected. Owing to the movement of the ice on the Yalu river all the buoys and marks placed there have to be removed in the winter and replaced in spring.

In the interior of the country the making of roads is slowly proceeding, and with the completion of the most important of these the transportations of goods to the ports and to the railways will be aided to a great extent.

H. W. DAVIDSON,
Secretary to Chief Commissioner,
Seoul, August 26th, 1908.

SOCIALISM AND THE YOUNGER LIBERALS.

Lloyd-George speaking at Swansea deplores the tendency among the younger Liberals to succumb to the microbe of Socialism. If this were unchecked, it would paralyse the progressive power of the Party.

THE BALKAN SITUATION.

London, October 2.

The markets are affected by the uneasiness of the situation in the Near East and reports of Bulgarian officers buying horses in Hungary.

THE ATLANTIC PENNY POST.

Noteworthy scenes were witnessed in New York on the inauguration of the Anglo-American Penny Post, crowds awaiting the stroke of midnight on Sept. 30th to post letters and circulars. One firm sent 30,000 letters. The Postmasters-General of England and the United States, Messrs. Buxton and Meyer, exchanged congratulations.

THE BATTLESHIP FLEET.

The Battleship Fleet has reached Manila. SECURITY AGAINST INVASION.

London, October 3.

Mr. L. Harcourt, addressing his constituents at Rossendale declared that we were determined to maintain our security against invasion. The necessary funds could be provided by methods of sound finance without the expedient of a loan. He condemned the scaremongers of the yellow press as political foot-pads and pariahs. Anglo-German relations were never friendlier.

SIR HENRY'S WILL.

The will of the late Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has been proved at £60,000 exclusive of the estates in Scotland.

THE HYDERABAD DISASTER.

Correspondents at Hyderabad estimate that 50,000 persons have perished while damage to the extent of £13,000,000 has been done by the recent floods. The Bazaars have been transformed into a mass of mud and decomposing flesh.

A LEPER CURED.

A leper named Moore has been discharged after eleven months in a leper station. He was treated by Dr. Deycke's leprosy cure process, and others are being cured.

THE BULGARIAN QUESTION.

October 4.

It seems to be generally accepted that the Bulgarian railway question will be peacefully settled, but there is no sign of Bulgaria yielding. It is pointed out in various quarters that Bulgaria's position renders any active coercion difficult.

THE GERMAN ARMY.

The German Army is being gradually re-uniformed, everything that is bright being eliminated.

THE DISPUTED RAILWAY: A BRITISH PROPOSAL.

London, October 5.

Great Britain has made a proposition to Turkey and Bulgaria with a view to the settlement of the railway question. Turkey agrees in the event of the railway being temporarily restored to the Company, and consents to the lease being transferred from the latter to Bulgaria, the port rights being safeguarded. Britain has urged the Powers signatory to the Berlin Treaty to recommend this solution to Bulgaria. It is understood that the Great Powers have agreed to act accordingly.

AUTOGRAPH LETTER FROM THE AUSTRIAN EMPEROR.

The Austrian Ambassadors have presented to the respective countries an autograph letter from the Emperor Francis Joseph dealing with the situation in the Balkans. Great importance is attached thereto. Nothing is known, but it is believed that it relates to Bosnia and Herzegovina.

A MONUMENT TO FRENCH DEAD.

London, October 5.

A monument to the French fallen in battle at Noisseville near Metz has been unveiled in the presence of 45,000 people, representatives of the French and German Governments, French officers and deputations from German regiments. The Governor, on behalf of the German Government, laid a wreath on the tomb.

THE EMPEROR'S LETTER.

Speculation is rife as to the Emperor Francis Joseph's letter. According to the most trustworthy accounts, it reviews the whole situation in the Near East, and deals with the change in the relations of the Monarchy towards Bosnia and Herzegovina, the occupation of which is regarded as definite, but gives assurances that the changes contemplated will not transgress the Berlin Treaty. The British press regards the situation with the gravest misgivings, which have been increased by the renewed rumours that the proclamation of Bulgaria's independence is most imminent. Great excitement prevails in Servia.

BULGARIA A KINGDOM.

October 6.

Bulgaria was proclaimed to-day an independent Kingdom at Tirnovo, the ancient capital.

THE CRISIS IN THE BALKANS: GRAVE SITUATION.

London, October 6.

The gravity of the situation in the Nearer East is universally recognized. London newspapers are unanimous in condemning the high-handed action of Bulgaria and the manifest intention of Austria to annex the provinces (Bosnia and Herzegovina)—both in defiance of the Treaty of Berlin. It is uncertain yet how the other Powers will view their proceedings, but the opinion prevails that an European conference is inevitable.

THE BRITISH ATTITUDE.

Count Mensdorff is taking the Emperor's letter to Balmoral. Sir Edward Grey has returned to London and had long conferences with the Turkish and Italian Ambassadors.

Reuter is officially informed that Britain will not consent to any alteration of the Treaty of Berlin without the consent of all the signatories. She declines to recognize what has been done, or any other infraction, till all the signatories have been consulted.

GERMANY'S REPLY.

It is authoritatively stated in Berlin that Germany's reply to the Emperor Francis Joseph promises support as regards the annexation of Bosnia, which it regards as entirely separate from the Bulgarian crisis. Should Turkey consult the Powers as to the advisability of warning Bulgaria in the matter of the railway, Germany would not advise such a course, because the Turkish army is not prepared, while the Bulgarian is fit and ready.

PRINCE AND SULTAN.

Later.

Prince Ferdinand has telegraphed to the Sultan that he is compelled to respect the voice of the nation. He hopes that friendly relations will be maintained. A council of Ministers is drafting a reply wherein probably Turkey will protest against the Prince's action and refuse to recognize Bulgarian independence.

AT SOFIA.

The manifesto of yesterday evening containing the proclamation of independence is in conformity with the will of the people, who hope that the Powers will approve. Prince Ferdinand and his Ministers have started for Philippopolis. The mobilization of the army to the number of 100,000 has been ordered.

AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Later.

A protracted sitting of the council of Ministers continues. It is understood that the Porte will protest to Bulgaria and the Powers against any violation of the Treaty of Berlin.

THE COMPANY'S VIEW.

A representative of the Oriental Railway has notified the Bulgarian Government that unless the line is restored in three days, an indemnity of 15,000 francs a day will be demanded.

FALL IN SECURITIES.

Consols have fallen  $\frac{5}{8}$ , and Turkish stocks are  $1\frac{1}{4}$  points lower.

THE PROPOSED EUROPEAN CONGRESS.

London, October 7.

Paris.—Messrs. Pichon, Iswolsky, and Sir Francis Bertie (of the British Foreign Office) have discussed the European congress, which is a growing probability despite the danger of dealing with the inflammable matters involved.

The Sultan has replied to Prince Ferdinand that Turkey invited the Powers to confer on the situation.

At an anti-Austrian meeting in Belgrade shouts were raised of "Down with Austria," and there was much bellicose talk.

The Servian reserves, numbering 120,000 men, were called out yesterday.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

London, October 7.

The Emperor Francis Joseph in rescripts to his Ministers extends his Sovereignty to Bosnia and Herzegovina and orders the evacuation of the Turkish province of Novi-bazar. He creates a Diet for the two provinces, issues a proclamation to the inhabitants announcing the creation of representative institutions, and appeals to their loyalty to prove them worthy of his confidence.

In Constantinople, thousands marched to the British Embassy cheering the Ambassador. Telegrams were despatched to the King and to Sir Gerald Lowther, thanking them for their attitude in the matter. Otherwise the people and the press preserve the calmest attitude, comparable with that of the Japanese at the time the Treaty of Shimonoseki was concluded.

The Servian Chargé d'Affaires in London has been interviewed by a representative of Reuter. Explaining the indignation in Servia, he pointed out that a majority of the population of Bosnia were Servians who fiercely resisted even temporary occupation of the country. Servia has twice gone to war over Bosnia and moreover its annexation was a long step towards Austria's final goal at Salonika, the occupation of which would strangle Servia commercially and politically. It was impossible to say where the present indignation would lead, and much would depend on the effect upon the Government of the popular clamour.

CRETAN UNION WITH GREECE.

London, October 8.

The Cretans have declared union with Greece and have appointed Hellenic authorities.

RUSSIA PROPOSES A CONFERENCE.

A Russian invitation for an European Conference will be issued to night. It is understood that she proposes to strictly limit the programme of the Conference to questions arising out of the actions of Austria and Bulgaria, thus preventing further encroachments on Turkey or international complications.

SERVIA PROTESTS.

Servia has addressed an energetic protest to the Powers about the annexation of Bosnia, and an extraordinary session of the Skupshchina has been summoned.

(BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT WITH THE "TOKYO ASAHI SHIMBUN.")

BULGARIA AND TURKEY.

London, October 1.

The Bulgarian Government will formally assure the Powers of its intention to negotiate with the Oriental Railway authorities for the purchase of the working rights, while recognizing the proprietary rights of Turkey. The tone of the press is moderate and, while it is believed a pacific solution will be found, it is hoped that Turkey will refrain from insisting absolutely on her treaty rights.

DISCONTENT IN RUSSIAN UNIVERSITIES.

St. Petersburg, October 1.

Disquieting reports are to hand from all university centres that the students are agitating against the Government's encroachments on university rights.

THE RUMOURED AUSTRIAN DESIGNS.

Some alarm has been caused in Russia by statements as to the permanent retention of the occupied provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Russian statesmen trust Austria will be prevented from throwing a torch into the Balkan powder-magazine.

FRANCE AGREES.

Paris, October 2.

The French Government has decided to agree to the Russian proposal that the differences between Turkey and Bulgaria be submitted to the signatories of the Berlin Treaty. The proposal is not welcomed by Austria as calculated to protract a settlement.

THE SHAH'S REFORMS.

October 2.

Teheran.—The Shah has issued a ludicrous rescript obscurely charging the Grand Vizier to prepare various laws and summon a parliament composed of religious men.

FRENCH EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

Paris.—The international conference on popular education has been opened with 3,000 delegates. The Minister of Education insisted on the necessity of increasing the number of special schools for industrial and commercial training.

HEARST TO "EVEN" WITH THE PRESIDENT.

New York.—Hearst, speaking at Denver, denied being leagued with the Republicans. He said that he disliked Roosevelt personally and would yet even with him after he had ceased to be president, but would be legal until then.

INTERNATIONAL TUBERCULOSIS CONGRESS.

London, October 3.

Washington.—At a private meeting of sixty scientists attending the Tuberculosis Congress Dr. R. Koch thrashed out with his opponents the important question in connexion with the lymph of bovine tuberculosis. It is understood a large majority were of opinion that the German specialist failed to substantiate his case.

RUSSIAN STUDENTS.

St. Petersburg.—The students of the Universities are threatening to withdraw from their institutions. The police are trying to forbid their meeting.

New York.—Mr. Taft after having toured several States described by the Democrats as doubtful, says that he is confident that he will be elected. On the other hand, Bryan predicts a large all round Democratic majority.

STRIKE BY RAILWAY OPERATORS IN TURKEY.

Constantinople.—A serious strike has arisen on the Smyrna-Aden Railway. A train was derailed and the ringleaders were arrested. The strikers attacked the station where troops fired upon them. The telegraphic wires were cut.

THE BULGARIAN CRISIS.

St. Petersburg.—It is reported on the highest authority that the Russian proposal to hold an international conference for the settlement of the Turco-Bulgarian Railway dispute has been favourably received by France, Germany, and Italy. All the Powers disapprove the Bulgarian agitation for independence. Russia thinks that a conference would reduce a possibly grave complication to a simple judicial interpretation of certain clauses in the Berlin Treaty.

THE CRISIS IN THE BALKANS.

London, October 5.

A telegram from Paris says that Bulgaria will declare her independence on Monday. On Tuesday Austria will announce the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

THE BOSNIAN DEMAND.

In an autograph letter to the French President yesterday the Emperor Francis Joseph declares that his action was due to the demand of the Bosnians for a Constitution. Russia, Germany and Italy have signified their assent to this breach of the Berlin Treaty, which places France and England alone in opposition, but Italy has obtained her expected solatium (sic). Russia intends to raise the question of the Dardanelles—hence a Conference of the Powers is probable. Turkey will probably offer no resistance to the loss of Bosnia, but Bulgaria's action may mean war.

EDUCATION IN INDIA.

London, October 5.

At Madras and Mysore Government orders have been issued for religious and moral instruction to be introduced in all the Government schools and colleges. The secular system has produced irreverence, disrespect and presumption, and has not restrained aggressiveness, which has apparently increased.

THE BALKANS.

London, October 6.

Sofia.—Bulgaria has proclaimed herself an independent Kingdom at the ancient capital, Tirnovo. There are great rejoicings. The Prince read a manifesto declaring that the country had laboured for thirty years in its development and was now fit to join the family of civilised people. It is believed that the relations with Turkey will now become friendly.

October 7.

Budapest.—All the Powers except England and Italy have assented to Austro-Hungarian policy in the occupied provinces.

St. Petersburg.—Russia will on Thursday invite the Powers to assemble in conference for the revision of the treaty of Berlin. Neither Bulgarian independence nor the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina will be recognized by Russia until the conference is able to give its sanction. Russia will insist on fair play for Turkey and will act conjointly with England to safeguard the new Liberal regime.

PERSIA THREATENED WITH BANKRUPTCY.

London, October 8.

A special telegram from Tabriz says that owing to the large loss of trade, general distress, depletion of the Government's sources of revenue, and military expenses, Persia is in danger of bankruptcy.

THE BALKAN CRISIS.

Sofia, October 8.

King Ferdinand is touring the country. All is quiet at Constantinople. War against Bulgaria is generally deprecated. The newspapers favour waiting for the decision of the Powers. The Times characterises the Austrian rescript, which extends the rights of suzerainty of the Emperor of Austria to Bosnia and Herzegovina, as undignified and insincere verbiage sanctioning an immoral act. The Paris correspondent of The Times reveals a document which shows that Austria promised Turkey that her rights should not be infringed, and this is now broken.

BARON CHINDA.

The Ambassador, Baron Chinda, and the Councillor of Embassy, Mr. Hata, arrived safely at Berlin yesterday (5th instant).

SENSATIONAL TALK IN AUSTRALIA.

San Francisco, September 30.

A correspondent on the American Battleship Fleet reports that in consequence of the visit of the fleet to Australia, a remarkable impression has been caused among the public there. The Australians believe that war is unavoidable between them and the Oriental peoples, and that so long as the United States show ability to control the Pacific, they will naturally support Australia. This extraordinary sentiment is being welcomed in the United States.

THE AMERICAN FLEET.

According to a wireless telegram from Rear-Admiral Sperry, the Battleship Fleet will arrive at Manila on the afternoon of October 1st.

POLITICS IN THE UNITED STATES.

New York, September 30.

As already reported President Roosevelt intends to "stump" several States with a view to supporting Mr. Taft. Some of the leading Republicans are opposing the President's attitude. They insist that Mr. Taft is popular among a majority of the electors, and his position is so firm as not to need special assistance from President Roosevelt. Further interference on the part of the President will rather injure Taft's prospects.

On Sept. 29th, Mr. Bryan replied in the usual wild-worded strain to President Roosevelt's last note. In the various communications between the parties the most serious revelations have been made.

MR. HARA.

Mr. K. Hara, formerly Minister for Home Affairs, arrived in New York on the afternoon of Sept. 29th from Washington. His arrival is not yet announced in any newspaper, probably because he wishes to escape the attention of journalists. On Oct. 2nd a dinner party will be given at the Japan Club in his honour.

ANGLO-AMERICAN POSTAL ARRANGEMENT.

New York, October 1.

The postal rate between Great Britain and the United States which was hitherto 5 cents was reduced to 2 cents. The alteration came into force on October 1st. Comparing with the number of postal matter which during last year was sent from the United States to Great Britain, there will be a decrease of $490,000 in the postal income on the part of America. Still, as the result of the reduction of the rate, the number of postal matter will naturally be found to increase, and accordingly an increase will be seen in the income over that of last year.

THE BALKAN CRISIS

King Ferdinand is touring the Balkans. It is quiet at Constantinople. War in Bulgaria is generally deprecated. Newspapers favour waiting for the Powers. The Times characterizes the Austrian receipt, which extends the right of suzerainty of the Emperor of Austria in Bosnia and Herzegovina, as an undignified and insincere verbiage sanctioning an annexation. The Paris correspondent of The Times reveals a document which shows that Austria promised Turkey that her rights in the Balkans would not be infringed, and this is now broken.

His arrival is not yet announced in any paper, probably because he is not yet the attention of journalists. On the dinner party will be given at the Japanese Club in his honour.

ANGLO-AMERICAN POSTAL ARRANGEMENT

New York, Oct. 1. The postal rate between Great Britain and the United States which was 2 cents was reduced to 1 cent. The reduction came into force on October 1st, coinciding with the number of postage stamps which during last year was sent to the United States to Great Britain, a decrease of $490,000 in the postage on the part of America. The reduction of the rate, however, is a postal matter will naturally be increased, and accordingly the income from the postal service will be increased.

MR. HARA.

Mr. K. Hara, formerly Japanese Minister for Home Affairs, now in New York, visited the Hippodrome Theatre on the evening of Oct. 1st. He dined with the president of the Associated Press on the following day. He is expected to visit the New York Herald and other prominent newspaper offices. On Saturday, Oct. 3rd, he will proceed to Boston and the adjoining districts. He will leave for France about Oct. 8th.

AMERICAN BATTLESHIP FLEET.

San Francisco, October 2. The Battleship Fleet arrived at Manila at 3 p.m. on Oct. 2nd. A large crowd assembled at the seaside and uttered enthusiastic cheers. In consequence of the prevalence of cholera, the landing of officers and blue-jackets was prohibited. The proposed receptions were abandoned. To-morrow, a procession will be organized in the harbour by boats.

Commander Frank Evans, son of Rear-Admiral Evans, on the battleship Louisiana in the Fleet now at Manila, has been removed to the Court-Martial on charges of negligence in his duties, of having opposed senior officers, and of intoxication and disorder. Some other officers in the fleet are reported to be guilty of dissolute conduct.

MR. TAFT.

Mr. Taft is reported to have said that he would have a majority of ballots in Omaha, and that his success would be attributed to the special support of the electors in that State.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

New York, October 3. The Presidential Campaign has taken on additional vehemence. Both parties are embarrassed by a scarcity of funds. Heretofore at least $2,500,000 was needed by each party at every Presidential election. The amount levied this year was only one-fifth of that sum. The reason assigned for this scarcity is said to be that many of the trusts could not be approached, as both parties condemned them freely at the time of the nominations. The present affair between President Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan is connected with a disgraceful business done by some trusts in which several politicians were concerned. Only four weeks remain before the election day.

There are two issues among the Republicans. One of them is the release of the Chairman of the election committee from his duties, as he is not competent; and the other is the release of the chief of the finance department from his office as he is connected with various trusts.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION INTO THE UNITED STATES.

The number of European immigrants entering the United States up to the end of September shows a marked decrease on that of past average years. The number of Italian labourers entering America also shows a special decrease. During August 4,262 Italians arrived while 20,582 left for home.

WEALTH OF NEW YORK.

The value of the movable and immovable property in New York is $9,173,560,245, and that of land and estate $8,553,298,187.

TROUBLE BY RUSSIAN STUDENTS.

Vladivostok, October 4. The Russian students of various colleges and universities in St. Petersburg who are indignant at a reactionary step taken by the Minister for Education, decided on the evening of Oct. 3rd to retire from their institutions. On the following morning, all the institutions were closed. The students of the other government schools are sympathizing with them. A serious difficulty has thus arisen.

VICE-ADMIRAL TRUPPEL.

Port Arthur, October 5. Vice-Admiral Truppel, Governor-General of Kiaochow, arrived at Port Arthur on Oct. 5th from Dairen on his way from Japan to the German concession in China. He put up at the Yamato Hotel. Later he called on the Japanese Governor of Kwangtung and the Commander-in-Chief of the fortress, and subsequently visited 203-Metre Hill and other places. On the same evening, Mr. Ouchi, acting chief of the Administrative Department in Kwangtung, entertained him to a banquet.

AWFUL AGONY OF ECZEMA ON FACE

And Head was Beyond Words—Suffered for Six Months—One Remedy After Another Failed—Even Medical Aid was Ineffective.

WAS CURED IN A MONTH BY CUTICURA REMEDIES

"My trouble started with swelling on my face which became red and very painful and irritating. From there it went to my head and it is impossible for me to give any idea of the agony I went through during the six months that the eczema continued. I tried first one remedy and then another, only too glad to test anything that my friends suggested. Nothing seemed to do the least good. I went to a doctor several times and his treatment was as ineffectual as the rest. I was almost in despair. One day I read of a similar case of eczema having been cured by the Cuticura Remedies, so I thought I would have at least one more try to get my head and face right. I bought the whole treatment (Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills) and persevered with it for a week. By that time the improvement was apparent to anyone and the relief I felt was great. I continued with the Cuticura Remedies for about a month, using two complete treatments, and I can tell you candidly and heartily that I was cured. I have occasion to have great faith in Cuticura for skin ailments, not only because of the great good it has done me but because of the benefit I know has accrued from its use in other cases. My experience with other remedies for eczema, and I should think I tried them all, enables me to appreciate Cuticura to the full. Miss Maggie Hynes, Eaker, Kilkelly, Mayo, Feb. 13, 1907."

Send to nearest depot for free Cuticura Book on Treatment of Skin Diseases.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of scalp, as in scalled head—all demand a remedy of extraordinary virtues to successfully cope with them. That Cuticura Soap, Ointment, and Pills are such stands proven by testimonials of remarkable cures when many remedies and even physicians have failed. One set is often sufficient.

Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Depot: London, 27, Charterhouse St.; Paris, 5, Rue de la Paix; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; So. Africa, Lenson, Ltd., Capetown, etc.; U.S.A., Foster Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., Boston.

IMPORTS.

HABUTAE.

The market seems to be irregular. Exporters in Yokohama offer specially low prices because of the depression in raw silk, but as the manufacturers in the provinces, principally in Kanazawa and Fukui, maintain a steady attitude, Sellers in Yokohama are in a difficult position. Consequently no special business has been done though exporters have some enquiries from Europe and America.

CHINA.

Saturday, October 24.

It is stated (Nichi Nichi Shimbun's telegrams) that the Communications Department of the Chinese Government has obtained the sanction of the Throne for despatching a commission of inquiry to examine carefully into the prospects of the seventeen railways, for the building of which permission has been granted to various Chinese companies. Such of these lines as promise to be profitable will be left in the hands of their projectors, but any road not thus classifiable will be either taken over by the Government or specially assisted.

Hitherto the public has heard of the mineral deposits in the Pehsifu district in a somewhat disparaging tone, the only mine specially mentioned being that worked by the Okura Company in conjunction with the Chinese Government. But the telegrams now say that the mineral bearing resources of the district are very rich, and that Viceroy Hsu has decided upon their exploitation by the Government. Ample deposits of copper, coal and iron are said to be present.

In spite of the objections made by Japanese engineers, the most northerly of the three routes proposed for the Kilin-Chang-chun Railway has been adopted, it is said, by the Chinese Government. No reasons are publicly assigned for this choice, but we presume that there can not be any very strong objections to the northern track from an engineering point of view.

With reference to the recent collision between Chinese police or soldiers and Japanese gendarmes in Chientao, a strange and scarcely credible incident is said to have occurred. A telegram to the Jiji Shimpō from Peking says that the officials of the Foreign Affairs Bureau of the Waiwupu have sent the various foreign Legations, that of Japan excepted, a statement to the effect that when some 14 Chinese soldiers and gendarmes without any arms in their hands endeavoured peacefully to arrest the progress of a building which was under construction by Japanese orders, the Japanese troops opened fire on them and caused two or three casualties. This pacific attempt on the part of a number of unarmed soldiers and gendarmes to interrupt building operations belongs to the rank of stories which assume great gullibility on the part of their hearers.

Telegrams to the Mainichi Dempo from Amoy say that 4 Chinese warships, one German cruiser and two American mail steamers have arrived to welcome the United States Fleet. Another telegram contains a very strong statement. It is to the effect that the high officials of Fukkien have issued an instruction forbidding any Chinese women in Amoy to leave their houses during the three days of the Fleet's stay at that place. This is ridiculous. We do not believe that the most old-fashioned Chinese official would dream of issuing such a veto, and we suspect that the canard had its origin in the brain of someone who desired to create ill-will between the United States and China.

Another telegram from the same place says that a rumour has been circulated to the effect that the arrival of the Fleet will be the signal for an anti-dynastic outbreak, and many timid folks are preparing to fly, and are despatching their goods and chattels to places which they consider secure. We are inclined to think that some sensational correspondent has found his way to Amoy.

Amoy has the great misfortune to have been struck by a heavy inundation just on the eve of the projected visit of the Second Squadron of the United States Fleet. There has been a menace of this catastrophe for some days back, and the floods are now said to have reached such dimensions that many features of the intended reception will be impossible.

According to intelligence from Shanghai two Chinese cruisers have left the Yangtze in order to take part in the welcome given to the American ships.

Tuesday, October 27.

Japan's new Representative at the Chinese Court, Mr. Ijuin, has been received by the Emperor of China and presented his credentials. Subsequently his Excellency and Mrs. Ijuin had audience of the Empress Dowager. The Emperor conferred a high decoration on Mr. Ijuin.

The Asahi Shimbun quotes an anonymous member of the staff of the Residency General as denying the rumour that the Chientao question is to be settled on the basis of recognising China's sovereignty. This informant alleges that if any such settlement were contemplated, previous reference would certainly have been made to the Resident General, whereas nothing of the kind has taken place. Korea's claim was not put forward in the first instance without full examination of the records and without ample proof that the Chientao region formed part of the Peninsular Empire. China has never succeeded in rebutting this proof, which, moreover, was recently supplemented by other and still stronger evidence taken from ancient records found in the archives of the Korean Court. All these things considered, it is in the last degree improbable, says the Asahi's informant, that the rumoured concession has been made.

Wednesday, October 28.

A telegram from Peking says that the Chinese Government has adopted an interesting resolution. It has instructed its Representatives in foreign countries to negotiate for placing under Chinese jurisdiction all the foreign newspapers published in the Middle Kingdom. It is not to be denied that the licence practised with immunity by some of these journals constitutes one of the worst features of the extraterritorial system, whereas, on the other hand, several of them are conducted with such admirable moderation that legal restraint becomes wholly superfluous in their case. Whatever sharp line of discrimination may be apparent, however, the broad fact remains that the impotence of China's sovereignty is very irksomely illustrated by the fact that her press regulations, enacted for the purpose of preserving good order and public peace, are not applicable to foreign newspapers published within her realm. But it is a knotty problem. China may succeed in figuring as the victim of a grievance if she pleads her case with sufficient fervour, but that she will get the grievance remedied before her patience is exhausted, we can not believe. After all the fault lies primarily with herself. If she applied herself with real vigour to re-drafting her laws and reforming her Judiciary she would command more sympathy.

At Mr. Ijuin's recent audience in Peking, when he presented his credentials to the Throne, it was observed, says a correspondent writing to the Jiji Shimpō, that the Emperor seemed to be in a very debilitated condition, and to be suffering from pain which made it difficult for him to remain in a sitting position. The Empress Dowager, on the contrary, appeared to be in robust health. Mr. Ijuin, in addressing the Throne, supplemented the usual expression of friendly and pacific wishes by declaring his country's admiration for the earnest efforts that China is making in the cause of progress and reform. The Emperor replied in the briefest possible terms using the simple phrase "We are gratified." Mr. Ijuin, when subsequently received with Mrs. Ijuin by the Empress Dowager, delivered the same address, but it seems to have elicited only a bow from Her Majesty.

Thursday, October 29.

Telegrams from Amoy to the Mainichi Dempo do not draw a very rosy picture of the state of affairs there preparatory to the arrival of a squadron of the Atlantic Fleet. The reception arrangements are said to be in a very incomplete condition, and, even if completed, they do not seem likely to be very striking. The correspondent mentions that crowds of people are flocking to the place, and that in consequence the prices of provisions and of boat-hire have doubled. China is putting her best leg forward by collecting such naval forces as she can command, but the spectacle can not be very imposing when compared with the magnificence of the visiting vessels. One is reminded on reading these reports that China never in her whole career of foreign intercourse has had occasion to make a demonstration of national welcome. That has not been for want of hospitable instincts, but only because the opportunity did not present itself.

The Nobles' School in Peking promoted by Prince Ching and Grand Councillor Yuan Shih-kai, is now an accomplished fact. The building has been completed and the first examination of candidates for entrance into the institution is to take place next month.

A Peking telegram to our German contemporary in Shanghai on Oct. 21st. said:—Grand Secretary Yuan Shih-kai has asked for fourteen days' leave of absence on account of his bad health. It is stated that the real reason for his retirement is to be found in the demand of the Empress Dowager that he should clear himself from a number of charges brought against him by the Censor Chiang Chun-ling. Yuan Shih-kai has been accused by the latter mainly of having usurped all governmental power and of ruling like an absolute despot, against whom nobody can achieve his purposes. It is expected that, as on former occasions, the day will not be far off till the Empress-Dowager needs Yuan's advice, when she will summon him and thereby, in spite of the great weight with which the accusations are brought forward this time, the incident will be ended.

It is stated by the Eastern Times that in reply to a dispatch from the Waiwupu complaining of the conduct of Russian officers and soldiers in surveying various portions of Mongolia and demanding that a stop be put to it, the Russian Minister in Peking has given the curious reply that this has been the work of Russian volunteers and, therefore, he is unable to do what the Waiwupu asks.

The Ministry of Finance in Peking is reported to have obtained the sanction of the Throne for the establishment of a Government Bank in the city of Kilin, where the revenues of the province may be deposited. Hitherto they have been deposited in Shensi Banking Agencies.

H. E. En Shou, Governor of Shensi province, is stated to have recommended to the Throne that in view of the discovery, lately, of rich deposits of petroleum in the district of Yen-ch'ang in that province, the Government should obtain an interest in them by advancing a portion of the capital needed by the merchants and people who are in possession of the land bearing the oil. An Imperial Rescript has therefore, been issued authorizing the Ministry of Posts and Communications to advance the sum of Tls. 2,000,000 to the oil company now being organized to exploit the wells. In consideration of the advance this department shall have the power of appointing the principal officers of the new Company.

The Dalai Lama, according to a Peking letter, is to have a special title bestowed upon him by the Throne in commemoration of the seventy-fourth birthday anniversary of H.I.M. the Empress Dowager (November 3). The N. C. Daily News understands that a suggestion has been made that the Buddhist Pontiff shall be named "Religious King of the East." Another report states that in the functions attending the celebration of her seventy-fourth birthday anniversary the Dalai Lama as Buddhist Pontiff is to have precedence over all the princes, dukes, nobles and high Ministers of the Crown.

Major A. A. S. Barnes, Wiltshire Regiment, has been appointed Commandant of the Shanghai Volunteer Corps, and was due to leave London for Shanghai via America on Oct. 17. Major Barnes has been 22 years in the British army, of which eight were spent in North China, seven with the Chinese Regiment at Weihaiwei.

With a view to relieving the pressure caused by the large number of golfers who use the links on the Public Recreation Ground, says the N. C. Daily News, it is proposed that an auxiliary course be made on the Hongkew Recreation Ground. Such a course has been already laid out experimentally with the assistance of Mr. D. Macgregor, the Municipal Superintendent of Parks. Permanent greens, however, will not be made until the laying out of the whole Ground is completed and the course has been played over a few times, in order that the greens may be in the correct position from the golfer's point of view, and at the same time may not encroach on areas set aside for other games. Even in the experimental stage the Hongkew links are said to provide an excellent game of a far more varied character than those on the Public Recreation Ground. Meanwhile the proposal is to be brought before the forthcoming meeting of the Shanghai Golf Club together with a scheme for increasing the membership of the Club, under certain new conditions.

BARON SAKATANI.

Baron Sakatani has arrived at Shinjōnosaki on his way back from his travels in the Occident, and has of course been besieged by interviewers. He appears to have spoken with some minuteness as to the places he visited and the people he met, but the most interesting part of his remarks refers to Manchuria. He regards Japanese enterprise in that region with very hopeful eyes. The shower of gold that fell throughout the Three Provinces during the War was followed necessarily by a season of apparent aridity, but things are now falling into their natural groove, and the period of sound enterprise has commenced. The transfer of the South Manchuria Railway from official hands to a private company has been more or less criticised, but events have amply proved the wisdom of the act, and the Railway now gives earnest of becoming a profitable property. The Baron had to encounter many queries about the Faku-men Railway question, but he was able to give assurances that Japan intended to adhere strictly to her Treaty obligations, and that she had no intention whatever of pursuing a selfish and exclusive policy in Manchuria. He was also much questioned about the country's finances, and here too he was able to make favourable statements. He found that the policy of retrenchment pursued by the present Cabinet was generally approved, and that Japanese finance and economics were now regarded in the West with eyes of greatly restored confidence.

It is again confidently asserted by some Tokyo newspapers that Baron Sakatani will be appointed Minister of Finance in a few days. The Hochi goes so far as to say that the Baron's refusal to accept an entertainment proposed by the people of Okayama prefecture, his native place, was because of a telegram from Marquis Katsura asking him to return to Tokyo by the 24th inst. Whatever truth there may be in that rumour, the Baron has allowed himself to be interviewed and has made some interesting remarks. As an inference from his experiences during his travels, he advances the novel theory that the tide of prosperity that swept over Europe and America was due to the immense orders for supplies which emanated from Russia and Japan during the War—40 millions sterling from Russia and 20 millions sterling from Japan—and that the subsequent depression was attributable to the cessation of these orders. Things are now beginning to right themselves, but some little time must elapse before a condition of normal prosperity is restored, for neither Europe nor America can yet be said to have emerged fully from the period of retrenchment. The economic situation in Japan is of course more or less influenced by that of the Occident, and the Japanese people will do well not to lose sight of the fact. The Baron says that he was frequently questioned with reference to the state of Japan's finances, and that he found many misgivings as to their soundness. These misgivings he was able to dispel. Undoubtedly the national resources had been greatly strained by the War, but the severest point had long been passed, and arrangements had now been fully made for the discharge of all the country's debts within 30 years. In the column of ordinary revenue there was always a substantial surplus, and if such was not the case with regard to the extraordinary column, the fact must be mainly attributed to outlays connected with various enterprises of development and progress in which the country's circumstances require it to engage. There were no unsound elements in Japan's finances, and the Baron thinks that he was able to submit to foreign financiers detailed figures establishing this fact. The financial programme of the present Cabinet had produced an excellent effect in Europe and America, and this, supplemented by a clearer understanding of the details relating to the condition of the national finances, had exercised a wholesome effect, as was shown by the appreciation of Government securities. Speaking of the entry of foreign capital into Japan, the Baron called attention to the fact that, whereas there were only some 200 million yen worth of Japanese securities in the hands of Western capitalists before the War, this total has been sextupled during the conflict, and it could not be said that the whole had been digested. Time alone was required, however, to complete the process, and the present appreciation of Japanese securities was a sure sign that foreign capital would soon again be available for Japan's use. The Baron spoke in highly eulogistic terms of the able manner in which Italian finances had been managed in recent years.

THE AFFAIR AT THE COMMANDER ISLANDS.

It is difficult to decipher the exact details of the recent incident at the Commander Islands, when the boats of the Japanese schooners To-o Maru and Boso Maru were fired upon by the Russian guards. The main facts, however, appear to be, according to Japanese accounts, that the boats rowed ashore to take in water, and that being mistaken for poachers, they were at once fired upon, with the result that 6 were shot dead, 3 were drowned, and 8 were taken prisoners. These last have reached Vladivostok by the Silka and are now in custody. There is no official statement as yet, and inasmuch as no opportunity for communicating with the Russian authorities at the Islands will present itself until next year, the exact facts of the case must remain obscure for some months. It is, however, an old story. There are living in this settlement at present men who could tell a good deal about similar incidents in which they themselves took an active part. The fact is that so long as poaching continues to be a recognised by-product of legitimate fishing operations, life and limb can not fail to be imperilled.

Meanwhile, unless the reports from Vladivostok and Siberia are singularly exaggerated, the Russian officials in those regions are behaving towards the Japanese in a manner very inconsistent with the policy dictated from St. Petersburg. There seems to be something like a mania for suspecting Japanese subjects of being spies, and respectable merchants travelling on their legitimate business are liable to be seized and imprisoned without any tangible cause. The Hochi Shimbun publishes a story which in its naked form is almost incredible. It is to the effect that at a garden party recently given in Vladivostok within the precincts of the Japanese Consulate, some of the guests becoming noisily hilarious under the influence of liquor, one of the Russian officers on duty for the day marched a patrol of soldiers into the enclosure, and administered severe beatings to the merry-makers. This tale requires a great deal of confirmation, but it is very evident that the conduct of affairs in Siberia and Vladivostok is beginning to arouse some resentment among the Japanese. Possibly this is a resurrection of that troublesome old figure, the man at the front, whose doings not many years ago used constantly to complicate his country's relations with other Powers. Certainly such incidents as the above contrast very vividly with the Czar's liberal action towards the men of the Miyu Maru.

"LIST OF THE HIGHER METROPOLITAN & PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES OF CHINA."

This excellent book, invaluable to any publicist having to do with Chinese affairs and to any student of the Far East, has now been corrected up to September 1st, 1908, and published by Messrs. Kelly & Walsh. The work, as many of our readers are doubtless aware, is compiled by the Chinese Secretaries of His Britannic Majesty's Legation in Peking, and the latest revision is due to Mr. S. F. Mayers, Assistant Chinese Secretary. We are not sure how many compilations there have been in all, but three certainly have come before us for review, and we have had only one opinion to express, namely, that the compilers deserve unlimited thanks. We can all identify a Chinese official's name by means of the ideographs used in writing it, but such identification leaves us still very far from a knowledge of the official's record, his present position and his past distinctions. Every one of these details is furnished by the "List," and, for our own part, we could not over-state the aid we have derived from it and the satisfaction we experience at seeing it in its most modernized form.

KOREA.

Friday, October 23.

The conduct of the Captain in command of the troop of cavalry responsible for the death of 21 Korean subjects at Thaiin is evidently under close investigation. The plea that the officer was misled by a report received from the Headman of the district is thought to have mitigating, but not exculpating, force. The view said to be taken is that it ought to have been possible to ascertain at an early period of the attack whether the Koreans were disposed to offer any resistance, and although some casualties might have been excusable before this fact was made clear, such wholesale slaughter as that which actually took place could scarcely have been warranted by the circumstances. It is therefore expected that the officer responsible for this unhappy incident will be tried by court-martial.

The Fiji Shimpō, however, quotes Captain Hayashi as throwing some new light on the incident. This officer was specially sent to investigate the facts, and he has now returned to Shimonoseki carrying his report. From statements attributed to him we gather that a large force of insurgents had actually made their appearance in this very district on the day previous to the incident, and had harassed the people greatly. On the receipt of official intelligence that these insurgents had made their appearance again, the Japanese cavalry officer had no difficulty in believing the story, especially as he and his men were on the watch for something of the kind. A spy was immediately despatched to obtain intelligence, and his report also being unfavourable, the attack was opened. At an early stage, however, the officer in command seems to have entertained some doubts as to the true nature of the alleged insurgents. He accordingly despatched an interpreter to make inquiries, and this man also carried back intelligence confirming previously received reports. The Japanese officer then had no hesitation in continuing the attack. That is the Fiji's verdict.

Sunday, October 25.

It appears that the statement as to a sum of 100 yen having been given by way of solatium to the families of each of the 21 Koreans who recently met their death through error, must be interpreted, as we supposed at the time, to mean that this sum was a gift from the headquarters of the Il Chinghoi. We now learn from Seoul telegrams that the solatium granted by the Residency-General was 1,000 yen per family, and that Colonel Muda, of the headquarter staff in Korea, accompanied by several officers, proceeded to North Chhollado and offered direct apologies and explanations at each of the bereaved households. It is added that these explanations have been received with satisfaction, and that the families of the deceased expressed themselves as entirely content. The incident was certainly most unhappy, but its sequel has been useful as showing that the Japanese troops in Korea attach full importance to the lives of the people, and are not guilty of the indiscriminate slaughter which has been laid to their charge by some critics.

On the 24th inst. the fine new hospital which has just been erected in Seoul, and equipped under the directions of Dr. Sato, was officially opened. The ceremony seems to have been very brilliant. The original idea had been that the Emperor himself would attend, but in the end His Majesty sent a representative bearing a very gracious message. Practically all the high personages in the Korean capital, from Viscount Sone and General Hasegawa downwards, were in attendance, and it is hoped that the hospital will serve as a model for other similar institutions.

A telegram from Seoul says that the Emperor and Empress have addressed to Princess Ito a congratulatory telegram on her attainment of her 61st birthday, and have announced their intention of sending commemorative gifts.

Monday, October 26.

Telegrams from Seoul to the Asahi Shimbun say that the unfortunate happening at Thaiin did not produce in Korea any excitement at all commensurate with that caused by it in Japan. Our contemporary's correspondent attributes this Japanese excitement largely to the influence of the Il Ching-hoi leader and his associates, but truly we fail to see why any such explanation should be necessary. On the contrary, it is very much to the credit of the Japanese that they did take the matter in this serious light, and we cannot for a moment suppose that journals like the Fiji Shimpō were at all within the reach of Il Ching-hoi influence when they wrote in an indignant and sympathetic strain about the unfortunate mistake. The Japanese authorities did the right thing when they resolved to despatch Major-General Muda to make apologies to the families of the deceased and to present them with a handsome solatium, and when they appointed a commission of inquiry to determine the culpability of the officer commanding the troop of cavalry.

Tuesday, October 27.

According to the Nichi Nichi's correspondence from Korea the insurrection has again assumed somewhat formidable dimensions in Chhollado. A band of about 150 is reported to have had a fight with a Japanese detachment at Naju on the 22nd inst. Ten of the insurgents and one Japanese were killed. This is not an isolated occurrence, for our contemporary's telegram adds that the apparition of bands of insurgents numbering about 100 has of late become common in this province.

THE TOKYO MUNICIPALITY.

On the 26th inst. the Tokyo City Assembly held its first meeting since the re-election of Mr. Ozaki Yukio to the position of Mayor. Mr. Ozaki, in the self-deprecating strain habitually adopted by Japanese, said that his previous tenure of office, lasting for nearly five years, had been disfigured by many mistakes, but he hoped with the assistance of his fellow-officials to make a better record in the future. After this formal address of thanks, one member of the House, Mr. Aoki, rose and delivered a vehement philippic against Mr. Ozaki, whose re-election he had opposed tooth and nail, and to whom he now recommended a closer study of the English models which Mr. Ozaki professed to follow.

An interesting issue was raised by Mr. Nedzu, one of the directors of the Tokyo Railway Company. He said that the extension of the Company's lines in the Azabu suburb of Tokyo was completely hung up by the action of one landholder, who declined to allow the Company to run its road through his property. Mr. Nedzu desired to know that steps the Municipality proposed to take in this matter. We presume that this complaint had reference to a state of affairs which has for some time attracted the attention of citizens of the Azabu district. For more than a year back the Railway Company has been engaged in the construction of a road running from Tengenji to Akabane, and there is no doubt that this line will be a very great convenience. The distance is not great, but some troublesome engineering operations have been involved. Now, however, the line is nearly completed, with the exception of one little spot where the curious spectacle is presented of a row of iron posts erected within one or two feet of the outer enclosure of a spacious yashiki. These posts mark the central line of the proposed road, which, however, can not be completed without cutting off a section of the yashiki's enclosure, and the owner of the latter seems to have persistently refused to allow the work, for there the posts stand and there the enclosure stands, and there both have stood for several months silently protesting against each other's presence. Of course there are regulations which apply to such a case. Under these regulations an appeal can be made by the Railway people to the Government and the latter has the right to appropriate the land at a reasonable price. But apparently the Company shrinks from recourse to this measure.

THE INTERNATIONAL PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. Hayashida, Chief Secretary of the House of Representatives, has returned from his trip in the Occident and has been interviewed at Tsuruga by a representative of the Mainichi Dempo. The object of his mission was to examine and report upon the nature of the edifices used for parliamentary purposes in the West and the operation of constitutional systems. Of this latter feature he can scarcely be supposed to have made a very accurate survey in the course of such a hurried visit, but his impression may be recorded that England, alike in theory and in fact, is the real home of parliamentary government; that everything in France is superficially beautiful but not radically sound, and that Germany is remarkable for the intense spirit of industry which pervades all classes. He goes on to say that the idea conveyed to him by England's attitude is one of conservatism, whereas the sentiment pervading the United States and Germany is a determination not to be beaten, but France has lost much of her vim, and while she nominally maintains her old purpose of rivalry with Germany, she has ceased to be a really formidable competitor of the latter. Speaking of parliamentary procedure in different countries, Mr. Hayashida has unqualified praise to bestow on English methods. He finds that in London questions are scarcely ever propounded in either House of Parliament unless they are actuated by an honest desire to elicit information, and unless they really have some important bearing on public affairs. In Germany, too, he observed that the demeanour of the Reichstag reflected the earnestness of the nation and that the newspapers showed an admirable sense of responsibility in discussing public affairs. All this contrasted very vividly with the habit too prevalent in Japan of propounding questions in the Diet merely for the sake of embarrassing the Cabinet, and of publishing in the newspapers articles actuated simply by considerations of political intrigue.

JAPAN AND CHINA

Saturday, October 24.

London and Liverpool appear to have concluded that Japan is about to adopt the very wise course of effecting an amicable settlement of all questions outstanding between herself and China. In a telegram published by the Shanghai Mercury, the Daily Chronicle is quoted as saying that according to its private advices from Japan, reliance may be placed upon the recently circulated rumour that Japan is disposed to waive many of her claims in the cause of good neighbourly feeling. Liverpool journals are also quoted as interpreting the signs of the times in a similar sense, and as strongly approving Japan's good sense in extricating herself from a situation which exposes her to suspicion without being productive of any profit.

So far as we can judge from the utterances of our Tokyo contemporaries, there is a strong feeling in the Japanese capital that China has deliberately resolved to have recourse to a waiting policy. She wants to tire out this Empire, knowing well that an unsettled state of relations between the two countries is likely to conduce more to the injury of her neighbour than of herself, inasmuch as it means the postponement of many practical questions which are bound to present themselves from time to time in connexion with South Manchuria. The Chinese Government is, of course, quite justified in adopting that policy. It has to consider its own interests before anything else, and, if the waiting game commends itself to Peking's sagacity, the Waiwupu is quite right to play that game. The question is, however, whether Japan can find her account in being made the corpus vile of this procrastinating experiment. In so far as Tokyo newspapers represent the country's opinion, we judge that the disposition of the Japanese is to emerge from such an irksome position, even at some cost. The Hochi Shimbun, we note specially, alleges that these considerations were on the point of bearing fruit with the Saionji Cabinet when its resignation of office occurred.

Monday, October 26.

The Asahi Shimbun has a double headed article based on information said to have been obtained by inquiries made in official quarters. It virtually denies the rumours recently circulated as to negotiations between Mr. Tang Shaoi and the Foreign Office in Tokyo. However desirous the Japanese Government may be of arriving at a satisfactory settlement of all outstanding questions with China, it is not possible to effect anything definite by conference with a statesman who is not duly accredited by his government. Mr. Tang lacks this essential qualification, and therefore the Japanese Government continues to rely upon the offices of its duly accredited Representative in Peking, Mr. Ijūin.

The Hochi Shimbun and the Chuo quote an opinion said to have been delivered by an international juriconsult on the above subject. We gather from this publication that a section of the political world is preparing to vehemently oppose any concessions with regard to Fakumen or Chientao. No special arguments are adduced in support of an obdurate attitude on Japan's part. The line of contention is simply that as her statesmen must have fully discussed and investigated these problems before deciding upon the policy to be pursued with regard to them, there ought to be no departure now from that policy. But such a one-sided manner of considering the question will not commend itself to thoughtful persons. Side by side with right stands expediency, and not infrequently the latter takes precedence of the former in the councils of wise diplomacy. The present Japanese Cabinet has amply shown, not now for the first time, that it has the courage of its opinions, and that it knows how to yield as well as how to be firm. We find it permissible to hope that the Japanese people will not be swayed by the advice of men in whose eyes every concession is undignified.

THE UNITED STATES FLEET.

The 23rd inst. having brought to a conclusion the official period of Tokyo's reception to the officers of the United States Fleet, the Emperor instructed Mr. Ito and other Chamberlains of the Imperial Household to give a farewell luncheon at the Detached Palace to Admiral Sperry and the principal officers of the Fleet. Each of the officers received a silver boubonniere as a parting gift.

At half past three Admiral Sperry and his officers left Tokyo. The crowds who assembled to cheer them and to sing the United States national anthem were just as dense and enthusiastic on this occasion as they had been at the arrival of Japan's honoured guests. In fact, from first to last the spirit of welcome never flagged, and the long series of festivities were uniformly hearty. On the 22nd inst. the British Embassy had a fortuitous opportunity of doubling its original hospitable intentions, for owing to the threatening character of the weather in the forenoon of that day the Ambassador put off until the following day such of his guests as could be conveniently postponed. It was of course impossible to adopt this course in the case of Admiral Sperry and his officers, every moment of whose time had been bespoken. Accordingly the British Ambassador received this section of his guests, and gave a second party on the 23rd to all the rest. Fortunately on the 22nd the weather cleared before noon and the afternoon was ideal. Moreover the notice of postponement had failed to reach, or had been designed not to reach, a considerable number of the principal Japanese guests, and thus the party though somewhat shorn of its original dimensions was fairly representative, and all the guests enjoyed themselves thoroughly. On the following day the Japanese and foreign residents of Yokohama were present in great numbers, and the weather being perfect, everything passed off with great éclat. In the absence of Lady MacDonald the duties of hostess were discharged by Lady Northcote and Mrs. Lowther.

In the evening of the same day the American Friends Society gave a dinner to 47 officers of the Fleet at the Koyokan, on which occasion Viscount Kaneko presided, and delivered one of his usual eloquent speeches.

CHIENTAO.

Friday, October 23.

The Nippon affirms—though we must observe that it is alone in making the statement—that as a result of conferences which have taken place in Tokyo between Mr. Tang Shaoi and the Foreign Office, a settlement of the Chientao problem has been virtually reached. The terms of settlement are said by our contemporary to be as follow:—First, China's sovereignty shall be fully recognised throughout the region in question. Secondly, the territorial boundaries claimed by the Chinese Government shall be accepted. Thirdly, the right of Korean subjects to settle in Chientao shall be fully recognised, and a treaty for protecting their persons and property and for removing all sources of complication shall be concluded between China and Korea. Fourthly, Korean Consuls shall have the right to reside and perform their functions in Chientao. Fifthly, the mining privileges now enjoyed by Japanese and Korean subjects at Tienpanshan shall be duly recognised by the Chinese Government.

The above, according to our contemporary, represent only the broad bases of the agreement, the details being left for insertion in a treaty to be subsequently negotiated by Plenipotentiaries of the two Powers. The Nippon goes on to say that Mr. Tang Shaoi is much gratified by Japan's liberal attitude in this matter, and that he expects to be able to carry within sight of settlement all the other outstanding problems, namely, those of Fakumen, Fushun, the Kilin-Changchun Railway, the Mukden-Antung Railway, the Horiyong Railway etc. In approaching these questions, Count Komura has the great advantage of having served for several years as Japanese Representative in Peking and of being consequently well versed in Chinese affairs. Whether the country will quietly accept solutions of all these problems on lines similarly favourable to China may perhaps be problematical, but we have confidence not only in China's moderation but also in Count Komura's diplomacy.

AN INTERCHANGE OF INTERNATIONAL COURTESIES.

The President of the Republic of the U.S.A. instructed the American Ambassador in Tokyo to present to His Majesty the Emperor of Japan the following message:—

"Through the American Ambassador, I wish in this personal manner to extend to Your Majesty the thanks of the American People for the signal generosity, courtesy and hospitality with which the American Fleet has been received on its visit to Japan. The people of the U. S. have been deeply touched by this fresh and striking proof of friendship and regard. The officers of the Fleet report that, hearty though their reception has been everywhere else, it has nowhere been more hearty, nowhere more hospitable, than in Japan. On behalf of this nation, I desire to express my acknowledgements to you and to say how deeply this nation appreciates this fresh proof and seal of the ancient friendship between the two peoples.

Your message to me was not only deeply appreciated by me but when published gave a lively satisfaction to all the citizens of the United States.

The Japanese Ambassador in Washington has been instructed on the 26th October to deliver to the President the following message from His Majesty the Emperor:—

"I thank you most sincerely for your very kind message which the American Ambassador delivered to me upon the departure of the Atlantic Fleet from our shore.

I was highly gratified to learn that the reception accorded to the Fleet was so satisfactory and agreeable to you and to the people of the United States. I desire to express my appreciation of your kindness in accepting the invitation of my Government for the Fleet to visit Japan, since by that visit I was afforded an opportunity to testify anew to you the assurance of my high regard and perfect esteem, and my subjects were enabled to give fresh proof of their sincere attachment for your countrymen, and I am very happy to believe that the memorable event will surely tend to cement the bonds of friendship and good neighbourhood between our two countries."

FESTIVITIES IN TOKYO.

One of the most successful entertainments organized by way of welcome to Admiral Sperry and the officers of the United States Fleet was a No performance at the Nogakudo, a hall specially constructed for such purposes at Kudan. The host was Mr. Kondo, President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, and all the Directors and members of the Tokyo Staff of the great Steamship Company were present to look after the guests. A very costly and beautiful programme had been prepared, its most notable feature being two admirably executed chromoxylographs representing the Fairy of the Robe of Feathers and the Ghost of Tomonori, each clad in the rich garments affected by the aristocrats who, in old Japan, made the No one of their chief pastimes. Between the two solemn and stately dances of the No proper an amusing farce (kyogen) was introduced, according to the traditional canon of art that the sad must be relieved by the silly. The performance began at 3.40 p.m., and, punctually at 5, refreshments were served in a huge pavilion specially erected for the occasion and decorated with great taste and brilliancy. Mr. Kondo, at a suitable moment during the repast, made the following speech:—

ADMIRAL SPERRY, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—
In the name of the Japan Mail Steamship Company, I desire to bid you the heartiest possible welcome to this country, and to express the hope that you will carry away from our shores an abiding conviction of the profound and unalienable sentiments of respect and affection entertained by the whole Japanese nation towards the Great Republic, which, to all time, will remain our creditor for acts of neighbourly good will.

In devising the entertainment which, with many apologies, we have the honour to offer you to-day, our aim has been to show you one phase of the old civilization of Japan, for we venture to believe that, in your friendly eyes, the past of our country as well as its present has interest.

The Tokyo Municipality organised two entertainments on the 22nd in honour of the officers of the United States Squadron. One was a luncheon at the Seiyoken in Ueno Park, and the other a garden party in the Hibiya Park. The Mayor of Tokyo, Mr. Ozaki, naturally acted as host on both occasions. At the lunch he adopted the very sensible course of abstaining from actually making a speech, preferring to hand to his guests printed copies of what he had to say. The speech is over long for reproduction in full, but its concluding paragraphs are too interesting to be omitted.

When, in January 1872, the late Prince Iwakura, as Japan's first Ambassador to the West, visited your Congress Mr. Blaine, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, welcomed the Prince and suite in a speech couched in terms of extreme courtesy and cordiality, even to the extent of giving them the right to sit in the House during their stay in Washington. In concluding his response, Prince Iwakura said: "When, in the future, the doors of trade are thrown open and widened, as they are bound to be, to the immense benefit of our millions, the irresistibility of it will be like innumerable streams rushing into the great ocean which is in the common embrace of the two countries, and I hope there will grow up between them a net-work of friendly relations interwoven in harmonious blending, even as the waters of the Pacific inseparably intermingle once they leave their river-mouths." Gentlemen, it seems to me a most significant fact that the waters which separate the two countries also join us together, they being in their common embrace, as Prince Iwakura said. Your nation has always represented the West to us, and ours, the extreme East to you. The Japanese nation feels, as no doubt your nation also feels, that Providence has destined the two to solve together the great problem of East and West. And since our common point of parting and meeting lies in the great Pacific, and because that great ocean, the grandest living example of assimilation and fusion, must therefore be guarded by the two Powers against all that threatens its sacred name, it is most inspiring to think that the great Navy which you represent and the Navy which the Japanese nation feels proud to possess, are both those which stand for justice and humanity.—the two sublime principles which at supreme moments can rise above the questions of race and colour. Your Excellencies and gentlemen, I now ask you to drink with me to the honour of the distinguished representatives of the great United States Navy and of the American people, who we trust will be our friends forever.

Admiral Sperry replied in a short but feeling speech. He alluded with special pleasure to the fact that several of the most distinguished men in the Japanese Navy had studied their profession in American colleges, and might therefore be regarded as fellow-students of their visitors, and he declared that the very cordial reception given to himself and the officers and men under his command could not fail to cement the two nations.

Between 1 and 2 p.m. the garden party in Hibiya commenced. The American bluejackets arrived in parties of about 100 each, and were lustily cheered as they entered the gates of the Park through the beautiful evergreen arches which had been erected at each of the entrances. The weather which, during the preceding night and up to nearly 10 o'clock that day had seemed to presage great disappointment, cleared up before noon, and the afternoon was an ideal Japanese autumn day, a soft atmosphere glittering with sunshine. It need hardly be said that the Park was resplendent with bunting and decorations of all kinds, and that into the latter were worked numerous devices declaring or illustrating the union existing between the United States and Japan. There were of course various performances, dancing by geisha and a procession by the Tokyo firemen being conspicuous. The Mayor read a speech of welcome, and Admiral Sperry replied with the directness and soldierlike brevity which distinguish all his utterances. One of the most touching incidents of the entertainment was the singing of the American national anthem by school children from three districts in the capital. Refreshments were served on a plentiful scale, and the bluejackets seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly, but with such remarkable moderation that every man was able to take his place steadily in the ranks for the return march, which was made amid vehement cheering from the assembled crowds.

Yesterday brought to a close the Japanese welcome to the officers and seamen. The programme for the day was as follows:—

7.00 p.m.—Dinner by the Japanese Commander-in-Chief, Vice-Admiral Baron Goro Ijuin, on board the "Fuji."

7.30 p.m.—Japanese Dinner by the Members of America's Friends' Association at the Maple Club.

7.30 p.m.—Japanese Dinner by Count Takatsugu Togo.

9.30 p.m.—Reception by the Japanese Commander-in-Chief on board the "Mikasa."

Evening.—Illuminations, Fireworks.

FAREWELL BANQUET AT THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

On the evening of the 22nd his Excellency Count Komura gave a farewell banquet in the official residence of the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs to Admiral Sperry and the senior officers of the United States Battle-ship Squadron. Count Komura spoke as follows:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES AND GENTLEMEN:—
We are met together this evening to do honour to our distinguished guests, Admiral Sperry and his officers. To say that we are highly honored by their visit and that it has been a great pleasure for us to extend to them a cordial welcome, would be to repeat a thrice told truism known to all the world.

As the inevitable moment approaches for us to bid you, Admiral Sperry and your officers, a reluctant good-bye, I am constrained to ask you to take back to the people of the United States the message of good will and kindly feeling which you have seen in every face and heard in every voice of the tens of thousands of my countrymen who have had the opportunity of greeting you. These unmistakable signs of friendship and esteem are the sure reflection of the sentiments of all His Imperial Majesty's loyal subjects. We do not and cannot forget that in our hours of trouble and stress, we have not looked in vain to the Great Republic across the broad Pacific for sympathy, and that in our forward struggle we have had the example and encouragement of your people. We hope therefore that you will see in our cordial welcome to you a tribute of enduring respect and regard for you as the gallant representative of a gallant service and for your worthy President, your people and your country.

That the voyage of your fleet will continue to be safe and successful to the end is the sincere wish of all my countrymen. Your Excellencies and Gentlemen, I ask you to join me in drinking to the health and prosperity of Admiral Sperry, his officers and the Grand Atlantic Fleet.

Admiral Sperry replied:—

YOUR EXCELLENCIES AND GENTLEMEN:—
The splendid welcome you have extended to the officers and men of the fleet and to such of their families as have been so fortunate as to be with them, cannot be mistaken, and it must be perpetuated for generations as tens of thousands of children massed in the streets have lifted their hands and shouted "banzai" day after day. No better gage of lasting friendship could be given.

When Japan opened her doors to the world nearly two generations ago it was fortunate for America that it was first to her, and that to her you looked for new ideals, above all in matters of education. With an enlightened population, sympathetically educated, fully alive to the great community of interests in the Pacific, peace, good will and happiness will bring us still closer together.

No two countries have ever clasped hand across the sea so warmly as on this occasion. Day by day thousands of active minded, intelligent young Americans have received official and personal hospitality at the hands of the Government and people and have penetrated everywhere in the great cities of Tokyo and Yokohama, gathering new ideas and being treated with a generous courtesy, which they and their tens of thousands of home people will never forget.

Both countries may rest content that intelligent sympathy has drawn our ancient friendly ties still closer, thanks to the visit of the Atlantic Fleet at the invitation of His Majesty's Government.

In the name of the officers and men of the fleet I thank you most heartily.

MANCHURIA.

In our last issue we mentioned that a number of Chinese in Manchuria were interesting themselves actively in the construction of the Hailuncheng-Kaiyuan Railway; that they had already subscribed a sum of 800,000 yen, and that they were seeking a concession from the Central Government. This is confirmed by later news, which puts the amount subscribed at a million yen and adds that the subscribers are very keen about the project. On the other hand there is a rumour that, in consideration of the projected recognition of China's sovereign power in Chientao, Japan will propose the construction of a railway running from Songjin on the north-east coast of Korea across the Peninsula to Hoiryong-Hailuncheng via Tunglwa. From Hailuncheng it would be carried westward to Kaiyuan and northward to Kilin, being thus brought into connexion with the Kilin-Changchun Railway. The idea is that this road should be a joint Chinese and Japanese enterprise. It would certainly contribute enormously to the development of East Manchuria, but, if such a project has really been mooted, an independent charter is not likely to be given to the Chinese who are planning the Dai-luncheng-Kaiyuan road.

It will be remembered that, a short time ago, there were rumours of a mining enterprise on the right bank of the Yalu, the exploiters being Messrs. Bush, of Newchwang, in combination with a syndicate of Chinese and Japanese subjects and of British capitalists in London. Details of this matter are now published by the Asahi Shimbun, not authoritatively, however, but only on the basis of rumour. From this information it appears that the previous story was at least premature. The mine itself seems to be a reality, and is said to be of great extent with ample promise of iron, copper and other minerals. Attention was first concentrated on its potentialities by Messrs. Bush in combination with some Chinese subjects, and a provisional charter was obtained from the then Governor of Mukden. The usual period followed of protracted deliberation on the part of the Peking Government. In the meanwhile the War broke out, and Manchuria becoming the cynosure of general observation, the Industrial Bank interested itself in this valuable mine and rendered considerable assistance to Messrs. Bush in the matter of funds. Thus the Syndicate came to include Japanese, Chinese and British subjects, and a fresh attempt was made to secure the approval of the Chinese Government. By this time, however, the rights-recovery fever had seized the Chinese nation, and the Peking Government declined to endorse the Mukden charter. An exit from this disappointing situation was sought by enlisting the co-operation of the South Manchuria Railway, and Baron Goto is said to have taken up the matter vigorously.

Our readers are aware that three feasible routes were indicated by the engineers appointed to survey the Kilin-Changchun Railway, and that whereas the Japanese experts were in favour of the most southern of the three, the Chinese advocated the most northern. The matter was referred to Peking and, after some discussion there, the Japanese waived their view in deference to China's wishes. We now read that these negotiations were not limited to the Kilin-Changchun road: they extended also to some works of reconstruction on the Hsiumintun-Mukden line. The cost of the latter works is estimated at 800,000 yen, and the expenditures on the Kilin-Changchun road will be 5,470,000. These total outlays are to be divided equally between the two countries, and a few days ago rumour alleged that the Chinese Government had approached foreign financiers to obtain the necessary funds. It is now stated, however, that the South Manchuria Railway Company will lend to China the sum required at 5 per cent. interest, the bonds to be taken at their face value, the details as to commission and brokerage being left for subsequent discussion.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

As the great day for the Presidential election approaches the world begins to be deluged by telegrams from the scene of the contest. The candidates seem to be putting forward well nigh superhuman efforts. It almost passes the bounds of belief to imagine

Mr. Bryan delivering 32 speeches in two days, as he is said to have done on the 26th and 27th inst. He is certainly using his great oratorical gifts to their full advantage, and that means a great deal when we remember that his personality is also magnetically attractive. Whatever the final outcome of the struggle be, a record will have been established in the matter of platform achievement. Meanwhile, it seems that the contest is going to be very close. At the eleventh hour the sympathies of the Labour Party, or at any rate of a large section of them, seem to have been alienated from the Republican candidate, and although President Roosevelt is endeavouring with his usual ability to correct this phase of the situation, full success does not appear to have attended his efforts. As usual, everything turns upon the result of the polling in New York, and the rival candidates are making that place the final scene of their struggle.

It must be confessed that in the eyes of disinterested onlookers, Mr. Taft has not fully risen to this momentous occasion. Possibly the telegrams do not convey commensurately full information of his sayings and doings, but by the aid of the equipment with which the wire furnishes us we can only conclude that the Republican candidate is quite overshadowed by the President. Roosevelt it is who steps into every breach and leads every assault upon the Democratic stronghold. In fact the impression is being gradually produced upon the American people that in voting the Republican ticket they will be re-electing Roosevelt in fact though not in name. The directing of events into this groove may of course be deliberately intentional, but whether it makes altogether for the dignity of the President or for the reputation of Mr. Taft are questions which can scarcely fail to present themselves to thoughtful Americans.

According to the Asahi's telegrams from New York, the most trustworthy estimates of the result of the election are that Mr. Taft will poll 241 votes and Mr. Bryan 156. This does not include New York, where the rival candidates are now putting forth all their strength.

Incidentally it is mentioned that as election day corresponds with the date of the Japanese national Fete, it has been decided to postpone the latter celebration until the 4th and 5th of November. On the former day the Japanese residents of New York will organise a jubilee in the Carnegie Hotel, and on the latter Mr. Consul General Mizuno will hold a reception at the Astor House.

PRINCE AND PRINCESS ITO.

On the 25th inst. Prince and Princess Ito gave a brilliant entertainment at their Omori villa to celebrate the Prince's 68th birthday and the Princess' 61st. In connexion with this the Chuo Shimbun publishes a long appreciation by Count Okuma, who dwells upon a fact familiar to those having intimate knowledge but unrecognised by the general public, namely, that Prince Ito is the pillar of Japanese finance. The great trinity of this country's economists is Ito, Inome and Matsukata, and among the three Ito is greatest. The Count compares the Prince to Mount Fuji and says that, like a mountain, he must be viewed from afar to appreciate his magnitude.

There were about 75 guests present at the entertainment given by Prince Ito on the 25th inst. to celebrate the attainment of his own 68th birthday and of the Princess' 61st. The number being so small was necessarily limited to the most intimate friends of the host and hostess. Prince Yamagata proposed the health of the Prince and Princess. He said that every Japanese being well aware of the great services Prince Ito had rendered to his country from a period dating prior to the Meiji Era, and unceasingly throughout the whole of that era, it was unnecessary to dwell upon the fact now, but he invited the special attention of his hearers to the point that Princess Ito, by her able management of the Prince's household affairs, had relieved her illustrious consort from all sources of domestic trouble, and by thus enabling him to devote his undivided energies to his country's cause, had placed the whole nation under a debt of gratitude to her. He invited all the friends collected that day to drink the health of the Princess with the utmost cordiality.

It is evident that this celebration deserves to be regarded as a memorable event, inasmuch as it constitutes the first public tribute paid to the national services of a lady, during the Meiji Era at all events.

The leader of the Il Ching-hoi was present to offer his congratulations, which were supplemented by telegrams from all the Korean statesmen of note. The Emperor of Korea sent a tobacco box of pure gold.

AMERICA AND JAPAN.

It really appears, if we may trust a telegram sent from San Francisco to the Hochu Shimbun, that among the inhabitants of the Pacific slope there were some who feared that the fate of the Maine would overtake many of the battleships under Admiral Sperry's command when they reached their anchorages in Japanese waters. This really "takes the cake," as the saying is. By what process of self-deception any group of Americans however small can have succeeded in entertaining such apprehensions, it passes human perception to explain. We do not suppose that these alarmists numbered one in every million of the inhabitants of the great Republic, and it is now very satisfactory to learn that they have lost face altogether.

The representative of the Associated Press in Tokyo has telegraphed certain statements made by Marquis Katsura at an interview. The Marquis is credited with saying that the common mission of the United States and Japan in the Far East is to extend civilization and progress. The larger and more powerful America's Fleet, the greater guarantee will it constitute for the preservation of peace. Japan intends to send her surplus population, not to the United States, but to Korea. Japan is determined to assent in practice as well as in theory the policy of maintaining China's territorial integrity and the open door, and she is prepared to enter any conference seriously proposed for the discussion of Far Eastern questions between the Powers concerned, namely, the United States, Great Britain, Japan and China. This telegram is said to have produced an excellent effect in America.

According to the same correspondent, Admiral Sperry stated to him that what struck the American officers specially was the attitude of the thousands of children who greeted them with cheers wherever they went. This sentiment of the next generation of Japan might safely be inferred from the voices of these little ones.

POLITICS.

Rumours are again rife of acute dissensions in the ranks of the Progressists, and there is talk of a definite split between the section under Mr. Inukai and that under Mr. Oishi. Perhaps this is the wolf come at last, but its arrival has been so often simulated that the public will be very chary of credence.

Rumour continues to busy itself with the prospects of the Progressist Party. It is confidently alleged that friction steadily increases between the so called "Reform Section," under the leadership of Mr. Oishi Masami, and the "Conservative Section" under Mr. Inukai Ki. Long stories are published by Tokyo papers about what this person did or said and what that person left unsaid or undone, but the upshot alone has interest, namely, that whatever attempts the leaders make to become reconciled are defeated by the machinations of their followers. Thus in fine this once great Party is threatened with disruption into three impotent sections, namely, the Reform Section, the Conservative Section and the Independent Section. It will be little short of a national calamity if this occurs. Some on-lookers contend that since the Progressists were originally Count Okuma's children, it was inevitable that they should fall into a state of disorder as soon as they cut themselves adrift from the paternal hand. Certainly considering how much they owed to Count Okuma's personality, their abandonment of his nominal leadership must be regarded as a fatal mistake. One may reasonably suppose, however, that during 27 years of existence, nearly the whole of which long period was passed under the tutelage of Count Okuma, the Progressists must have imbibed something of the power of political enthusiasm which emanates from that great politician, and must also have developed some force of cohesion if only from long habit. We shall not believe in their disruption until it becomes an accomplished fact.

We may here note that there is some trouble in the Kenkyu-kai section of the House of Peers. This section is under the leadership of Viscount Okabe, and it comprises a majority of the Upper House. Friction has now arisen between the young and the old elements of the section with regard to the election of officers. Unless this trouble leads to the dismemberment of the Kenkyu-kai, an unlikely result, it will have no special significance.

The newly arisen Party which calls itself the Kokumin Gikwai, or National Assembly Party, held a meeting in Tokyo on the 29th inst. It appears evident that the object of this Party is to reconstruct the platform upon which the Liberals stood before the summoning of the first Diet. They think that the reality of constitutional government has not been attained at all, and they are indisposed to be satisfied with the shadow which the practice of the present parliamentary system represents from their point of view. Anyone can appreciate that this movement is a natural outgrowth of the struggle for party government, a consummation which has been fought off by the wisest statesmen in Japan, though they recognise that it is more or less inevitable in the end. We confess for our own part that we should have more sympathy with the movement if it were represented by different leaders. But respect is hardly consonant with the fact that, at the meeting on the 29th inst., the principal speakers were Mr. Muranatsu, of whom the public has no cognisance, and Mr. Oi Kentaro, who, as a politician, was formerly a commander of soshi, and, as a barrister, declared that no foreigner's evidence in a court of law was of any value because he could not be trusted to speak the truth. Mr. Kono Hironaka did not put in an appearance, but, although Mr. Kono is respected for his honesty and courage, his coöperation does not add much to the strength of any party. After the lecture-meeting a conversation was held in the Kinki-kwan. There were about 150 present, and a conspicuous feature of the affair was the setting up of mortuary tablets bearing the names of men who in life were actively associated with the cause which the new Party represents. Count Itagaki was present, and he delivered a speech on his now favourite topic, social regeneration. Count Okuma was also expected to attend, but he did not put in an appearance.

We are glad to be able to state that the threatened disruption of the Progressist Party has been averted. Count Okuma stepped into the breach, and as the friction was confined to the lesser lights of the Party, the luminaries themselves, as Mr. Oishi and Mr. Inukai, not being seriously affected, the Count's sage advice was readily listened to. A complete reconciliation is said to have taken place on the 26th inst. when the principal members of the Party were invited to Count Okuma's residence for "tea and talk." It appears to be thought that, in effect, Count Okuma has resumed the direction of the Party's affairs. It is a case of the mountain and Mahommed.

On the other hand, the dissensions in the ranks of the Kenkyu-kai, the chief section of the House of Peers, have not been composed. This affair may be briefly described as a collision among the younger and older members of the section. Neither side has won the victory, and proposals for a compromise appear to have fallen through.

THE BALKAN QUESTION.

Wednesday, October 28.

The telegrams show, as might have been expected, that Great Britain has not placed any obstacle in the path of the direct negotiations between Austria and Turkey. On the contrary, according to an official declaration made by the Foreign Office in London, England, while not actually promoting these negotiations, distinctly expresses the opinion that an independent settlement between Vienna and Constantinople would facilitate the work of the Conference. It was perhaps not unnatural that some Austrian publicists should see in Turkey's sudden disposition to suspend the direct conference an evidence of extraneous influence, but the telegrams suggest that the tone of the Austrian press has shown a great lack of prudence and self-restraint. Turkey has offered a perfectly simple and reasonable explanation of her hesitation, namely, that the questions at issue are too far-reaching and too complicated to be satisfactorily solved without reference to the Powers in conclave. Of course that view may be in some degree an echo of England's attitude, but that there has been any direct pressure from Downing Street on the Porte is now a completely exploded suspicion. It is evident that, as was surmised from the outset, the last word rests with Germany. Berlin's influence in Vienna must be virtually supreme in such a matter, and while it is plain and indeed natural that Germany should refuse to force the hand of her ally, it is also happily plain that she will do everything within reasonable reach to facilitate a peaceful solution. The clever diplomacy of the present Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs is a powerful factor in the situation, and since Russia, Germany, France and England are all bent upon finding a pacific solution, we continue to believe that war will be avoided.

A telegram to the Mainichi Dempo says that Turkey has thanked Germany for the latter's sagacious action and for its efforts to bring about a European conference. In short Germany seems likely to come out of the complication with flying colours.

Thursday, October 29.

The telegrams this morning strongly confirm previously received news that Great Britain's intention in the Balkan complication is not by any means of the drastic nature attributed to it by previous news and confirmed by the utterances of the Vienna press. It appears that the negotiations between Austria and Turkey have not been broken off, and the British Government emphatically denies that there is any immediate danger of that catastrophe. Turkey, the telegrams say, would gladly avail herself of English advice and English assistance in the discussion with Austria, but London thinks that the Porte, being the best judge of its own interests, must be left untrammelled by foreign suggestions. Meanwhile everybody seems to be treating Austria's ambitions with the utmost deference, and, as Vienna is really the centre of the whole storm, it may fairly be hoped that the area of disturbance will be kept within narrow limits. Of course everybody understands that all this talk of the opening of a Conference is merely form. The Conference is now actually going on. What the delegates of the Powers will have to do when they enter the council chamber is simply to place on record their approval of arrangements which their Governments had previously concluded. If a conference were opened without a preliminary consensus, nothing could possibly be effected. The Hague Tribunals illustrate that very forcibly.

THE FUNERAL OF FIELD MARSHAL MARQUIS NODZU.

The obsequies of Field-Marshal Marquis Nodzu took place on the 23rd inst. at the Aoyama Cemetery. Although the deceased had expressed a desire that everything should be on the quietest possible scale, his great fame forbade compliance with such a wish, and it resulted that the pageant was extraordinarily brilliant. It need hardly be said that the Emperor was represented, and that among the mourners were all the country's great statesmen, generals and admirals. The British Ambassador was also present, as were all the other foreign Ambassadors, together with Admiral Sperry and four officers of the United States Fleet. Lord Northcote also attended. The profusion of floral offerings was very remarkable, and among them was a wreath of huge dimensions sent by the officers and men of the United States Fleet and carried by four bluejackets. There was also a wreath bearing the name of Prince Carl Anton, the German Prince who visited Manchuria during the War. A whole regiment of troops took part in the ceremony, and there was a cavalry guard of honour specially sent by order of the Emperor.

MR. BELLAMY BROWN was to give an illustrated lecture on "Phil May" at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Hongkong, on Oct. 16th.

THE SOUTH MANCHURIA AND EAST CHINA RAILWAYS.

It appears that, although the junction between the Japanese and Russian Railways in Manchuria has become an accomplished fact so far as concerns the purchase of through tickets from the Sleeping Car Company, there is still one very serious drawback, namely, that hand-baggage can not be booked right through. It has to be passed consecutively at each customs station, and the passengers themselves have to attend to these details. This renders the through ticket practically useless, and the South Manchuria Railway is sending one of its directors, Mr. Tanaka, to St. Petersburg for the purpose of negotiating a more wholesome state of affairs. He is quoted by Tokyo journals as anticipating considerable difficulty, and as foreseeing that the negotiations will probably not be concluded before the end of the year. Mr. Tanaka takes the opportunity of saying that it is very unjust to condemn the delay which has attended the adjustment of the South Manchuria Railway's affairs. People who utter such criticisms have no idea of the multifarious business which devolved upon the Company. Even in the matter of transfers of land attached to the Railway, enormous piles of documents, some in Chinese and others in Russian, had to be examined and dealt with. Now at length the Railway may be said to have entered a period of virility. The harbour works at Dairen have nearly been completed. But as to the Mukden-Antung Railway, it is a difficult problem. The Railway's gross earnings at present are only 1,000 yen a day, which sum does not suffice to cover operating expenses. Doubtless if the line were reconstructed, it would be more profitable; but reconstruction would involve an outlay of some 25 million yen, and the minimum earnings to compensate such expenditure would have to be 8,000 yen daily, which sum would be very problematical considering the nature of the districts traversed by the line. As for the South Manchurian Railway, the complete new rolling stock will be in operation by the 28th of this month; 200 miles of the double track have already been laid, and the whole will be finished before next spring. Mr. Tanaka further remarks that this Railway presents some very peculiar features. It has to provide, on the one hand, the very choicest accommodation in satisfaction of the requirements of luxurious Western travellers, and, on the other, it has to be prepared to transport the lower orders of the Chinese so economically that uncovered waggons are the best accommodation that can be afforded. Then again, at one moment, piles of merchandise have to be handled, and, at another, absolutely empty waggons are the order of the day. In fact it is a railway of extremes.

MR. TANG SHAOI.

On the 23rd inst. Mr. Tang Shaoi was received in audience by the Emperor. His Excellency presented to the Throne some valuable porcelains from the celebrated Kanghsi factories, the gift of the Chinese Sovereign. Subsequently Mr. Tang and Mr. Sheng and their suites, numbering in all 66, among whom were 12 ladies, were entertained by Mr. R. Kondo and the officials of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha at the Nogakudo in Kudan, where they had the pleasure of witnessing a preformance of

No dances. At 6 o'clock refreshments were served, and the health of the guests was enthusiastically drunk.

Tokyo newspapers publish an account evidently furnished by a news agency of an interview with Mr. Tang Shaoi. The Chinese statesman is represented as saying that during the three weeks of his residence in Japan, he has had opportunities of exchanging views with Marquis Katsura, Count Komura and other Japanese statesmen, as well as with men of affairs, and he has learned with much pleasure that the Japanese nation is animated by a feeling of sincere friendship for China. Mr. Tang says that people have fallen into the habit of talking about dangerous complications between the two countries in Manchuria. There are no such complications. Naturally in connexion with the peculiar state of affairs which grew out of the Russian occupancy and Japan's succession to certain privileges, several questions of a more or less perplexing character have sprung up, but both sides have set themselves to solve these questions in a spirit of honest amity, and though time is required to conclude negotiations conducted in such a spirit, there is no cause whatever for uneasiness. The only incident which really tended to alienate China's good will was the Tatsu Maru affair. Tang is quoted as saying that when he was himself consulted by the Peking Government with regard to that affair, he frankly replied that China was technically wrong but morally right. It was to be regretted that the Japanese Minister of Foreign Affairs felt constrained by the force of public opinion to assume a severe attitude with regard to the question. Mr. Tang thinks that, if the Japanese nation had understood the question more accurately, they would have been disposed to treat it differently, and this leads him to observe that what is really wanting between the two countries is some method of mutual interpretation on the part of the masses. The Governments understand each other well enough and appreciate each other's friendly mood, but the people lack mutual intelligence.

DEATH OF ADMIRAL VISCOUNT ENOMOTO.

Admiral Viscount Enomoto expired on the 26th inst. at 2.30 p.m. He had been getting better for some days and good hopes of his recovery were entertained, but on the morning of the 26th, his malady—disease of the kidneys—suddenly took a serious turn and it was evident that the end could not be far off. The deceased was in his 73rd year, having been born in August, 1836. He became a prominent figure in the very early days of the Meiji Era by his celebrated but very impractical exploit of taking all the ships constituting the Shogun's navy, which he commanded, and retiring to Yezo, where he purposed establishing a republic. The rapidity and vigour with which his enterprise was shattered by the Imperial forces was a significant indication of the strength of the new regime. It might have been expected that the defeated Admiral would have remained permanently in the black books of the Imperial Government. But loyalty to a feudatory was never counted an offence in old-time Japan. In 1872, five years after his exploit, the Admiral was fully pardoned, and received from the Government an appointment, which, by the irony of fate, required him to serve in the very region where he had met with his discomfiture. But this was only a probationary measure. Two years later, his rank of Vice-Admiral was restored and he received the appointment of Japanese Representative in St. Petersburg. In that position he had to conduct the negotiations which ended in the exchange of Saghalien for the Kuriles. Subsequently he became Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, and in 1880 he served for a brief period as Minister of Marine. Subsequently he represented his country in Peking, and assisted Mr. (now Prince) Ito, in negotiating the Tientsin Treaty of 1885. Afterwards we find him filling the office of Minister of State for Communications, and in 1887 he received the patent of Viscount. He became Minister of Foreign Affairs after the Otsu incident, and during the war with China he held the portfolio of Agriculture and Commerce. Thereafter not much was heard of him in the realm of active official life, but he was conspicuous as a promoter and president of societies organised for purposes of social improvement or national development. He was a statesman not perhaps of commanding ability but of uniformly honest purpose, and to considerable charm of manner he added a genuinely kind disposition. Shortly before his death the Emperor conferred on him the First Class Order of Merit.

The obsequies of the late Admiral Viscount Enomoto are to be performed by the Navy. They will take place on the 30th inst., the procession leaving the house of the deceased in Mukojima and proceeding to the Temple Kichijo-ji in Hongo.

ADMIRAL NEBOGATOFF.

The interesting literature inspired by the War is apparently about to receive an important addition in the shape of a volume from the pen of Admiral Nebogatoff, who is now undergoing imprisonment in a fortress to expiate the disaster that overtook him in the Battle of Tsushima. Apparently the title of the book will be "A Record of Reminiscences." The Mainichi Shimbun's Peking correspondent says that it will be an exhaustive study of the factors which militated against Russia's success, and that it will fill up many blanks left in Kuropatkin's remarkable account and in the facts elicited by the Stoessel court-martial. This volume is likely to be full of interest, and Admiral Nebogatoff is said to be working at the compilation with the greatest assiduity.

It will probably strike our readers in this context, that with the exception of one celebrated book, very small in dimensions but very large in realism, not a single volume or even pamphlet has hitherto been published by any of the Japanese officers engaged in the War. The War Department, the Naval Department, and the Sanitary Bureau of the former, are all compiling at public charges authentic histories of the great campaign, but when these compilations will see the light of day and whether public interest in their contents will not previously have flagged, it is difficult to say. At any rate this absolute reticence on one side and considerable garrulity on the other—if we may use the term without any offensive meaning—is sufficiently remarkable.

The odds against death by railway accident in England are stated to be 70,000,000 to 1, and this without taking into account the journeys of season-ticket-holders. It almost seems worth while, remarks the Globe, risking a journey every now and then.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Friday, October 23.

The Hochi Shimbun quotes what professes to be the opinion of Chinese merchants in Osaka as to the alleged crisis in Shanghai. These gentlemen seem to take a somewhat gloomy view of the situation, but they allege that the trouble had its origin some time ago in the closing of a large exchange shop which had made losses aggregating 400,000 taels. They attribute the present strained situation not to any special aggravation of the state of affairs, but rather to the fact that one of the periodical seasons for adjusting accounts had arrived. The flight of the Wu brothers was probably not because they had incurred any new debts, but because they could not discharge the obligations of the season. As to whether the trouble will spread, no definite prediction is attributed to these authorities, but we observe with some surprise that, whereas the original telegram describing the crisis was despatched from Shanghai on the 20th inst., the leading journal of that settlement seems to have had no inkling of anything like strained conditions up to the 17th inst. We are inclined to think that the situation has been greatly exaggerated.

A telegram from London to the Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that the Nippon Yusen Kaisha's new steamer Kamo Maru has been visited by a number of the leading merchants of the city, and has received warm praise as an evidence of the progress of Japanese ship-building.

It is confidently stated that the Tokyo Electric Light Company has at length a prospect of obtaining on reasonable terms a foreign loan of 5 million yen.

The Shogyo Shimpō says that with regard to the schedule of fares on the Tokyo Railway the idea now is that things will be allowed to remain in statu quo until the Government can obtain the Diet's consent to abolishing the transit tax on all distances less than 50 miles. By this arrangement the Company, if it collected the fares now actually charged, would receive one sen per ticket more than its present income. This might be a good contrivance for averting any opposition on the part of the citizens, but it would be very defective in one respect, namely, that it would leave unremedied the flagrant injustice of the uniform fare in a city of such immense distances as Tokyo. Besides, if the suburbs are to have a railway service, they must certainly expect to pay more for it than do the inhabitants of the city proper.

Saturday, October 24.

On the 24th inst. the Grand Trunk Railway in Formosa was officially opened by H.I.H. Prince Kanin. The total distance traversed by this line, including its branches, is 272½ miles, of which 247 miles represent the main road; 13.6, the Daitotei-Tamsui branch; 10.6 miles, the Takao-Kyukyokudo branch; and 1.3 miles, a temporary line. It will be remembered that when Japan took over the Island, railway communication already existed between Keelung and Shinchiku, a distance of 62 miles. This was a very defective line. It had cost 1,295,960 taels, and it had to be reconstructed throughout. In 1899 the Japanese laid down a ten years' programme of railway construction in Formosa, involving a total expenditure of 30 million yen. It is this projected system which has now been carried to completion, and the total outlay, contrary to usual experience, has been 1¼ millions less than the estimates. This is owing to the fact that since 1905 the line has been yielding a substantial revenue. Moreover, several hotels have been constructed along the line for the convenience of the passengers at a total outlay of 300,000 yen, which sum is included in the cost of the railway.

Mr. Nedzu, President of the Towa Dobun-Kai, is quoted by the Nichi Nichi Shimbun as considering that the commercial trouble recently reported from Shanghai is of altogether a minor character. He says that eminently the chief factor responsible for the depression which has prevailed in China during the present year is the exceedingly bad crops of 1907. Such a failure of the harvest had not been witnessed since the Kanghsi era. It is not in the immediate presence of a catastrophe of this kind that the Chinese give evidence of greatest suffering, for they have recourse to stores of grain, which, in pursuance of ancient custom, are always made against times of need. The year following the catastrophe is always the season of suffering, and that has proved to be the case in this instance. The present year, however, rejoices in an excellent crop. There have been some ravages by flood, but the area of devastation has been altogether fractional, and on the whole a really fine harvest has to be recorded. It is certain, therefore, that Chinese trade will recover very soon, but Shanghai seems to have been shaken beyond endurance by the last wave of the departing tide of depression, which always proves disastrous to the few whose powers of survival are not adequate. It is not a serious matter, however, and its effects will soon pass.

Sunday, October 25.

We read in the Mainichi Dempo that an agreement has been virtually reached by the steamship companies plying between Japan and America with regard to a schedule of fares suitable to the situation created by the recent action of the interstate commission. Some details are given by our contemporary, but as the matter has not yet been definitely settled, minute particulars are premature.

Mr. Inamura Risuke, of Tokyo, who for the past few years has been engaged in the weaving of cotton cloths, has become bankrupt. His liabilities are put at 180,000 yen, but nothing is mentioned as to his assets.

The following railway works will be completed between the 26th inst. and the 11th proximo, namely the doubling of the line between Nakaizumi and the Tenryu River; the new line between Yasuki and Matsue, and that between Toyama and Naoetsu.

The latest telegrams from Shanghai indicate that the recent talk of a commercial crisis was considerably exaggerated. Some trouble certainly existed, but it has been successfully tided over, mainly through the wise efforts of the Taotai.

Monday, October 26.

The Tanko Steamship Company held its regular semi-annual meeting on the 27th inst. in its Tsukiji office. A dividend at the rate of 14 per cent. per annum was declared, and the chairman announced that the Government having now handed over the bonds resulting from nationalization of the railways, these would be distributed among the shareholders in the near future. Further, each holder of an old share would receive 50 yen and each holder of a new share 12.50 yen, this being the sum payable on account of remaining property of the Railway. On the motion of Mr. Amenomiya it was unanimously decided to present a sum of 50,000 yen to Mr. Inouye Kakugoro, in recognition of the long and splendid services rendered by him to the Tanko Company. Mr. Amenomiya recalled the fact that when Mr. Inouye became Managing Director of the Company in the year 1893, the dividend was only 7½ per cent, but since that time it had never fallen below 8, and had generally ranged from 11 to 14. Moreover, by successive increases of capital, each holder of 10 original shares now finds himself possessed of 42 shares, and as this stock, even in the present depressed condition of the market, is quoted at over 90 yen, the great profits reaped by the shareholders are conspicuous.

It is stated that excellent results have attended the efforts of Japanese preventive officials to protect the seal rookeries on Robbin Island. This may be said to be the only great rookery within Japan's dominion. It was ceded to her, in the sequel of the War, but during the War there was so much poaching that the seals almost ceased to frequent the place. They have now come back in great numbers.

Tuesday, October 27.

We read in the Mainichi Dempo that the Saghalien local authorities have concluded a contract with a certain Mr. Hosoiri for extracting and delivering at Toyohara 3,000 tons of coal from the mine at Bustaki. This work is to be carried on during the three winter months beginning with December, and the coal when delivered at Toyohara is to cost 6.50 yen per ton. Recourse for labour will be had to agriculturists, unemployed at that season, and the mineral is to be conveyed over the snow in sleighs. Of course this coal is intended for local consumption only, and the interest of the matter centres upon the practical proof thus afforded that Saghalien really is coal-producing.

Arrangements are in vigorous progress for the formation of a combination among the fishermen who ply their trade in the seas off the coast of the Maritime Province. These men have hitherto worked more or less in union, but the cementing of an actual league has not hitherto been openly attempted. About 80 representatives have signed the articles of agreement. These fishermen do not include seal-hunters. Their catch is confined to salmon, codfish and masu.

The Shogyo Shimpō has a very pessimistic article about the Japanese cabotage. It will be remembered that during last year a union was projected of all the shipowners throughout Japan, with the exception of the great companies which have fixed services. The capital of this combination was originally fixed at 20 million yen. But in the deep depression which soon afterwards overtook the country, this figure was reduced by one half, and ultimately the talk of a substantial capital had to be abandoned altogether. A scheme was then set on foot for forming a big pool, the principle being that the chartering value of each ship should be determined, and the earnings of the whole fleet should be divided in that proportion. This project also fell through owing to the unwillingness of the shipowners on the western coast to accede to the freight rates proposed by their eastern colleagues. Finally this order seems to have been entirely reversed, for the western owners proposed a schedule to which the east in turn objected. The situation has been still further complicated by a marked invasion of foreign vessels, which are evidently prepared to take advantage of the slightest enhancement of prices on the Japanese side. On the whole therefore a very embarrassing state of affairs exists.

Japanese papers allege that the British and German residents of Kobe have petitioned the Government through their respective Representatives for compensation on account of the abolition of the pari mutuel. The intelligence is conveyed in very curt terms, and would be more intelligible if Yokohama were substituted for Kobe.

It is said to be the opinion in Japanese business circles that tradal conditions throughout the world are on the eve of substantial improvement. The trouble may be said to have begun with the panic in America at the close of 1907, and there are now many indications that a better era is opening in that part of the world. Money has again become plentiful, the prices of iron and steel have gone up, and after the harvesting of the crops and the conclusion of the Presidential election a period of activity may be anticipated.

Wednesday, October 28.

Reduced to plain facts, the difficulty about the bonds issued in payment for the nationalized railways is that they are to be dealt with on the lines of ordinary consols, namely, to lie unredeemed for 5 years and to be redeemed thereafter in 50 years or earlier by processes suited to the Treasury's convenience. But the other national debts are now included in the twenty-seven-years programme; that is to say, they are to be redeemed within 27 years in accordance with the Treasury's new scheme. The Committee of five leading bankers appointed by the railway companies to discuss this question with the Cabinet, could not induce the latter to make an exception in favour of the railway bonds by placing them from the outset in the 27 years category. But the Prime Minister is understood to have declared that the Treasury has a plan which practically insures that the market price of the bonds shall not fall below 90 yen, and that they will be included in the general scheme of quick redemption. With this answer the railway companies appear to be satisfied.

The Nippon has a paragraph with reference to a discussion which is said to have taken place at the last meeting of the directors of the Tokyo Railway Company. It appears that the American business men, during their stay in Tokyo, remarked upon the finances of the electric trams. They said that whereas the trams in the United States cost about 200,000 yen per mile, those in Tokyo involved an expenditure of 300,000 yen, yet the uniform fare in the United States was 5 cents, the equivalent of 10 sen Japanese, whereas the uniform fare in Tokyo, in spite of the immense distances, was only two cents (4 sen). The contrast is comical.

The newspapers state that it has now been definitely decided to change the system of telephone charges. At present the fixed annual payment is 66 yen, but no charge is made for messages transmitted within the town or city where the installation exists. The change now to be adopted is that the fixed annual charge (kikon ryokin) is to be from 48 to 42 yen, and in addition 1 sen 5 rin will be levied for every message sent. This will have one effect not altogether convenient to the general public, namely, that owners of telephones will close their doors to casual message-senders from among their neighbours.

General Viscount Terauchi, in his capacity of Director of the Basei-kyoku, has addressed to the race clubs certain instructions, which are translated as follows by the Japan Times :—

In reference to the race meetings, I ask you to observe the following notification in addition to that given orally by the authorities concerned in March this year :—

1.—The race club may fix the admission fee at its own discretion, but the same must be reported to the authorities.

2.—The race club shall draw up suitable rules, subject to sanction by the police, in order to maintain order and good aspect of the meeting and post at a conspicuous place the provisions which require observance by spectators.

3.—The usages hitherto in vogue will be adopted in relation to the number of days of the race meeting, kinds of horses, distance of race, prizes, and control of jockeys.

In the event of the officers of the Horse Administration Bureau being present, their direction and supervision shall be respected.

4.—The race club shall obey the order of the police officers in regard to the order and good aspect of the meeting.

5.—In the following cases, the Chief of the Horse Administrative Bureau, or officers of the same bureau on the spot, or police officer may suspend the races or take other suitable measures :—

1.—When the race club is deemed guilty of an unwarrantable or illegal transaction.

2.—When the holding of races is deemed dangerous.

3.—When such measure is deemed necessary for maintaining the order and good aspect of the meeting.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

Mr. Montague Kirkwood has arrived in Japan and is staying at the Miyako Hotel, Kyoto.

Whoever may be the London correspondent of the Nichi Nichi Shimbun, he is plainly a disciple of the creed that Germany's naval expansion is, if not directed against England, at all events inspired mainly by British armaments. He wires to his journal that in view of the fact that England will have twelve Dreadnoughts by the year 1911, the Berlin Government has decided to hasten the construction of the line of battleships on its own programme. So long as this competition goes on, it is hard to see how all distrust of Germany's intentions can be dispelled. If any responsible person would undertake to explain to the world what Germany really wants with such a navy as she is now building, the explanation would do more than anything else to enable the nations to sleep with "high pillows."

The Hochi Shimbun has a strange telegram from New York to the effect that the Japanese Government has invited a conference of the Powers interested in questions relating to the Pacific Ocean, so that there may be a final settlement effected of all problems likely to cause friction in that part of the world. We have no cognisance of the existence of any such problems, and it is therefore difficult to suppose that the Japanese Government has taken the step attributed to it.

The German newspaper of Shanghai has long been noted for its harsh attitude towards everything Japanese and it has now surpassed itself to a degree which is quite amusing. On the 8th of September Mr. Dressing was robbed of a handbag during his sojourn in the Imperial Hotel. The bag is said to have contained documents important to its owner in connexion with questions then under discussion between the Chinese Government, which he represents, and the Japanese Government. The police failed to discover the thief, and the German newspaper arrives at the conclusion that they would have apprehended him had he not been acting in collusion with the Japanese Government. We take these facts from the Nippon, which treats the German newspaper's utterances with amused contempt, but we can not help surmising the kind of outcry that would be raised if a Japanese journal preferred a similar charge against an Occidental Government.

The Japanese naval manoeuvres this autumn will be on an unprecedentedly large scale. The vessels engaged are said to be 10 battleships, 26 cruisers, 50 destroyers and a number of torpedo-boats and other craft, bringing the total to 120 ships and the tonnage to 400,000. Two-fifths of this great fleet will represent the defending force and three-fifths the attacking force, the former under Admiral Dewa and the latter under Admiral Ijūin. Among the above 10 battleships it would seem that four must have originally belonged to Russia, for Japan has only 8 vessels of this description which were built in her own yards or in foreign yards to her order. It is interesting to look back to the days, easily within the memory of many readers of this journal, when the Japanese Navy may be said to have consisted of one fighting ship, the Rinjo Kan.

The committee entrusted with the duty of considering the question of a domestic exhibition to be held in Tokyo in 1911, met on the 26th inst. and compiled a report favourable to the project. They assessed the cost of the enterprise at 3 million yen, and they apportioned this sum as follows :—one million put up by the City; 750,000 obtained by the sale of tickets; 250,000 donated by the business men, and one million given by the Treasury. This project has to undergo much deliberation by various bodies before it is definitely accepted, and judging from the lukewarm reception now given to it by the public, we are inclined to think that its chances of success are not very great.

We read in the Jiji Shimpō that at the Cabinet meeting on the 27th inst. it was decided to open the 25th session of the Diet at an unusually early date. Of late years the Government has drifted into the habit of summoning the Diet for a date immediately prior to the commencement of the New Year's recess, and thus the Houses have had no time to do more than complete their organisation before rising for the holidays. From some points of view this method has its conveniences, but on the present occasion the Cabinet is credited with a desire to exercise the utmost possible diligence in getting the Budget passed, as, until that step is achieved, the new financial policy will not have obtained the cachet of Parliamentary approval, and will not therefore be able to exercise its full influence on the economic situation. Hence the idea is that the Diet should meet, this year, in sufficient time to deal with the Budget before the New Year recess. That would mean that the Houses must assemble early in December, but as 40 days have to elapse between the issue of the convening order and the day of opening, it is evident that the latter can not now be earlier than the 10th of December.

THE FORAKER INCIDENT.

ONE needs to search with a microscope and read very much indeed between the lines to discover in the Foraker letters any solid material for the hubbub they created in political circles in America. There are eight letters, whole or partial. All are addressed to Senator Foraker, dated at the head quarters of the Standard Oil Company, and are signed by the Vice-President of the Company. Here are the documents:—

"MY DEAR SENATOR—Here is still another very objectionable bill. It is so outrageous as to be ridiculous. But it needs to be looked after, and I hope there will be no difficulty in killing it. Am anxious to hear from you as to the situation as a whole. Very truly yours,

"JOHN D. ARCHBOLD.

"MY DEAR SENATOR—I have your favor of last night with enclosure, which latter, with letter from Mr. Elliott commenting on same, I beg to send you forthwith. Perhaps it would be better to make a demonstration against the whole bill, but certainly the ninth clause, to which Mr. Elliott refers, should be stricken out, and the same is true of House Bill No. 500, also introduced by Mr. Price, in relation to foreign corporations, in which the same objectionable clause occurs. Am glad to hear that you think the situation is fairly well in hand."

"DEAR SENATOR—In accordance with our understanding, I now beg to enclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $15,000. Kindly acknowledge receipt and oblige."

"MY DEAR SENATOR—I enclose you certificate of deposit to your favor for $14,500. We are really at a loss in the matter, but I send this and will be glad to have a very frank talk with you when opportunity offers, if you so desire. I need scarcely again express our great gratification over the favorable outcome of affairs."

"MY DEAR SENATOR—You of course know of Judge Burke's candidacy for re-election to the Supreme Court bench of Ohio. We understand that his re-election to the position would be in the line of usage as followed in such cases in Ohio, and we feel very strongly that his eminent qualifications and great integrity entitle him to this further recognition. We most earnestly hope that you agree with this view and will favour and aid his re-election. Mr. Rogers joins me most heartily in this expression to you."

"MY DEAR SENATOR—We are surprised beyond measure to learn that Smith W. Bennett, brother-in-law of F. S. Monnett, recently Attorney-General of Ohio, is in the race for the Attorney-Generalship of Ohio on the Republican ticket. Bennett was associated with Monnett in the case against us in Ohio, and I would like to tell you something of our experiences and impressions of the man gained in that case. If you know him at all I am sure you will agree that his candidacy ought not to be seriously considered from any point of view."

"MY DEAR SENATOR—Responding to your favor of the 25th, it gives me pleasure to hand you herewith certificate of deposit $50,000 per our understanding. Your letter states the conditions correctly, and I trust the transaction will be successfully consummated."

"MY DEAR SENATOR—I venture to write you a word re the bill introduced by Senator Jones of Arkansas, known as S. 469, intended to amend the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, etc., introduced by him December 4th. It really seems as though the bill is very unnecessarily severe and even vicious. Is it not much better to test the Sherman act before resorting to a measure of this kind? I hope you will feel so about it, and I will be greatly pleased to have a word from you on the subject. The bill is, I believe, still in committee."

All these were written between February 1900 and February 1902. Mr. FORAKER had been a Senator for two years when the first of these letters reached him. We can not find in the newspapers now before us any evidence as to how the letters came into Mr. HEARST'S hand, but that point is not material. No one denies their authenticity. Senator FORAKER himself "assumes that they are true copies." The question is, do these letters constitute any valid proof that Mr. FORAKER, in his senatorial capacity, ever received money for public services or was ever involved in any improper transactions of any kind? He frankly admits that he was employed by the Standard Oil Company as advisory counsel in connexion with its affairs in Ohio. For discharging that duty he naturally charged a fair remuneration, and was paid. That accounts for the two sums mentioned in letters 3 and 4. As for the large amount—fifty thousand dollars—referred to in letter 7, it was connected with the purchase of a newspaper. A friend of Mr. FORAKER thought of purchasing the Ohio State Journal. It was offered to him for $135,000, and the Senator, having pledged himself to assist in the transaction, asked the Standard Oil Company whether it would lend $50,000 on the security of the plant and property. The Company assented and put up the money. But the transaction having fallen through, the money was subsequently returned. At first sight the language of the Company's Vice-President suggests suspicion. He uses the words "per our understanding," and the same phrase is found in letter 3, which refers to payment of the Senator's fee in his capacity of advisory counsel. But any incriminatory inference of that kind seems to become untenable in the context of the phrase immediately following, namely, "I trust the transaction will be successfully consummated." It is to be observed, too, that in 1902 the Standard Oil Company had not yet become—or begun to become—an object of what we venture to regard as very unreasoning hostility on the part of a section of the public. It was a great, honorable and honored corporation, and association with it in the capacity filled for a time by Senator FORAKER would have been welcomed by any citizen of the United States. The Senator himself says:—

"I never made any effort to conceal the facts. On the contrary, I was pleased to have people know that I had such clients.—It had not then become discreditable, but was considered just the reverse, to be employed by such corporations. That employment ended before my first term in the Senate expired. I have not represented the Company in any way since long before it was attacked by the Federal Government, nor since before with full general knowledge I was elected to the Senate."

He also makes the emphatic declaration:

"Neither the Standard Oil nor any other company or individual has ever paid me a cent on account of any public service, nor has that company or anybody else even suggested to me any compensation or reward of any kind in consideration of support for any bill or opposition to any bill, or for any action of any nature whatever."

In the eyes of all ordinary onlookers these explanations appear ample, and nothing suggests itself as at all sufficient to account for the tumult caused by the publication of the correspondence. It appears just possible that the periodical recurrence of seasons of such great excitement as a presidential election may exercise a neurotic influence on the people of the United States, and thus pre-dispose them to take momentarily exaggerated views of trifles; for we can scarcely imagine that the normal conscience of any nation is so sensitive as to attach cardinal importance to an incident like that of the Foraker letters even after full allowance is made for the artificial sensationalism of interested politicians.

THE KAISER AND THE WORLD'S PEACE.

IN The Independent's issue of October, 1st M. EDOUARD TALLICHET, Editor of the Swiss Review and Directeur of the Bibliothèque Universelle, contributes an interesting article, evoked by some criticisms uttered by Mr. CARNEGIE on a pamphlet which had previously issued from M. TALLICHET'S pen. The article in the Independent opens thus:—

For a number of years the Emperor William has been regarded as the chief obstacle to that universal peace which is now the dominant idea of the world. For his dangerous preponderance in this respect he is indebted to a military establishment of a kind that never was seen before, not even in the days of the Roman Empire, which supplied its first model. He himself did not organize it; he inherited it, and has limited himself to the task of increasing and perfecting it. It is an extraordinary visible sign of power. It is not surprising that its master should believe himself the mightiest monarch on earth, specially called to direct the course of the universe. Its existence explains his claims to supremacy. Yet this mighty engine has not helped him in his policy. All his enterprises have failed and sometimes produced results the very opposite of those intended. Thus, no sovereign has contributed as much as he has done to destroy the ancien régime, and that by the very endeavors he has made to give it a new life and a new splendor. He has been the real originator of the perilous enterprise in China which preceded a series of events necessary for the transformation of the world: the war in the extreme East, the defeat of Russia, and the revolution that has been its consequence. He has been the principal agent in awakening the Mussulman world from its torpor and inspiring it with the determination to renew its life. He prepared with Kruger the South African war, and sought at Tangier the means of removing from his path the results so disastrous to his policy, of that war which moved the entire civilized world and forced it into the pathway of the great changes that followed, and that must be succeeded by changes still more momentous.

In addition to all these attempts, his armaments on sea and land, from their continual growth, had become a menace to every nation that had reason to dread the consequences of his ambition, as well as to the ever-increasing number of the friends of peace and of public and private liberties. Yet, while all deplored the policy he had adopted, it cannot be denied that that policy has rendered precious services to Europe by compelling the several States, great and small, to watch over their interests, to prepare for dangerous demonstrations, and to combine together in order to make their union a rampart against possible assaults.

Now, the situation that is equally alarming for Europe and for Germany is this: The Emperor is almost omnipotent. As regards his foreign policy, his power is confined within no limits. He can declare war suddenly and can set his army in motion without leaving room for retreat. This is the peril which is terrifying Europe. He can prepare in silence an aggression which his adversary may even not suspect. In his interior policy he has often done so, and has avoided the consequences of his impulsiveness by a prompt recoil when the opposition encountered was too strong for him. But a state of war would be quite a different affair. Once in motion, the army could no longer halt, and the danger would be, at least, as great for Germany as for her adversaries.

Many will probably be found to cavil at this statement. We, too, are by no means disposed to endorse it in its entirety. Yet it seems to us to be in some respects a true analysis. One thing is certain: the world has long looked at Germany with eyes of much uneasiness. Why should that be? Why would apprehension be inspired by the spectacle of a nation than which none more highly civilized exists or has ever existed; a nation great alike in philosophy and in commerce, in science and in manufacture; a nation preëminently equipped to win and enjoy the triumphs of peace? The answer must be that history forbids its readers to associate pacific results with such a conjuncture as is seen in Germany's case; the conjunction of an overshadowing personality and a tremendous military force. The Emperor of Germany, even though he were separated from his unparalleled environment, would still be a man of commanding genius. His moral endowment is altogether exceptional; his versatility is extraordinary; his power of work immense. He is necessarily conscious of his own superiority, and that consciousness must bring with it a longing for commensurate successes. If, in olden times, such a man had attained by inheritance or by endeavour to the headship of an Asiatic State, he would probably have left a record second only, if indeed second, to that of Darius or of Alexander. But that is only a part of the story. This Potentate, destined to be famous in any circumstances, stands by right of birth at the head of the most stupendous belligerent machine ever constructed, whether in ancient or in modern times, and in the employment of that machine he is absolutely autocratic. He can set it in motion for any and every purpose that seems good in his own eyes; and motion once commenced, only a continent-shaking shock could arrest it. That is the combination which makes the citizens of the world toss in their sleep. They dream of history repeating itself, and they recall first, that William the Second, not content with the colossal stratocracy bequeathed to him by his illustrious ancestors, is straining every nerve to increase its potentialities; and, secondly, that he has frequently shown himself a lover of startling unconventionalities, as in Kiaochow, Liaotung, South Africa, and elsewhere. Are the nations blameworthy if they allow themselves to be perturbed in the presence of this immense power and these immense agencies for its exercise? Yet there is a saving clause—two saving clauses. One is that the Kaiser has lived for nearly 50 years and has reigned for more than 20. During the whole of that time he has never given the slightest indication, either by word or by act, that his disposition is not peace-loving. On the contrary, it may be reasonably concluded, from his unvarying speech and from his consistent practice, that in expanding and perfecting Germany's armaments his aim has been to save her from war rather than to plunge her into it; to render the prospect of a conflict with her shockingly deterrent, not to prostitute her strength to aggressive ends. A sovereign can not dissimulate successfully for twenty years under the microscopic scrutiny of a watching world, nor does the fever of ambition burn unabated and unsatisfied for half a century. The second saving clause is the German nation. It is true that the power of the sword rests absolutely with the Kaiser, but between him and the drawing of that sword stand wise counsellors whose finger is always applied to the pulse of the people, and that the people of Germany would sanction war except in the last resort, no observant person can imagine. In these things, then, we find sufficient guarantees. But we confess frankly to one sentiment of uneasy curiosity: what does the Kaiser want with the huge fleet his Majesty is assiduously building, to the great distress of his loyal tax-payers?

GERMAN NAVAL EXPANSION.

BY a curious coincidence, on the very morning when we published an article concluding with a perplexed inquiry as to what could be the KAISER's motive in building an enormous navy, a Reuter's cablegram brings an explanation from the KAISER himself. This explanation appears in the columns of the Daily Telegraph, and is given at the conclusion of an interview which the EMPEROR is said to have granted to an unnamed person and which bears some internal evidence of authenticity. From the words attributed to the KAISER we gather that His Majesty has grown impatient of the limitations imposed on his country by her position as a purely Continental Power, and that he wishes to be able to enter the councils of the nations equipped in such guise as to have a voice in all over-sea enterprises as well as in land operations. His MAJESTY names the Pacific Ocean as the probable arena for the activities which his great navy suggests, and he hints very plainly that in the settlement of Far Eastern questions, England may one day be glad of Germany's coöperation. These utterances point plainly to a resurrection of the "Yellow Peril," a phantom by which the KAISER was certainly obsessed at one time, though well informed persons know that he subsequently modified his views radically upon the subject. It is of course possible, and indeed not improbable, that this remarkable interview may be denied, or at any rate greatly modified. Therefore we hesitate to credit its complete authenticity until some confirmation is obtained. But we are constrained to remark that His Majesty's outlook is very far-reaching. It extends to the day, a scarcely conceivable day, when China and Japan will have navies strong enough to defy the flotillas of the world; a day when the Anglo-Japanese Alliance will cease to be operative; and a day when the two Far Eastern Powers will be seized with the incredible mania of ranging themselves in the lists against the combined Occident. Such contingencies are not within the reach of ordinary intelligence, but, on the other hand, it has to be admitted that the intelligence of the KAISER is not ordinary. Still we greatly doubt whether this voluntary analysis of His Majesty's purpose in equipping Germany with an immense navy will allay the anxiety created in Great Britain by his policy. On the other hand, it will certainly have the effect of extending the sphere of that anxiety to all nations whose shores are washed by the Pacific Ocean. For the rest, should the interview prove to be accurately reported, it will be regarded as a most welcome and emphatic renewal of His MAJESTY's kindly feeling towards a nation which ought naturally to be Germany's best friend. We shall be sorry to learn, however, that there is truth in the words attributed to the KAISER as to the South African campaign and the coincidence described by him between the strategical plan sent by Berlin to London and the plan actually adopted by Lord ROBERTS. The suggestion implied in that statement can not be called very tactful, and will certainly be strongly resented in England, where military men will find the idea insupportable that Germany or any other country should have suggested to Great Britain the kind of strategy to be used by the latter's forces in an overseas campaign. Judging by the story of Germany's expedition against the Hereros, England will be disposed to say to the KAISER "physician heal thyself": and, indeed, so far as the plan pursued by Lord ROBERTS is concerned, we may affirm that it presented itself to nine British soldiers out of every ten long before "Black Week" ever came, or before anything so disastrous was ever anticipated.

THE NARUO RACE COURSE.

In answer to a correspondent who addressed these columns over the signature of "B." the Kobe Herald makes the following remarks:—

It is difficult to find words in which to denounce this farrago of false statements and absurd vituperation. Anyone who was present at the Naruo meeting will know that "B's" allegations have not the slightest shadow of foundation. In the first place, the "disgraceful scenes" of which "B" writes never took place at all. The meeting was well conducted and was characterised by the utmost orderliness and decorum. Presumably, "B" has been misled by the fact that certain allegations have been made against the persons who had charge of the Pari-mutuel. Those allegations had nothing whatever to do with "disgraceful scenes"—of which there were none—and neither the Japanese nor the foreigners attending the meeting were in the slightest degree responsible for irregularities which the Club's officials or employees may or may not have committed. Secondly, the picture of foreign women engaging in a rough and tumble in order to get into the Pari-mutuel booth is a sheer invention. No women were allowed in the Pari-mutuel hall and no foreign lady attempted to enter it. It follows that the expressions of disapproval which the Japanese present are alleged to have uttered in this connection are altogether apocryphal. Thirdly the accusation that the foreign men and women, lost to all sense of decency, compelled the Japanese officials to countermand a regulation—the prohibition of the sale of alcoholic drinks—which they considered necessary for the preservation of order, is simply absurd. No one who has had experience of Japanese race-meetings would think of suggesting that such abuses have existed have been in anyway due to the influence of drink. Disorder or misconduct due to that cause has been practically unknown. It was, therefore, perfectly reasonable for foreigners accustomed to take whisky or beer as a refreshment or as an accompaniment to their meals to point out to the officials in charge of the restaurants used by the foreign visitors that the prohibition of the sale of stimulants was, as far as the foreigners were concerned, totally unnecessary, and, in fact, little less than an insult. The Japanese officials readily recognised the justice of these representations and no "worrying" was necessary to induce them to allow the foreign visitors to have the beverages to which they were accustomed. The fact is that "B." seems to be labouring under a complete misapprehension. He writes as if the foreigners present at the Naruo meeting were the dregs of the alien population, men and women who fight to get into a gambling booth and can only be kept in the paths of decency by being prohibited from drinking anything stronger than lemonade. Such a conception is in the highest degree grotesque. For the most part the foreigners present at the Naruo meeting were ladies and gentlemen of recognised position at this port, persons utterly incapable of causing the "disgraceful scenes" which "B." has evolved from a too fertile imagination, and, as a simple matter of fact, no foreigner whatever conducted himself or herself in an unbecoming manner or gave the slightest occasion for the unflattering opinions which "B." quite gratuitously attributes to the Japanese spectators.

THE TOKYO STOCK EXCHANGE.

Saturday, October 24.

The Tokyo Stock Exchange weakened again on the 23rd inst. Various causes are assigned but they are all conjectural and inconclusive. There is no definitely ostensible reason.

Monday, October 26.

The market was comparatively quiet on the 24th inst., with an upward tendency. There is nothing special to note, and it is not expected that any marked fluctuations will occur during the remainder of this month.

Tuesday, October 25.

With one exception the market on the 26th instant was quite uneventful. Fluctuations were trifling, and on the whole the attitude of bulls and bears alike was one of waiting. The exception was the oils, which, owing to news of new and very productive wells, showed sharp appreciation.

Wednesday, October 28.

The market on the 27th instant presented no noteworthy feature. Little business was done, and although a slight upward tendency was observable, the rises were all fractional. The oils suffered a slight relapse owing to profit taking sales.

Thursday, October 29.

The market opened tolerably brisk on Wednesday morning, all shares rising, some by fractions and some by integers. But, in the afternoon, dullness asserted itself. The fluctuations are small, however, with a few exceptions, and apparently some impetus not now discernible is required to give the market another upward start.

Friday, October 30.

The Stock Exchange was open on the forenoon only of the 28th instant, the 30th being settling day. Weakness was the dominant feature. Nearly all shares declined fractionally. There are various predictions as to next month, but we do not perceive that they have any solid basis. Appended are the quotations for December delivery:—

MONTHLY SUMMARY OF THE JAPANESE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

A new religious and literary monthly Magazine, called Shin Tenchi (A New World) has just made its appearance. It aims at becoming an organ of advanced thought on religion, philosophy, education, sociology and literature. A new Society has been formed in Tokyo called Sekōsha (也光社) whose object it is to spread enlightened views on a number of subjects and to promote men al culture. Periodical lectures will be delivered by the leading members of the Association in Tokyo and in certain provincial towns on religion, philosophy, art, literature and education. Music is to be included in the programme. Arrangements will be made for occasional concerts. The annual membership subscription is one yen. Sympathizers are invited to join the Association. The Shin Tenchi is to be sent free of charge to all members and they will also be allowed to attend all the lectures and concerts given by the Society. The first public meeting of the Association was to be held on Oct. 18th in the Universalist Hall, Kudan, Tokyo. The leading members of this new Society are Messrs. Akashi Shigetaro, Kinoshita Naoto, Mukō Gunji, Saji Jitsuzen, Yamaji Aizan, R. Minami, Kurahara Yuro, K. Miura and G. Suzuki. The last two gentlemen are musicians. Some of these writers have hitherto been regular contributors to the Rikugō Zasshi, a recognized Unitarian and Liberal thought organ. Whether there is room for three magazines run on the same lines remains to be seen.* The first number of the Shin Tenchi covers about 140 pages. The Magazine opens with four articles on religion. Then come notices of books and accounts of authors, followed by comments on the spirit of the age or some striking modern phenomena, then abstracts from foreign newspapers, followed by miscellaneous matter, consisting of accounts of the sayings of noted deceased persons or incidents in their lives. The first article in the new Magazine is by Mr. G. Mukō, and is entitled Kwaitsudō sezanu Shūkyōka (Inactive Religious people). Mr. Mukō says that, though his occupation takes him hither and thither, wherever he goes the dead-alive state of Christianity strikes him forcibly. He remembers, he tells us, the old days when Christianity seemed to be on everybody's lips. But he thinks this was the result of the craze for things Western that prevailed all over Japan for some years. A reaction set in. The new religion was opposed by conservatives and by certain scholars, and there arose a school which tried to prove that it was contrary to loyalty to accept the new religion. But notwithstanding all the opposition encountered to-day, Mr. Mukō is confident that if real, living Christianity can be made known to the nation it certainly will be welcomed, as people are just at present displaying signs of dissatisfaction with what they have and are in search of a new basis for civilisation. Mr. Saji Jitsuzen, the editor of the Rikugō Zasshi, writes the Shin Tenchi on "Human Life regarded from a Moral and Common Sense point of View." Mr. W. Miura, in reviewing the state of the religious world, says that whatever may have been the achievements of Christianity in past ages, it is an indisputable fact that in England, Germany and America its influence is on the decline. The reason of this, Mr. Miura thinks, is the inability of most of the churches to abandon the superstition and ignorant prejudice that has mixed itself up with Christianity. Mr. Miura then proceeds to remark that belief in the supernatural origin of Christianity and the inspiration of the Bible is one of the most harmful of the superstitions current in the Western world. Mr. Miura is of opinion that advanced Christians will gradually free themselves from the thralldom of what are known as orthodox views of Christianity. As regards the various churches that have been founded in this country, the strongest of them have been held together largely though the personal influence of strong-minded earnest men like Archbishop Nicolai, Rev. D. Ebina, Messrs

Uemura, Uchimura, Matsumura, and some others. The views held by the leaders of Christian thought in this country neither detract from nor add to the influence they exercise. It is strong personality that tells. The literary part of the Shin Tenchi is full of interesting matter which we have no space to notice here.

* * *

A writer in the Tokyo Mainichi Shinbun divides the history of the propagation of Christianity in Japan into four periods, emphasizing the manner in which the attitude of the Japanese people to Christianity underwent marked changes in each period. (1) There was the opening period lasting from 1867 to 1877 when churches were established at Nagasaki, Yokohama and Osaka. During this period the Japanese Christians were solely guided by the missionaries. In doctrine, in belief, in habits, and even in pleasures, they followed the lead of foreigners unreservedly. (2) During the next period (1877–1887) there was manifested everywhere strong opposition to the independence of Japanese churches. At the same time English and American Missionary Societies having agents in Japan took steps for amalgamation. There was much agitation against smoking, drinking and neglect to attend church services among young Christians. (3) The following period (1887–1897) witnessed great relaxation in the doctrines taught and the ethical theories held. The arguments against supernaturalism which had been attracting public attention for some time in the West had their exponents and defenders here. The works of Mill, Spencer and Darwin were eagerly read by Japanese scholars, and so Christian pastors found it no easy matter to get students to accept their teaching. Bitter controversy went on in every part of the country. Japanese who had been residing in foreign lands came back with the impression that the missionaries here were endeavouring to impose on the Japanese too severe a form of Christianity. In the West, said these men, Christians smoke and drink and keep away from Church as much as they please. Neither do they accept much of the teaching of the clergy on doctrinal points. Dissatisfaction was felt with prevailing sectarianism. (4) During the past 10 years the most remarkable features observable have been the union of sects, the struggle for independence, the thorough Japonicization of Christianity. So far has this gone that we find Bishop Awdry informing the English public that the day is not far distant when foreign missionaries will have to hand over the authority they now wield to native pastors and when, with the exception of a few teachers of Divinity in Colleges, they will all have to return to their native countries.*

* * *

It is earnestness and ability that tell. Doctrinal views do not matter much. This is the prevailing sentiment among the Japanese and to a considerable extent it is not otherwise with Europeans and Americans. There are in this country individual Christians who can believe what they choose, who can teach anything they like without the slightest risk of loss of influence, as it is their strong personality that attracts followers. Mr. Matsumura Kaiseki is one of these. He is recognised throughout Japan as a most sincere, scholarly Christian, who is prepared to follow whatever he believes to be the truth wherever it may lead him. Last May Mr. Matsumura started a new monthly Magazine called Michi. He has kindly forwarded to us the first six numbers of this new organ of Christian liberal thought, and we now proceed to give an account of its aims and of the literary support it has received. The objects Mr. Matsumura has in view in this new venture are thus stated in the first number:—"Why has the Michi been published? (1) To enable us to state our religious views. (2) To afford us an opportunity to explain the mysteries of certain psychological phenomena. (3) To serve as an organ for publishing the results of the higher criticism in its bearing on Christianity. (4) To answer the purpose of a harmonizer of Eastern and Western thought and civilisation." Mr. Matsumura aims at making the magazine a promoter of high culture of every kind. Its pages will be thrown open to writers of various schools. All that conduces to mental development and the spread of useful knowledge will be welcomed by the editor. In the opening pages of the first number Mr. Matsumura thus states his own convictions and views:—This is for Christianity an age of revolution. It resembles the time when, surrounded by idolaters, Abraham founded Judaism, or the time when Christ separated himself from the scholars and the hypocrites of his day and founded a new creed, or the days when as a result of numerous influences the great religious reformation of Europe took place. Changes no less important than any of these are going on in Japan to-day. At such a time as this one must have only one aim and one desire, that is to know the truth and to follow it implicitly. Strong faith alone will survive the assaults that have to be encountered. In this Magazine we intend to state our views. We may as well say at once that we are no believers in the miraculous birth of Christ, nor in St. Paul's teaching about the atonement of Christ as an expiation for original sin, nor in St. John's teaching about the logos, nor in the infallibility of the Bible: The Bible, we maintain, needs revision. (Kayelle seisho wo kaitō subeki mono to shuchō suru mono nari) But God the Father still exists. As penitents we can always go back to Him. The Holy Spirit is in our hearts, guiding us and comforting us and making us realize that we are the sons of God. We have consciences which teach us to cultivate virtue. We feel ourselves to be Christ's brethren. We love our neighbours. We believe ourselves to be immortal. Not only this life but the life to come is ours. This is our Christianity. To us this is the everlasting way, this is indestructible truth. On this rock have we erected our house and so we can laugh at the winds and the rain that beat upon us.

Up to the end of the nineteenth century the attention of the whole Western world was too exclusively given to material development and progress. The study of mind and its culture were neglected. But a reaction has now set in, and Psychological Societies are being formed in various parts of the world whose object it is to study mental phenomena of various kinds. With this movement we have strong sympathy and this Magazine will be utilized for recording the results of investigations made. As to the higher biblical criticism, all lovers of truth like ourselves must welcome it. We dislike dogma, old or new, and are in favour of open-mindedness. Christianity needs to be discussed from all points of view, from the scientific, historical and rationalistic standpoints. Thus will the superstitions that have attached themselves to it be got rid of; thus and thus only shall we find out what is and what is not of the essence of our creed. Let all that is destructible be destroyed. Then only shall we be able to make it plain to the world what there is in our creed that is absolutely indestructible. Some of the conclusions that have been reached by means of the higher criticism are stated in this number of the Magazine in the Rev. R. Minami's article on "St. Paul's teaching on the Atonement" and Dr. J. Takagi's article on "The Churches and Modern Thought."*

Now, as regards the blending of Eastern and Western thought, we believe what St. Paul said when speaking of men generally: "That which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them. . . . So that they are without excuse." If this be so, the God that was revealed in Christ was the God that was revealed in Socrates and in Confucius. Such men as Origen, Zwingle and Lessing were sufficiently discerning to perceive this and to lay stress on it, but in the history of the Christian Church the theologians who have comprehended the significance of this truth have always been few. At last in this 20th Century Western scholars are beginning to realize the fact that they have something to learn from Oriental thought. A scientific study of it is being advocated and carried on in various countries. At such a time as this Christians like ourselves who have inherited this thought from our ancestors are under an obligation to make it known to the Western world. Three articles in this first number of the Michi may be said to have this object in view. They are Mr. Z. Togawa's article on the relation of the old operatic songs and theatrical exhibitions to the Bushidō; Mr. A. Yamaji's article on "The Fusion of Eastern and Western Thought"; and an Exposition of the Chūyō.

Though special attention will be paid to the four points mentioned above, the Magazine will be devoted to the realization of other objects, such as the promotion of general culture, the publication of historical reports, biographies, and the like, talks on religion, comments on literature, art and poetry. Our aim will be to create a new world for young men which shall be free from the many evils attendant on the one in which they now live.

Protestants are to be congratulated on the starting of such a well edited and strongly supported magazine as the Michi. Among the most frequent contributors to the six numbers of the Michi before us we observe the names of Dr. J. Takagi; Rev. R. Minami; Rev. K. Hirai; Mr. A. Yamaji, and Mr. Z. Togawa, while articles from the pens of Viscount Watanabe, Mr. Shimada Saburō, Doctors Motora, Miyage, and Uaita appear occasionally. Advanced Christian thought among the Protestants of Japan is now expounded by three well edited magazines, the Rikugō Zasshi, the Shin Tenchi and the Michi and by one Weekly newspaper, the Kirisutokyo Sekai. The essentially conservative Protestant organs are the Gokyo (Methodist) the Fukuin Shimpō (Presbyterian) the N-chiyō Sōshi (Episcopalian) and to a certain extent the Christian Weekly News (Episcopalian). Both the Koe (Roman Catholic) and the Seikyō Shimpō (Greek Church) constantly discuss rationalistic views on Christianity while defending the position taken by the orthodox churches. They both advocate progress and development within prescribed limits. Dr. Takagi in three articles contributed to the Michi gives a good account of the attitude of modern thought to orthodox Christianity and notes the various doctrinal changes which modern thought has been the means of bringing about within the pale of the Christian Church. The modern world, says Dr. Takagi, rightly attaches little importance to the question was Christ God or was He not? It is enough for them to know that He was a perfect type of man.

The Rev. R. Minami's discussion of St. Paul's views is very scholarly and thorough, showing acquaintance with the writings of the advanced school of Biblical Critics who have contributed articles to the Encyclopædia Biblica on this subject.* Mr. Matsumura and his fellow-thinkers are of opinion that the greatest publicity should be given to scholarly criticism of the Bible. They will be quite content with the minimum of truth that remains after destructive criticism has swept away all that is capable of being swept away. There is an honest ring about the writing in the Michi which will certainly commend the Magazine to all searchers for truth in this country.

The efforts now being made by Japanese scholars to revive interest in Confucianism have naturally attracted the attention of Christian writers. Having failed to find among Western ethical systems any better basis for ethics than Confucianism provides, it would seem as though quite a number of Japanese scholars were regarding the hitherto slighted Confucian teaching with a new interest. The creed which has been allowed to rust in secluded parts of the national life for many decades is now being burnished up afresh and is presented to the public as a treasure whose real value has not till now been generally known. The Kirisutokyo Sekai in discussing this question pertinently asks whether it is possible in this age to put new life into an old moral creed like Confucianism. If it can be done at all, there is only one way in which it can be effected, says the Kirisutokyo Sekai. It must be expounded and carried into practice by men of powerful personality. Had it not been for such men as Tōjō, Jinsai and Sorai, would Confucianism in Japan ever have taken such a strong hold on the Japanese mind as it did in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries of our era? At that time the study of Confucianism was regarded as a part of necessary culture. The light in which the Confucian creed was portrayed by the famous teachers of those days imparted to it a new charm. Can this be repeated to-day? There are among those who advocate a new study of Confucianism as a means of moral culture a few Christians. Will the new life that it is sought to impart to an old creed come to it through a Christian source? This is an interesting question which must remain undetermined for a while.

The Rev. T. Miyagawa in an article published in the Oct. 15th number of the Kirisutokyo Sekai argues that Christianity alone will furnish Japan with a new basis of ethics. Nothing could be more optimistic than the tone of this article. "I believe," says Mr. Miyagawa, "that 50 years hence our Christianity will control the minds of high and low and form the standard of morals throughout the whole country." The attempted revival of Confucianism Mr. Miyagawa regards as a meaningless movement that will effect nothing lasting.

The Kumiai Kyōkai was to hold its 24th Annual Conference on Oct. 26th. The reports to be read are pronounced by the Kirisutokyo Sekai to be gratifying, especially those bearing on the efforts of certain churches to render themselves entirely self-supporting. In an article entitled "A Perusal of the Records of the Nara Conference 14 years ago" the Kirisutokyo Sekai reviews the history of the Congregational Churches since they issued at that Conference a special declaration bearing on doctrine and organization. On doctrinal questions the paper thinks there is not so much difference of opinion as there used to be. The state of independence which the Church has reached was hardly dreamt of 14 years ago. The seventy odd pastors who belong to this Church can not but feel encouraged by what has been achieved in the period under review.

In the Nihon oyobi Nipponjin, edited by Dr. Miyage, Dr. J. Takagi writes thus in praise of Japanese women. Japanese women are not without their defects, but in the possession of three important qualities they certainly are not surpassed by any women in the world. (1) They are gentle, submissive, amiable and refined. These are essentially womanly qualities. Compared with the masculine women to be met with in America, our women seem deficient. But for a woman to possess in a full degree the very finest of womanly qualities is not only in accordance with nature; it entitles her to universal respect and honour. These qualities our Japanese women will do well to retain inviolate. (2) They possess great strength of will. It is said that women generally are creatures of emotion, that they are swayed to and fro by feeling. Though no doubt they possess this characteristic to a certain extent, it is kept in check by our women by an iron will. Whereas American women married to Naval officers follow or precede their husbands around the world, in order to spend a few weeks in their company, our Japanese wives are content to live for years apart from their husbands, and they do it without displaying the shadow of disloyalty to these husbands. It is the chastity and faithfulness of wives in this country that enable married students to leave their wives and children behind when they go away for three or four years' study in a foreign land. This chastity of our women is something marvellous. It is something of which the Japanese woman may be justly proud* and which she will do well to preserve to all time. (3) The spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion is very strong among our women.—Our literature is full of illustrations of this fact, of stories about the devotion of wives to husbands and daughters to parents. Instead of trying to preserve the three noble traits in the character of the Japanese woman mentioned above, there are educationists in this country who do nothing but hold up Western feminine models for imitation among our girls. To make the Japanese woman a facsimile of the European or American woman would remove her from the high pedestal she has hitherto occupied. Instead of ennobling her, it would degrade her. Who can be so blind as not to see the dangers attending modern female education as carried on in certain schools?

"Can science become a substitute for Religion?" is a question discussed by the October Koe somewhat as follows:—In this country as well as in the West an erroneous notion is entertained respecting the bearing of intellectual development on moral culture. There are people who tell us that virtue comes with knowledge, that ignorance is the cause of the greater part of existing wickedness. Fill the mind with knowledge, say these people, and you will make men good. Develop the intellect and all else will follow. So, according to this theory, instead of ministers of religion, we should have more school teachers. It is not religion but science that is best fitted to develop man's moral nature. Now no great discernment is required to perceive the fallacy of this theory. In a great many cases the development of the intellect neither affects man's emotions nor his will. What bearing on man's life and conduct have Mathematics, Geography or Chemistry? Man's intellectual faculties are undoubtedly greatly benefited by the study of a number of learned subjects, but these subjects have no direct bearing on his moral nature. There are hundreds of good people who are profoundly ignorant and thousands of well educated people who are living wicked lives. That general knowledge of itself conduces to virtuous living has never been proved and is incapable of proof. Herbert Spencer once said that though we are so proud of our science it could never act the part of a guide in life. Despite all our discoveries connected with the material world, the darkness by which our hearts are enshrouded remains unbroken, said Spencer. Belief in the all-sufficiency of science is comparatively modern. Science has of course always existed, but it is only in recent times that its votaries have exalted it to the rank of a universal panacea for the ills of mankind. But it is not by all scientists by any means that so much is claimed for science. There are not a few who readily admit that neither integrity, benevolence, sincerity, friendship, loyalty nor affection is the product of science; that it is not to the physical world nor to its laws that we must turn when we seek for moral guidance. Our object in writing this article is not to depreciate science, in whose development we take the greatest interest and from which we, like other people, expect great things, but simply to point out that while serving as a proof of high intellectual development, it can never take the place of those other agencies which are specially adapted to the full development of man's moral nature.

Writing on the relation of Christianity to Socialism, the Kirisutokyo Shūhō (Protestant Episcopal) maintains that they are fundamentally opposed to each other. Here is the substance of what is said on this subject. In that both Christianity and Socialism make it their object to succour the weak, to relieve poverty, to increase human happiness by improving the conditions subject to which men pass their lives, some people are of opinion that they are in strong sympathy with each other, but this is by no means the case. If Christians and Socialists agree as to the objects to be realized, they differ essentially as to the means to be employed for their realization. Moreover, they differ in toto in belief. One of the leading Socialists of America a little time ago, according to the Socialist Daily News, made the following statement:—"Nearly all the leading Socialists in the world to day are materialists and atheists. If Socialism be pushed to its logical conclusions, it is bound to come to this. But if all Socialists were to be told that it is to ultra-materialism and atheism that our principles lead they would be alarmed and bewildered, so it is better not to speak too openly on this subject." How then can it be asserted that there is any affinity between Christianity and Socialism? But it is not only in views that Christians and Socialists are found in opposite camps, they differ fundamentally as to the character of the highest human happiness. More material comforts and pleasures, more of this world's riches—these are the things for which Socialism is working. For the spiritual benefits which Christianity seeks to confer on mankind Socialists have no liking. Their Kingdom is of this world, whereas that of the Christian is of the world to come. These considerations suffice to show that Christianity and modern Socialism are quite irreconcilable.

* The same thing takes place in Europe and America. Loyalty to absent husbands is not universal either in the West or in Japan. But it is perhaps a fact that cases of disloyalty are far more frequent in the West than they are in Japan for various reasons.—(WRITER OF SUNMARY)

Mr. Saji Jitsuen, the editor of the Rikugō Zasshi, was formerly a Buddhist priest and so in the Sunday lectures he frequently delivers at the Unitarian Hall in Tōkyō he constantly compares Buddhism and Christianity and impresses upon his hearers the importance of their treating both creeds alike, obtaining all the enlightenment that they afford to open-minded inquirers. In the Rikugō Zasshi for some months past Mr. Saji has been defining the position that Unitarians hold in Japan. In the September number there is an article of his entitled "The Daily Life of a Unitarian" which contains the following remarks:—"If the honest truth is to be spoken, there is no doubt that the majority of religious people the world over run to extremes. They are different from ordinary folks and they make a point of acting somewhat strangely in order to draw public attention to themselves. Unitarians dislike this and endeavour to avoid it. They only wish to be known as perfect gentlemen and ladies, and as nothing more. Anything approaching fanaticism is regarded with aversion by them. Seeing this, people reproach Unitarians for their supposed lack of religious zeal. "Unitarianism is not a religion at all," say some. "Unitarians are merely investigators and moralists." Unitarians are rather proud of being so described. When they see how both morality and religion are injured by the extremes to which men go in expounding them, and how many abnormal types of humanity are produced by fanatical teaching, they realize the necessity of moderation in all things. The teaching of Unitarians is that instead of men entering an outward Kingdom of Heaven, the Kingdom of Heaven is set up in their hearts. They believe that at the back of and as the source of all phenomena there is the Absolute, which men call God. With this Absolute we believe we can commune, says Mr. Saji. We, like other phenomena, were called into existence by the Absolute. We are placed under a whole set of unchangeable laws. These we cheerfully obey, with the conviction that we form a part of the great plan of the universe. Mr. Saji's article is very long, but the gist of it is that the ideal Unitarian is a man of high culture, whose heart beats in sympathy with his fellow-men and who finds in the ordinary tasks of everyday life plenty of opportunities for exercising an elevating influence on those with whom he associates. The eccentricities, prejudices and blind fanaticism of many religious votaries he most carefully avoids, and herein lies his strength.

"The aeroplane of the future" says Mr. Stead in the Review of Reviews for October, "has not yet been built." One would have thought this was one of the things that go without saying.

NEWSPAPER WRITING AND PUBLIC OPINION.

How many people are there in any country who refuse to be guided in forming opinions by what they read in newspapers? Very few, I take it. Yet the highly cultured few who regard the ordinary newspaper scribbler with supreme contempt are in many cases the only people who can distinguish between truth and error on any of the numerous subjects traversed by journalists. In an article recently published in the Hibbert Journal entitled "Civilization in Danger" René L. Gerard writes:—

For the great majority of modern men, if we except certain professional occupations, the daily paper is doubtless a kind of food easily digested by the mind, but of inferior nutritive power.

Newspapers are indeed commercial enterprises first and foremost. Their success depends on pleasing the crowd, and to please the crowd you must needs put yourself at its level, which is of course the level of mediocrity. It follows that the newspaper, outside of the general news which it is intended to spread, is frequently a deplorable display of banality if not of stupidity. The editor keeps an open shop for convenient impersonal opinions which will agree with everybody and be accepted without shock or effort by minds so seemingly different as that of a working man, of a university graduate, or of a landed proprietor. The newspaper plays in the world of ideas a part analogous to that of a great ready-made clothing establishment in the world of material things. Just as garments, boots, and hats are turned out in tens of thousands of uniformly repeated copies for the nameless crowd, so the Press is an industry for manufacturing opinions all complete at the average measure of the brains for which it works."

So great is the twisting and general manipulation of facts that are carried on by the newspapers that it is extremely difficult in many cases to find out what is the real truth. It is especially so in all international questions, in which it often happens that all the leading newspapers in one country maintain opinions diametrically opposed to those held in another country. The general public displays an enormous amount of denseness in the matter of understanding the point of view of people whose opinions are opposed to their own. To cite a recent instance of this, the majority of Americans fail to understand the English view of sport, which is that fairness in conduct is the greater part of victory. The American newspaper editors showed by their remarks on the Olympic Games that they did not understand even the meaning of the word fairness to sportsmen in England. The Englishman says, "Winning is nothing in itself unless one wins under certain prescribed conditions. These conditions must not favour either of the opponents. Their equipment and chances of success must be rendered absolutely equal as far as this can be done. The contest must be one of skill or proficiency only." But the American sportsman argues "All is fair in games, as in war. Not only must my opponent exceed me in skill if he means to win, he must also frustrate all the devices I have in contemplation for preventing him from bringing his skill into play." And so an American runner will trip up his opponent or elbow him out of his course if he can, as though he were playing football. This is evidently allowed in the States, but in England it is considered shameful. Hence the big hubbub at the London Olympic Games. Now the philosophical view to take of the whole affair is just this. In international contests it is absolutely necessary that all competitors should understand and agree to follow the rules and conditions on which the decisions of the umpires in every case are based. This is just what they did not do when the Olympic Games were held. The English umpires followed implicitly their own standard in sport, with the result that almost all foreign countries accused them of partiality. Even a well-informed paper like the Figaro asserted that the disqualification of Dorando in the Marathon race was arranged partly to give a sop to the Americans, and partly to secure the supremacy of the Anglo-Saxon over the Latin races. It is easy to see that decisions like these result from the deep suspicion with which nations usually regard each other. The world is full of trickery, lying, hypocrisy, make-believes, subterfuges, and the like. Things are not what they seem. So rival nations and rival races are only too ready to mistrust each other, and the newspapers make capital out of this mistrust. They keep the world in a perpetual state of turmoil and strife by publishing all the reports and even vague rumours they can collect or manufacture out of whole cloth that are calculated to stir up hostile race feeling and national feeling. It is a pitiable spectacle in this twentieth century amid so much that is enlightened and refined.

Now take the people among whom we are living. Is it possible for any intelligent European or American to understand them aright if he allows himself to be guided by the English newspapers published in this country only? Certainly not. The foreign communities in Japan are all small, and it is astonishing that they should be able to succeed in keeping so many papers going. In order to obtain subscribers the newspapers have to be constantly stating their opinions. On what are the opinions of foreign newspaper readers based? Sometimes on knowledge, but more often on ignorance. What are the opportunities that the hard worked foreign business man of Japan has for getting to know the Japanese? He seldom understands their colloquial language thoroughly, and is hardly ever able to read their books or magazines. At the port where he resides he meets the same class of people year in and year out, and his opinion of the whole nation is based on the words and actions of the inferior set of Japanese whom he meets. But nevertheless he is very confident that he is right in his general estimate of the moral standard of the Japanese people. The foreign newspaper editor is usually no better situated than his readers for finding out the real truth on Japanese subjects. Anyhow, he has to make his paper pay somehow or other, and there is only one way of doing that, which is to keep repeating sentiments that are known to be strongly held by his subscribers. The result is that readers seldom get to know the real truth on any subject. Writers on Japan and the Japanese may be roughly divided into two classes—pro-Japanese and anti-Japanese. To impartial readers the former unduly praise and the latter unduly blame the Japanese. There are a few common-sense people who neither regard the Japanese as prodigies nor as idiots, but as ordinary human beings who have made the best of their opportunities, surroundings and racial proclivities. They have progressed rapidly, but not so rapidly as many people imagine. They are clever, but not so clever as they are often represented to be. Like all other nations they have their strong points and their weak points, their ornaments and their disfigurements. They have never claimed for themselves one tenth of the merits others have attributed to them.

A thoughtful writer in the Yorozu Choho who signs himself Hakuyo says:—

Since the Russo-Japan war Japan has suffered much from European and American Japanese megalomania. There are indications that this megalomania is abating. It could never have prevailed so widely had it not been for the ignorance of the foreign public. But it is important to point out, that it has not only done mischief in the West, it has misled many of our own people and induced them to assume a certain superiority to Western nations which their attainments do not in the least warrant their assuming. Not a few Japanese who have returned from Europe have represented our customs, morality and ways as superior to those of Europe and America, and in proof of their assertions have dwelt on the darker side of Western life, forgetting that we too have a dark side of life, and oblivious to the fact that people who live in glass houses can't afford to throw stones. Because in our war with a European Power our soldiers won victory after victory it has been assumed by some silly people that we are superior to Europeans and Americans in morality, in religion, in education, in almost everything. People talk glibly about the new self-consciousness of the nation. Is success in an adequate basis on which to found general conclusions as to our superiority to Western nations in the way that many writers have done? The truth is that if every part of western life be compared with every part of our Japanese life, instead of reaching the conclusion that we are ahead of the West, a well informed Japanese will readily admit that we are behind it. Nothing could be unfairer then to draw a comparison between the bright side of Japanese life and the dark side of European and American life, as some newspaper writers habitually do. On the whole Occidentals keep up a higher standard than we do. In the majority of their newspapers there are no such scandalous reports, insinuations and suggestions published as are habitually to be found on the third page of many of our popular newspapers. The question arises, are the scribblers in our newspapers qualified to compare Japanese and foreign life, customs and ways? I think not, as they either have a most imperfect acquaintance with Western thought and life or they are too vain to admit the many defects that disfigure the lives of their fellow-countrymen. With the new self-consciousness of the nation I have no sympathy. Japan will do well to go back to her old modest self. Self-depreciation is a healthier state than the self-glorification in which some of us are indulging. Civilised nations all have ideals which they never reach. The good and the bad are found together everywhere. We are not worse than other nations in many particulars, but neither are we better. The notion that the war proved that we possess a civilisation superior to that of Europe is a chimera which the sooner we dismiss from our minds the better.

The tone adopted in the above article is by no means rare among high-class Japanese. It is a tone that is habitual among well-balanced statesmen, scholars and first-class journalists. But the truth is that the majority of people in this country are quite dependent on their newspapers for accounts of foreign countries, and much of the information given is decidedly misleading and one-sided. So that here as elsewhere the public opinion that is guided by the press is almost sure to be biased and misinformed. We reach the conclusion then that neither the Japanese press nor the foreign press in Japan is to be implicitly relied on as an exponent of certain subjects. The amount of bias displayed in newspaper writing generally is very great the world over, and it is questionable whether it is worth the while of any earnest advanced student of human life and human affairs to spend many hours in the week in perusing any but the very best newspapers the world has produced. The newspaper is too often merely the organ of mediocrity. Readers who want something better than that must go elsewhere to procure it.

THE DEPARTURE OF THE AMERICAN FLEET

With a view to bidding farewell to the American officers and bluejackets, a large number of Yokohama citizens organized a lantern procession by water on the evening of Oct. 24th. Under the control of Mr. Yabe, an official of the Harbour Office, they proceeded, in about a hundred boats, to the anchorage of the American and Japanese warships and traversed the lines. Meanwhile many handsome fire-works were displayed from the breakwater and from the Customs grounds. The Bund and other places from which a good view could be obtained were thronged.

The Fleet got under way at 8 a.m. sharp. The wind was from the north, and as the ships headed in that direction the flagship Connecticut, which was the first to move, forged past her buoy and passing the Louisiana, flagship of the northern division, turned and glided out into the bay to windward of the latter. She was followed by the various vessels of her division and as each turned practically in its predecessor's wake, just off the harbour entrance, the spectacle was very fine. When the second division headed by the Louisiana moved out, the view was greatly obscured by smoke and haze.

The Kashima, Katori, Tsukuba and Izuma escorted the American warships outside the Bay where signals expressing sincere cordiality were exchanged between the Japanese and their departing visitors.

Prior to their departure the squadron was divided into the first and second divisions. The second will proceed to Amoy, where it is expected to arrive on Oct. 29th, and will leave on Nov. 4th. It will visit Manila on Nov. 7th on its way home. The first division will proceed direct to Manila arriving there about Oct. 31st. Off that port manoeuvres will be held in which all the battleships will participate. About the beginning of December the fleet will leave Manila for Hampton Roads via Suez.

Prior to his departure from Yokohama, Rear-Admiral C. S. Sperry, commanding the American Battleship Fleet, presented the following acknowledgment to Mr. N. Mitsuhashi, Mayor of Yokohama:—

Sir,—I. On behalf of the officers and men of the United States Atlantic Fleet, I desire to express to you and the people of Yokohama our deep appreciation of the many courtesies extended to us during our visit to your port.

2. The cordial good feeling shown on every hand, the open hospitality accorded us, and the unvarying courtesy on the part of everyone with whom we have come in contact, have impressed us with the perfect good will of the people of Japan, and there is no doubt that the old ties of friendship between our two nations will be greatly strengthened and perpetuated by these new evidences of sympathy and understanding.

3. Our visit has been all too short, and we regret that we can not see more of your country and meet more of your people.

4. With best wishes for the health, prosperity and happiness of yourself and the people of your city, I have the honour to be,

Very sincerely yours,

C. S. SPERRY,

Rear Admiral U. S. Navy,
Commander-in-Chief,
United States Atlantic Fleet.

THE LAUNCHING OF THE BRAZILIAN BATTLESHIP "MINAS GERAES."

On the occasion of the launching in Newcastle on Tyne of the powerful Brazilian Dreadnought, the Minas Geraes, the Brazilian Minister in London, Mr. Regis de Oliveira, delivered a speech which has been published by the French newspapers.

There was so much talk about the sale of the three Brazilian Dreadnoughts to other Powers, that we think it opportune to reproduce here the diplomatist's words, which once more throw light upon the rumour.

"This ceremony," said the Minister, "does not mean only the baptism of a battleship: it symbolises one of the highest aspirations of a country longing to resume her former position in the world."

"We know that all countries want a strong navy, as an element of civilisation, peace and progress, following the example of Great Britain, whose powerful navy has led civilisation into every corner of the world."

"Brazil should revive the glorious traditions of her navy and could not give up the hegemony in South America, to which for every reason she has the right."

"To be strong does not mean to fight. The strongest people co-operate in maintaining the peace of the world. Thus think the Brazilian people as well as the honourable Governments that undertook the reorganisation of the national navy."

"We sincerely hope that this superb and invincible Minus Geraes which all of us saw yesterday gliding majestically over the waters of the Tyne, may sail calmly on, accomplishing her great and poetical mission of peace, of love and of liberty."

"We hope that the Ocean may spare her from its rage since men cannot avail anything against her."

"Ladies and gentlemen: I beg to propose a toast in honour of our Navy that within two years will be strengthened with these powerful weapons of war, hoisting our national colours, in spite of the stories about the malevolent intent of Brazil spread abroad so often, and as often energetically denied."

"Let us state once more that the battleships are for Brazil. We wonder why is there any surprise that a country like ours should want a navy composed of modern, strong and powerful ships, when everybody knows her resources, the long extent of her coast, the development of her people and the importance of emigration to her fields, where room can be found for all sorts of activity and accumulation of wealth."

THE INFLUENCE OF ENGLISH THOUGHT ON THE FRENCH MIND.

A recent number of the Fortnightly Review contains an interesting article on this subject contributed by Yves Guyot. It called forth a lecture from the late Professor Churton Collins on "The influence of French Thought on the English Mind." I only propose to give the gist of M. Guyot's article here, reserving Professor Collins' lecture for a future occasion. In the development of national thought the effect of foreign literature in all civilised countries has always been very marked. We see in this country what wonders English, French and German books have accomplished in moulding an entirely new type of mind among the Japanese. In Europe perhaps no two nations have benefited so much by intellectual intercourse with each other by means of literature as the French and the English. And, curious enough, this intercourse went on without interruption at the end of the seventeenth century and up to 1815 during periods of war. Prior to the end of the seventeenth century there was little intellectual intercourse between the two nations. The French seemed to have despised English prior to that time. In 1665 the Journal des Savants could not give an account of the proceedings of the Royal Society of London through lack of a contributor knowing English; and Le Clerc wrote: "The English have many good works; it is a pity that the authors of that country should only write in their own tongue." Bacon's Essays, Hobbes' works and a few works on fiction, however, had been translated prior to this date. The influence of English thought on French literature began with the French Protestants, some eighty thousand of whom, in consequence of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685 took refuge in England. Among these there were people of energetic character and strong conviction, who after becoming acquainted with English ideas laboured hard to make them known in France. Thus it came about that French translations of the works of Locke, Addison, Pope, Daniel Defoe, Swift and Steele were published. At the beginning of the eighteenth century Amand de la Chapelle, Le Clerc, Basnage de Beauval and De la Roche all wrote much on English literature. The Abbé Prévost laboured hard to render Frenchmen familiar with English ways, institutions, science and art. In his Mémoires d'un Homme de qualité Prévost says:—"There is no country where one finds so much straightforwardness, so much humane feeling, such just standards of honour, wisdom and happiness as among the English." Prior to Voltaire's time there were other Frenchmen who acted as intermediaries between the illustrious men of England and the Continent, but Voltaire's enforced residence in England for two years and eight months led to the production of that brilliant work known as "Philosophical Letters," in which this great writer in a summary of 200 pages places before his fellow-countrymen in a most masterly manner some of the finest thoughts of Bacon, Locke, Newton, Shakespeare, Milton and Pope. Voltaire acknowledges the inspiration he received from Shakespeare. In a letter to Helvetius written long after his stay in England, Voltaire said:—"We have gained from the English their sinking-furds, the building and working of vessels, power of attraction, differential-calculus, the seven primary colours, inoculation, we shall insensibly take their noble freedom of thought and their profound disdain for all scholastic twaddle." As Lord Byron remarked of Voltaire:—"There is not another writer to whom the authors of England owe so much for the spread of their fame in France, and through France, in Europe."
